In Her Newest Special Attraction,

A REAL and intimate view of a life of which your audiences know only one side. Not alone a picture of the glamour of the footlights, but one that gives you the real inside—a close-up of the fiery jealousy, the sly intrigues, the human side of all that goes to make up life on the stage, not forgetting the tired business man who suddenly spies a pretty new face among the dainty sprites who dance and sing.

A PICTURE in which Mary MacLaren's charming youth, innocence and beauty stand out in delightful relief against a background of very understandable passions—the hard-to-forget drama of a young girl whose finer instincts made her finally rebel against her carefully calculated plans for success at another's expense. See it—show it—they'll like it. It's a bit of real life.

“Rare Appeal”

SAYS

Moving Picture World

“THE subject is one that will never be forgotten by anyone who has seen it. The story written by Mr. Kyne is worthy of a place with the western classics of Bret Harte and the director (Jack Ford) has caught in splendid style the wonderful atmosphere and profound pathos of the original. It is a tale filled with sublime moments.’

“The prison scenes are well done with great realism. A large cast of men appear as the convicts and the escape is accomplished in a way that is at once exciting and convincing.”

“Star very Pleasing”

Motion Picture Journal

“HERE is a picture which you can tell your people is good, and be safe in making the promise. It is an adaptation of “The Three Godfathers,” and the director has caught the author’s idea and made a very worth-while presentation.”

A SPECIAL ATTRACTION DRIVE

THE Jewel Drive was such a huge success in every way that it was decided to have one for Special Attractions. So this week you may expect to be told by the Universal salesman just why you should show the stars who appear in the Universal Special Attraction features. You see we are taking you right into our confidence. The cards are all on the table and the Universal has never made a practice of keeping cards up its sleeve. We proved the efficacy of concentration in our Jewel Drive. If it was good for Jewels, it should be good for Special Attractions.

Last week we promised a solution of the S. R. O. 12 teasers that appeared in various places in "The Moving Picture Weekly." The initials mean joy to every showman and to those who do not pretend to be showmen it is almost needless to say that the initials mean "Standing Room Only." We have chosen that name for the new series of twelve special attractions. The Big 12 and The Big Money 12 have already become household words and indicators of excellence throughout the country. We see no reason why these two weeks should not see a wonderful profit to all exhibitors who can arrange to book the features which comprise these two series.

The S. R. O. 12 are even better and for your information, the names of the features and the stars in them are announced:

THE province of the Moving Picture Weekly is to be as helpful as possible to the exhibitor of moving pictures. We welcome suggestions as to the best manner in which we can be most helpful. An exhibitor made a suggestion recently which we intend to adopt because it is in line with our mission of helpfulness. An exhibitor asked for information in regard to engaging an orchestra for his new theatre. He was a new exhibitor and he naturally wanted to run Universal pictures. He wanted to know how large an orchestra to use in his house and what instruments it should consist of. This is a question which is usually one to be decided by local conditions, but we satisfied him so well that he suggested we make the offer to any exhibitor to help him out in the many problems that confront all exhibitors no matter how much experience they may have had.

So we have decided to do just that. We have asked the music authorities who are putting out our excellent music cue sheets to be responsible for the information which we give in answer to inquiries and when such information is of such a general nature as to be useful to any number of exhibitors or musical directors or piano players we will publish it in the columns of the Weekly.

OUR cue sheets are printed in the press sheets that we publish with every feature that we release. They have given Universal satisfaction. It is impossible in the limited space allowed to give anything but the cues, however. There might be profitably written a story about each photoplay and its musical significance.

Public Notice To C

No. 256 Straight from the Shoulder Talk, by Carl Laemmle, President, Universal Film Manufacturing Company

HEREAFTER when you try to induce artists under contract with the Universal to break their contracts, I shall call you by name. I shall dangle you up before the eyes of the exhibitors of the world and show that these dishonest practices of yours are the direct cause of the frightful increase in the cost of making pictures.

Some of you are now trying to get Mr. Erich von Stroheim because his picture, "Blind Husbands," proves that he is the greatest discovery in years in the matter of directors; and because you have heard that his second picture, "The Devil's Passkey," is even a greater triumph. Unfortunately for you, von Stroheim comes of good old stock and your money and your wiles cannot tempt him from the path of honor.

When Mr. von Stroheim was untried and unknown as a director, why didn't you gamble on him, as the Universal did? Why didn't you have vision enough to see that he had the makings of a great director? Failing to do this, why do you now hang over him like vultures seeking to grab him by hook or crook, with the accent on the crook?

Have you no sense of decency or honor? Don't you know that any profit you might make by causing another man to violate his written word of honor is polluted profit, tainted money which is unfit to spend on your wives and your children? Don't you know that star-stealing or even attempted star-stealing is a specie of pimping which is loathsome in the eyes of civilized men and women?

I serve notice on you here and now that Erich von Stroheim is under contract with the Universal for years to come. And so is Priscilla Dean, whose great production soon to be released will make your smirking mouths water with desire to smash her contract. And so is Harry Carey. And so are Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Marie Walcamp, Eddie Polo, Edith Roberts, Frank Mayo, Tod Browning, Rollin Sturgeon, Jack Ford, Allen Holubar, Dorothy Phillips and Robert Andersen.

Do you imagine that by hiding behind "agents" and fake corporations you can still violate all principle and all honor and continue to get away with it unharmed?

rooked Producers:

Do you imagine that because the Universal has been long suffering in the past and has never considered any star worth fighting for when that star developed a sense of dishonor, that we will continue to let you pick our pockets hereafter?

Let this sink into your consciousness:—The Universal has engaged counsel at both coasts to prosecute to the fullest limit of the law any one of you who hereafter befouls the moving picture business by trying to continue your rotten dealings of the past. We intend to exercise our rights at any cost and without a let-up. We will not confine ourselves to enforcing contracts with individuals, but we will punish, as much as the law permits, any crooked agent or corporation who tries to induce any artist to jump a contract with us.

You, and the exhibitors who support you, are directly to blame for the present frightful costs of making pictures. Drunk with easy money, you have tried to use the power of that money to corrupt or dissatisfy artist after artist who had none but honorable intentions and the best of good faith until you came along with your almost irresistible bribes.

You are not going to get away with it any longer. I am going to turn the spotlight on your activities every time those activities are crooked. I am going to frizzle you on the grill of redhot public opinion. I am going to use the one weapon that you are afraid of —The Truth!

This is my final warning. I will not write you any more polite private letters asking you to let our artists alone. As fast as I get the goods on you I will address you publicly and fight the matter out before the eyes of the exhibitors as well as before the courts.

I have tried working with you in National Associations and have found they are not worth a tinker's dam. I have tried every way I can think of to induce you to play the game with the cards on the table. But you don't know how. You used marked cards and you deal from the bottom of the deck!

Crooks of the world, which one of you will be first to take me on!

The Promise an

¶ Nearly two years ago—on April 13th, 1918, to be specific—Universal announced the forthcoming production of a series of remarkable photoplays to be known as "UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS."

¶ We said at that time that we would give the exhibitors of the country the very finest pictures that could be made. We said this because we knew—that we had the plays, the players, the directors, the stages, the knowledge, the experience and the money.

¶ What we promised was that these Universal Special Attractions should be consistently good—that they would maintain a higher average than any other productions ever put on the market.

¶ True to the persistent policy of Universal in producing plays of the highest standard at a price at which you, the Exhibitor, can make a profit we put our real money in these Universal Special Attractions into the Story, the Direction, the Staging—the hundred-and-one things that go to make a picture beautiful as a whole—and by sticking to this policy we purposed to give you a series of productions that would yield you more as a series than any other pictures had ever done before.

¶ That was the idea—the plan behind Universal Special Attractions. Now let us see how it has worked out—and what the future holds. Read the record on the other page.

Universal

SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

d The Fulfillment

¶ If you have consistently played Universal Special Attractions during these two years of wonderful accomplishment you know, without our telling you, that we have made more than good in every detail of the promise made you back in 1918.

¶ You have seen the stars of this series furnish two of the screen's greatest sensations—Dorothy Phillip and Priscilla Dean—now known to every exhibitor as box-office attractions of the first magnitude.

¶ You have seen Universal Special Attractions precede the public demand with precisely the kind of stories that the times demanded—and you have seen the Photography, the Direction, the Staging of these stories defined to a point which left nothing to be desired.

¶ You have watched the rise of Mary MacLaren, Harry Carey, Monroe Salisbury, Fritzi Brunette, Kenneth Harlan, Edith Roberts, Frank Mayo, Francelia Billington, James J. Corbett and others too numerous to mention.

¶ You—who have made a bigger net out of these consistently-best pictures known as Universal Special Attractions than out of any other productions ever offered you—be assured from the records of the past that the future holds even greater profits for you in dollars and in patron satisfaction.

Six Feet of

"IT'S one great, big relief," says an Exhibitor, "to see a real man play a real man's part at last. I'm sick and tired of 'chocolate eclairs' for male leads—I want red blood—yes—but I also want a man who can act."

THAT'S MAYO. Six feet of real man, but also a splendidly finished actor—born of stage family, trained and experienced in the art as very few are trained and experienced, yet able and willing to take a punch in order to put one over. See him handle his canoe and fight the "gang" in 'THE BRUTE BREAKER' and you'll see one side of him—watch his sentiment in "LASCA" with Edith Roberts and you'll have the other. Publicity for "The Forged Bride"

THE HERALD

PEGGY would have been supremely happy had it not been for her father. He was in the penitentiary. Bill Butters was the cleverest man with the forger's pen in police history.

Peggy tended a soft-drink stand in a beach resort. Among her college-boy patrons was Dick Van Courtland. Dick's estate was managed by Judge Clark Farrell. Dick married Peggy and took her to his palatial home. There as a house-guest was Clara Ramerez, a vampire. Clara coveted Dick for his money and tried to undermine Peggy.

As she stepped into the room to greet the family she saw Judge Farrell. It was he who had leaned down from his judicial bench to sentence Peggy's father to the grim old prison that brooded on the hill behind Dick's mansion.

What did Peggy do?

She did what one girl in a million would have done.

Go to the ———— Theatre tonight and see the solution of this strange problem that confronted the beautiful Peggy and the dashing Dick Van Courtland.

Mary MacLaren, the American Beauty of the Screen, is starring in this production which is called "The Forged Bride." She is supported by a cast of famous players including Barney Sherry as "Judge Farrell," Harold A. Miller, as "Dick Van Courtland," Thomas Jefferson as "Bill Butters" and the beautiful Dagmar Godowsky as "Clara Ramerez."

Thomas Jefferson in "The Forged Bride"

THERE is scarcely a person in America who has ever attended a theatre who does not know the name of Joseph Jefferson. Although this beloved actor has been dead for a number of years, there are millions of theatregoers in this country who will recall his performance of "Rip Van Winkle" as the most wonderful stage presentation of a lifetime.

Thomas Jefferson, the son of the famous Joseph Jefferson, was brought up in the company of his distinguished father, and naturally fell heir to the great roles made renowned by the elder Jefferson. Jefferson, Jr., starred in such stage productions as "Rip Van Winkle," "Lend Me Five Shillings," "The Rivals" and other classics and made a niche for himself in the Hall of Fame of American players.

But like most all other fine actors, Thomas Jefferson heard the call of the silent drama and became a convert to the screen. Several producers have been fortunate in securing his services for character roles that required skillful delineation, and the most recent of these has been Universal, which was able to engage Thomas Jefferson for the part of Old Bill Butters, the notorious forger in "The Forged Bride," whose magic pen signs away his daughter's name and at the same time wins her an opportunity for happiness.

The role of the skillful penman is one of the most important parts in the Universal production, "The Forged Bride," starring Mary MacLaren, which will be shown at the ———— Theatre next ————. It requires acting of the highest, for on the acting of this character depends the tremendous punch which brings the story to its climax. Naturally Thomas Jefferson may be depended upon to give the exquisite performance of the role that it demands.

Mary MacLaren in "The Forged Bride"

WHILE other celebrities of the screen are always careful to have their identities known when they travel, Mary MacLaren, the Universal star, is equally careful that she shall not be known as one of the screen's most popular luminaries.

When she is away from Universal City, Mary MacLaren invariably uses her legal name, Miss Mary MacDonald. Even that does not save her from the throngs of admirers, however, for her off-stage presence is quite as lovely as her screen appearance and she is frequently recognized. Then too, her real name is sometimes confused with that of her sister, Katherine MacDonald, also a screen player.

Mary MacLaren was born in Pittsburgh. After completing her education in Pittsburg, Miss MacLaren went to New York where she appeared at the Winter Garden for a season. She was seen by executives of the "Big U" who realized that she had screen possibilities and sent her to the world's film capital at Universal City.

Her screen successes include "The Model's Confession," "Bread," "Shoes," "The Weaker Vessel," "The Petal on the Current," "Rouge and Riches" and most lately "The Forged Bride."

"The Forged Bride" is considered to be one of the star's best Universal photodramas. It is to be shown on ————at the ———— Theatre.

NOTES.

Frances Raymond, who plays the role of the society matron in "The Forged Bride," is in reality a well known member of California's fashionable set. Formerly a well known actress, she married a wealthy Californian a few years ago and left the stage. Once in a great while, however, she succumbs to the temptation to act again, and when Mary MacLaren asked her to play the part in her photodrama, which is now being shown at the ———— Theatre, she consented.

Satisfying the many inquiries that have been received concerning Dagmar Godowsky, the beautiful girl who plays the heavy role in Mary MacLaren's photodrama, "The Forged Bride," now on view at the ———— Theatre, we are informed that she is the daughter of the famous pianist, Leopold Godowsky, that she was born in Russia and entered the films at the advice of her life-long friend, Mme. Nazimova. This is the second splendid part she has played in a Universal production.

THE STORY.

BILL BUTTERS, a skillful forger, kites a check, collects on it at the bank, goes hoe to his pretty daughter Peggy, and tells her he is "going straight." From the window Old Bill sees a detail of plainclothes men waiting in the street below. He tells Peggy to pack her things and leave the house. When the police come a moment later they cart him off to the old familiar jail. A week later the aristocratic Judge Clark Farrell frowns down from the bench and sentences Bill to the penitentiary.

"I hope," he says in passing sentence, "that when you leave the prison you will be able to use your great gift with the pen to better purpose." To be near her father, Peggy tends a soft-drink stand. Among the most persistent soft drinkers is Dick Van Courtland. Dick marries her after a whirlwind courtship.

Dick's home is composed of his mother—a society dowager—Judge Clark Farrell—his guardian, and Clara Ramerez. When Dick takes his bride home there is a scene. The girl recognizes Judge Farrell, and with fine courtesy the judge keeps her secret. Clara Ramerez, however, tries to undermine Peggy's standing with the family and visits Bill Butters at the penitentiary. Peggy writes to him that Judge Farrell likes her because she resembles his own daughter who was kidnaped as a baby.

Old Bill gets an idea. He will forge a letter which will make it appear that Peggy, his own beloved daughter, is really the daughter of Judge Farrell. Escaping from the honor squad Old Bill enters the home of Judge Farrell, opens his wall-safe, alters a letter written years ago by the kidnaper of the baby and by his cunning pen disavows his own daughter and makes her the daughter of Farrell. The judge, while seeing through Bill's trick, is content and accepts Peggy as his daughter and wife of his ward.

THE STORY.

THE Kirkland family, consisting of the Squire, his daughter Diana, and his two sons, William and James, live in a fashionable summer colony where homes of wealth are a matter of course.

Newcomers at the colony are Stephan and Leontine De Vallignac, presumably wealthy Parisians, and their ward, Patricia Melton, whose physical prowess and feline beauty have aroused the admiration of the younger set. The De Vallignacs have wormed themselves into the good graces of the Kirklands and the Metcalfs, a neighboring family.

The Kirkland household is annoyed one day to see an old army truck amble through their grounds driven by a jovial chap named Clamp, whose dress suggests something of a French army uniform with the cap of a Breton fisherman. Clamp is picturesque and his quaint manner of speech and his gallantry appeals to Diana, who sees in him a new type of man.

The Marquise D'Irancy, a beautiful woman from Paris, is at the Metcalf's as a guest. She numbers among her jewels the famous Sultana diamond of almost priceless value. She suddenly misses this jewel one evening at a reception in the Metcalf home. William, Diana's brother, is suspected because he had been with the Marquise that afternoon. She had suffered a fainting spell while they were together.

Diana suspects Clamp because she saw him prowling in the vicinity that afternoon. She resents Clamp's interest in professing to shield William.

Clamp finally reveals that he is a Government sleuth. Together Clamp and Diana lay a trap for the crooks, the De Vallignacs and their pretty ward, three international criminals.

After an exciting chase in the surf and later by motor-boat, automobile and motorcycle, Clamp rounds up the trio and turns them over to the police. Then whisks Diana away in his rattle-trap truck to the nearest parson.

The Mysterious Peddler.

"The Peddler of Lies" is built around a strange peddler, in outlandish garb, who drives a rickety truck filled with his wares. This peddler's outfit can be duplicated easily for exploitation purposes.

An old motor-truck, the worse looking the better, hung with pots and pans and other junk, inside and out, and driven by a young fellow in britches, roll puttees, a loose jacket, a colored scarf and a toque-like hat, complete the picture.

The truck should bear a sign something as follows:

"Clamp," the Peddler of Lies.

It can be used for the distribution of heralds. The pans and other objects used in filming the truck can be given away to theatre patrons.

Suggested Tie-Ups

The stirring climax in "The Peddler of Lies" is the struggle in the surf betwen Clamp, the Peddler, and Patricia Melton, a beautiful society crook. Dagmar Godowsky, who plays the role of Patricia, wears a shimmering black one-piece bathing suit in the scene. This suggests an attractive window display of the latest dare in bathing suits.

The plot of "The Peddler of Lies" revolves about the famous Sultâna Diamond, a gem of priceless value and legendary lore. Its protection against theft supplies the motif of the picture. Arrange for a display in a jeweler's window of the most bizarre gem or imitation gem that can be obtained. Station guards on the pavement outside of the window.

Watch Out for the Gypsy Peddler

In exploiting "The Peddler of Lies" considerable attention can be attracted by basing your advertising around the mysterious peddler in the following fashion:

"Look out! Clamp, the mysterious gypsy peddler, is coming to town. Keep an eye on your children. Lock your doors. The fellow Clamp says he is a peddler. Some say he is a detective. Take no chances, however. The mystery surrounding him will not be solved until ——— at the ——— Theatre."

The Master Sleuth

"The Peddler of Lies" is a story of clever detective work in the rounding up of a band of high-class international crooks. Every policeman and detective will be interested in it. Arrange for a special showing for police officials and get their recommendation of the detective work in the film. Since there is a clever twist to the story almost at the end of the film which keeps the whereabouts of the Sultana a secret almost to the very last moment—try showing the picture to the police and stopping short of the end. See if any detective present can guess the truth of the whereabouts of the famous gem, before seeing the end of the picture.

CENSORSHIP SIGN OF INTOLERANCE

This report of the annual meeting of the National Board of Review can be used to excellent advantage by every exhibitor who has a censorship problem.

—Editor.

THE National Board of Review of Motion Pictures held its annual luncheon on Saturday, January 31, at the Hotel McAlpin. This has become a notable event by reason, for one thing, of the prominent persons who address these luncheons. Those who spoke at this last gathering, consisting of approximately 150 members of the National Board and a few invited guests, were Miss Mary Shaw, stage artist, and Miss Mary Gray Peck, lecturer and club woman, both members of the National Board's Advisory Committee; William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry; Major Raymond Pullman, secretary of the Americanization committee appointed by Secretary of the Interior Lane; Rupert Hughes, from the Authors' League, and George Middleton, playwright.

Miss Shaw won applause when she put in a plea for special performances for children, and indeed for special theatres for children. The old and middle-aged people, she thought, might shift for themselves, and if they sometimes saw motion pictures they didn't care, for it was their own fault for not being more critical and making their desires known. "Wherever the theatre has failed," she said, "it is because you have failed the theatre. You do not take the theatre seriously enough and ask it for what you want. The same applies to motion pictures. But young people and adolescents should be provided with special films."

SCREEN SHOULD BE FREE

WILLIAM A. BRADY, in his characteristically stirring fashion, declared to the National Board that he was there "to boost the motion picture." He said that the motion picture had made such a record during the war period with regard to loyalty, news achievement as well as general improvement of quality, as to demonstrate that it did not need the interference of legalized censorship. "Now of all times the screen should be left free. If, for instance, a motion picture photographer should catch a Bolshevist planting a bomb, the screen should be free to show this picture. Let us face such things. Let us not permit a gag to be placed upon the motion picture such as was exercised by the censor board in Ohio when it prohibited the showing of Villa's picture on the screen 'lest it incite to hatred,' when every newspaper in the state had published it. The finest agency to expose the Red, to expose the corrupt politician, is the motion picture." Therefore, Mr. Brady plead that the motion picture be taken seriously; also that it be introduced in the schools and the facts of science, history, etc., be taught through this new medium which to the young makes of learning a joy instead of a drudgery.

Mr. Everett Dean Martin, chairman of the National Board of Review, and director of Cooper Union Forum, who presided at the luncheon, expressed his belief that the growing spirit of intolerance in this country was at the basis of any demand for legal censorship. He hoped that this spirit of intolerance would not enter into the use of the motion picture for Americanization purposes. This seemed to be guarded against, however, by the broad attitude towards the motion picture taken by Secretary Lane's committee on Americanization, of which Major Raymond Pullman was present as the representative. Major Pullman, after describing the rapidity with which the committee had been formed and started functioning once the idea was fairly under way, told in general terms of the aims of the movement it was designed to foster and emphasized that the pictures produced under the auspices of the committee "will not be anti-Bolshevist or anti-anything, but pro-American, bringing out the best in America."

RUPERT HUGHES CITES EXAMPLES

RUPERT HUGHES' interest in the subject of censorship and the work of the National Board of Review dated, he said, from the time when the picture based upon his book, "The Unpardonable Sin," ran foul of censorship in Pennsylvania. There is a state censor board there of three people, one of them being a middle-aged lady who, in connection with their action on the picture, backed up by her disclaimer of any pro-Germanism by telling Mr. Hughes that her son was in the Army of Occupation in Germany. It was simply a rule of the board that no mention should be made of approaching maternity. As Mr. Hughes pointed out to her, under this ruling the annunciation of the birth of Christ, if shown on the screen, would be censored by the Pennsylvania board not because sacrilegious, but because indecent. Mr. Hughes could see no object to such censorship unless it regarded maternity as a crime which it should help to prevent.

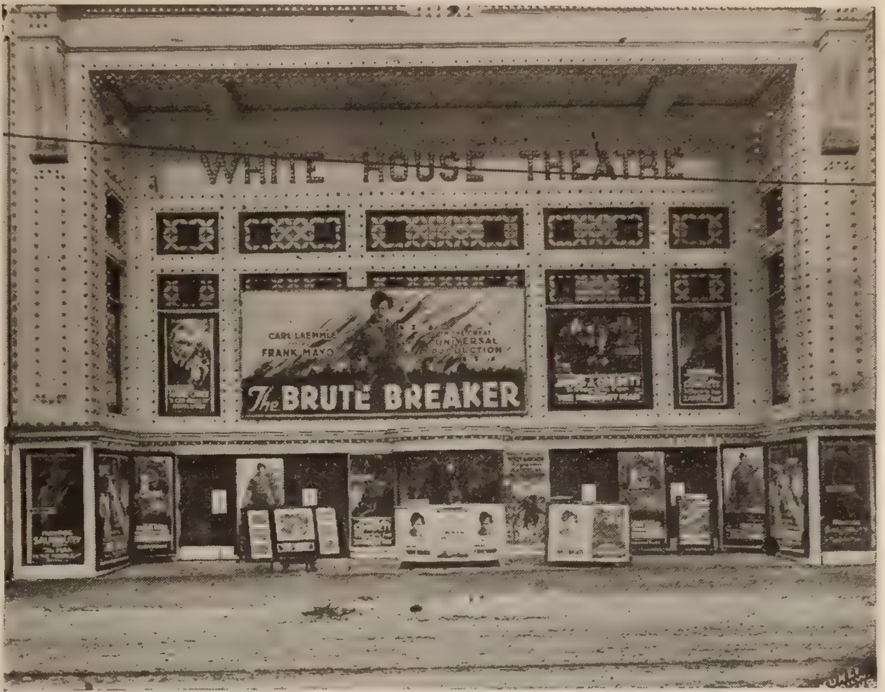
Mr. Hughes suggested this as a test of the alleged evil influence of the moving picture: take a community, he said, that never has had a moving picture theatre—in Italy, Spain, or the heart of Africa—do girls go wrong there? Are none of the crimes and delinquencies to be found there which some people in the United States are fond of ascribing to the motion picture? Consider what Bradford said in his history of New England. After relating how pure and religious were the motives from which the colony was founded, by a group of people who left the shores of the Old World because too wicked for them and sought in the wilderness to establish a state free from corrupting influences, he plaintively confessed the result—that crimes had multiplied in this new haven to an extent so far exceeding their number in the places they had left, that this condition could be accounted for only by the extra overtime efforts of Satan. And the Pilgrims, as Mr. Hughes pointed out, were not subjected to modern temptations such as magazines, light evening gowns, fox trots—and motion pictures.

"In China," said Mr. Hughes, "there are found erected in front of the houses devil-screens. The theory is that the devils approach the houses in a straight line, hit these big screens and bounce off." Now, censorship he considered was very much like these devil screens. It screens us from devils that do not exist. The National Board of Review, however, does not believe in devils, and that is why Mr. Hughes "loves it." The board simply recognizes that a certain amount of censorship is necessary to reflect public opinion to the producers before their product is released. Against the other kind of censorship which is founded on prejudices and prudery and would besmirch things which are perfectly decent by imputing indecency to them, he urged that every effort be exerted.

"AS BAD AS THE DIVORCE LAWS"

THE warning uttered by Dr. Martin against the growing spirit of intolerance as applied to motion pictures was amplified in a stirring address by the playwright

Frank Mayo Popular Star



The White House Theatre, Milwaukee.

ONE of the Universal Special Attraction stars who is attracting considerable attention not only for the rapidity of his rise in the photoplay but for the enthusiastic comments which have been made by trade press critics, is Frank Mayo. It is true that he was introduced to stardom through a remarkable vehicle, "The Brute Breaker," which was directed by Lynn Reynolds.

The lobby display in the accompanying cut represents the effort of the White House Theatre of Milwaukee to do justice to the subject which they advertised far and wide in the newspapers and the billboards. You will notice that the Whitehouse Theatre has an unusual arrangement for an effective display. For instance, they have room for a twenty-four sheet, a six, and two threes in the center of the front above the entrance. In addition to that there is a three on either side on a level with these and on the street level they can use nine three-sheets, two sixs, and six ones, together with two easels for lobby display photographs. Few theatres can make such effective display.

"The Brute Breaker" made such a hit at the White House Theatre that they made an effort to get every one of the Frank Mayo subjects which have been released. These include "The Little Brother of the Rich," "Lasca" and "The Peddler of Lies."

THE NATIONAL BOARDS ANNUAL MEETING

George Middleton. He said that "I know I voice the protests of all writers when I say I object to having my plays fit the caprices of 45 states of mind. It is like our silly divorce laws that make a man a bachelor in one state while he is a bigamist in another. I feel very strongly that the movies must protest vigorously against the entire tendency of intrusion as expressed in cenorship. I am still a believer in a free press and free films.

"I ask that the film be left free. The ideal American film will be one that is not afraid to show America as it is with all its brilliant sunlight and ominous shadows. It will have the faults at best of the average human. As one grows older he ceases to ask for perfection and tries to accommodate himself to the fact that in life as in institutions the good and the bad are mixed.

"I fear intolerance more than freedom. I believe that error can be fought only in the free air. Repress opinions and thoughts and words, and they will escape in distorted acts. Some of us here are the great-grandchildren of revolutionists who made this country. Some of us here are of alien parentage. America is all things. We should strive to make America a forum where all opinions may live, not an amphitheatre where certain opinions must be killed. Thus only can we achieve understanding and readjustment. And I still believe that there is no greater force in American life to-day to teach that human understanding and sympathy than the small lens of the camera which has no prejudice and no fear, if the hand that directs it is honest and unafraid of the truth."

MASSACHUSETTS AND VIRGINIA

MISS MARY GRAY PECK had recently returned from Massachusetts, where, she reported, a strong movement is afoot, backed by, as she termed them, "the organized forces of self-righteousness." "They are the modern Puritans," she said, "a different sort of person from the old Puritan. He had as his spokesman such a one as John Milton. The modern Puritans, however, have the bacillus of censorship—against which Milton eloquently inveighed—so deep-seated in their systems that probably nothing but death will remove it." Miss Peck, however, did not believe that these organized forces of self-righteousness, composed mostly of women, really represented the women of the State. She said she found that the most effective propaganda for the National Board of Review with Massachusetts audiences was its large list of members who are devoting their time freely to public service through the National Board.

Miss Peck had also recently been in Virginia. There, too, there has been agitation for state motion picture censorship, but she believed that in the case of Virginia the desire for legalized enforcement of morality was on the decline. The spirit of the exhibitors in Virginia was conciliatory and the women's organizations were willing to meet them half way. The prospect was therefore for the settlement of the questions at issue by means of a co-operative arrangement.

If it were only possible for every person who is inclined to favor state censorship in preference to the present system of review by the National Board of Review, to attend one of its annual luncheons and meet the people who do the actual work of reviewing and who control its policies and administration, it is reasonable to predict that even "the organized forces of self-righteousness" whom Miss Peck encountered would feel their props so unsteady that they would seek some other "evil" to attack and for the nonce leave the motion picture to develop in peace under the guardianship of the National Board of Review and the inspiration of leaders of the industry like Mr. Brady and the genius of writers and thinkers like Mr. Hughes.

"EVERY editor in the country agreed that 'The Three Godfathers,' recently presented American fiction lovers through the medium of a weekly magazine, was an excellent story with wonderful dramatic possiilities, but the great percentage of these editors overlooked the fact that as a film subject it stood out as a classic with unlimited possibilities."

"And," continued Jack Ford, Universal's great director, who is responsible for the filming of the story under the title of "Marked Men," "it was the great punches in the story that attracted me. I had Universal buy it, and, of course, it fell to my lot to make a six-reel photoplay out of it with Harry Carey as the star."

DESERT BECOMES STUDIO.

"The public has no idea of the work we had to do preparatory to filming the story. It meant build the old-time western dance hall on the desert. It meant long tedious days of struggle in the merciless sun on a sand covered waste. It meant move men, women and children from up-to-date hotels to the heart of a deserted country, and to make them understand that they were a part of that country and must act accordingly. It meant find types, the kind that would pass the closest scrutiny of the ever critical public. And it meant to take a six-weeks-old baby into this fringe of civilization to become the pivot around which the story was woven."

REAL "EXTRAS."

"Every influence was brought to bear, and we took the opening reel in a penitentiary. There were no imitation bars, only three imitation prisoners out of the 1,100 convicts shown in the picture, and only one acting guard or 'head screw,' shown in the great prison scene. Into this atmosphere I had to take camera men, lights, and on top of it had to make 1,100 desperate men remember that they were really prisoners in the greatest penitentiary of the west and act accordingly.

"In the second reel I had to find one man who dared risk his life for a thrill, and I found him. His duty was to dash through the railing of a high wooden bridge on a horse and fall sixty feet below in a shallow river. I had six camera men there to catch the scene from every angle, and I believe that it will stand as one of the most daring feats ever performed before a camera.

"I had to find a man who could handle a rifle so well that there could not be a fraction of an inch mistake in his aim, for he shoots at Carey, who is swimming a river, and the bullet is seen to hit just three inches from the star's head.

"And then came a man who knew how to dynamite a safe. There were a lot of amateurs about the country, but they wouldn't do. I had to have a professional, and I borrowed him from the penitentiary, where I made the first reel of the picture. He had served ten of his twenty years, but it seems hadn't lost the old knack of 'cracking a crib,' and the scene, as a result, is unusually realistic."

NO IMITATION.

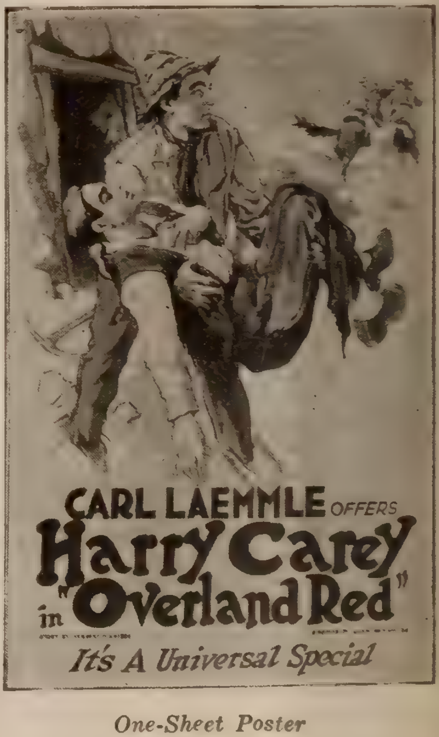
These things Jack Ford told me the other day when he spent a day with me between trains on his way to the coast, were just a few of the details attendant upon making "Marked Men," one of the best films Universal has ever produced, and looked upon by the picture world in general as one of the finest pieces of directing ever done before the camera.

Ford is a stickler for detail. No imitation whiskers are used by people acting under him to show the passing of time. He does not permit them to shave when such a facial effect is needed. In fights there is a real battle, in drinking liquor the real stuff is, or rather, was, used, and at a dance the music really plays.

Ford himself becomes a part of the picture. He acts every scene for his principals, and goes through every move for the minor actors in the cast. "In everything I want realism," is Ford's continual cry.

In "Marked Men" the result of his careful direction will show his wonderful knowledge of western life. For two months he studied the story before outlining any acting. Then he chose his cast, and lastly he spent weeks finding locations for the great punches in the big story. Then came the work which consumed sixty days, all hot, wearisome days, with eight to fourteen hours of untiring acting—and as a result came the masterpiece, "Marked Men."

The photoplay is being shown this week at the Standard theatre and will serve for those who study the intricate ins and outs of the movies as the finest bit of directing seen in many a day.



One-Sheet Poster

The four sketches on these two pages show four of the striking posters for Carey's latest Special Attraction, "Overland Red."

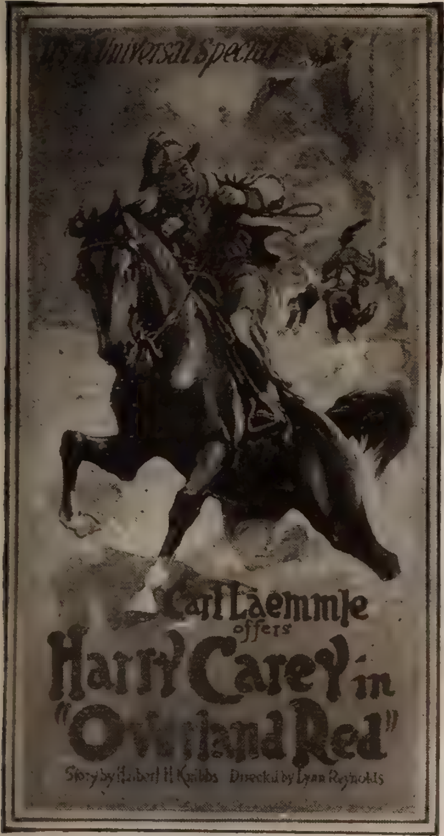
Harry Carey Has Outlasted All the Famous Western Stars

WHAT has become of all the cowboy and western stars that formerly flickered on the silver screen? Where are all those daring riders and broncho busters who were featured in the films of five or six years ago? There were scores of "wild west stars" in those days, but they have all vanished. Only a few have survived, and these may be counted on the fingers of one hand. Of the three or four western stars that have grown in popularity since they first flashed on the screen there is no one better liked than Harry Carey, whose latest photodrama, "Overland Red," is to be seen at the ——— Theatre next ———.

One need not dig deep to find the reason for Harry Carey's increasing success. It's another case of the survival of the fittest. The time has passed when the ability to ride and perform reckless stunts on horseback in itself constituted a star of the cinema. Harry Carey was a star on the dramatic stage for several years before venturing in the movies. Likewise, his horsemanship has not been learned in a riding academy. In his early youth, when threatened with a serious malady, his father, a Supreme Court Judge in the State of New York, sent Harry to a ranch in Montana, and after three years of life in the open he not only developed a marvelous physique, but learned all the tricks of the range and plains which theatregoers admire in his photoplays.

But Carey was an actor first, and whether he is playing the role of a cowboy, an outlaw, a tramp or a gentleman, the spectator is sure to see a characterization of the highest dramatic quality. His latest success "Marked Men" was so great that the whole country is talking about it. It is no wonder that they waited eagerly for his next film.

In "Overland Red," which is founded on the successful novel of that name by H. Herbert Knibbs, Harry Carey is said to have scored one of his most emphatic triumphs.



Three-Sheet Poster.

I don't know a man but who worships some woman. It may be a slip of a school girl, it may be a devoted wife, it may be a sweetheart—or that wonderful gray-haired mother—but it's always a woman. A world without women would be like a garden without flowers.

Women are the Reflection of Good in the World's Mirror of Life.

The Big Drive Winners

WITH an average of over twenty per cent. increase in booking for a three months period, Universal has just announced the results of its recent "Big business drive." The salesmen and the office force of the Universal's Cleveland Exchange have been mailed a check for $2,500 as an award for winning first place in a three months' sales contest which closed on the first of the year. The Cleveland Exchange increased its film sales by 55.5 per cent. over the sales made during the three months immediately preceding the contest.

Detroit was second, with an increase of 54.61 per cent. Detroit's check was $1,300. The third Universal Exchange to come in the money was the Buffalo branch, which captured third place, with an increase of 44.7 per cent. and won a check for $700.

Besides the main awards in the lively sales contest, the most efficient salesman in each of twenty-five exchanges received a check for $100. J. A. Daly, publicity manager of the Charlotte, N. C., Exchange, received $50 as an award for the best and most consistent publicity during the contest. A second publicity prize, $25, was given to Dean Collins of the Portland, Oregon, Universal branch. These prizes are in addition to the provisions made for publicity men in the big contest.

So spirited was the drive that the Universal sales machine, as a whole, averaged an increase of over 25 per cent. during the months of October, November and December, as compared to the months of July, August and September of last year.

The contest was known as the $6,000 Prize Contest, that amount of money being set aside to be divided among three leading exchanges and among the twenty-five top salesmen. Other prizes were added during the competition, until the total amount awarded as a result of the drive was more than $7,000.

The remarkable increase gained by the various exchanges is all the more unusual due to the fact that the results were compared with months in which a previous sales contest was running at full steam—the Universal Anniversary Contest.

THIS lobby was arranged specially for this picture and for that reason it does not show the entrance to the ticket booth. The picture was taken in the morning with a view to showing the ingenious method of advertising this Special Attraction, which has played all around the Memphis territory and yet made a hit and drew a record crowd when it played at the Princess Theatre. You will notice in the lobby that the Rich part of the title "The Little Brother of the Rich" has been emphasized. The manager of the Princess had booked the Rainbow Comedy "All for the Doughbag" at the same time and he combined both titles in a regular "Money" display in the lobby. He had bags full of money hung all over the place, which gave a most opulent look to the lobby. This idea, with the regular one-sheet and three-sheet posters issued with both the comedy and the feature completed a display that certainly got the money.

A Strong Week at the U. S. Theatre

THE United States Theatre of Cleveland, O., believes in playing a good thing to the limit. That is why Max Marcus, the manager, books almost a solid week of Special Attractions when he can get them. For instance, he played Salisbury in "The Man in the Moonlight" on one Monday, Mae Murray in "What Am I Bid" on Tuesday, Olive Tell in "The Trap" on Wednesday, Harry Carey in "The Ace of the Saddle" on Thursday. On the rest of the week, he also had Universal pictures on the program. Friday he played Marie Walcamp in "Tempest Cody Bucks the Trust." Saturday he played Corbett in "The Midnight Man." The U. S. Theatre has a very ornate program of pocket size printed in two colors. It would be a pleasure to reproduce the clever thumb nail cuts with which each day of the program is ornamented, but blue ink will not reproduce. This is, however, the general arrangement.

Mary Anice	Josephine Hill
Her Father	Jim O'Neal
Bart Hawkins	Bert Frank
Crowfoot	William Harrison

JIM MORRAINE, newly elected sheriff of Tenstrike county, calls on Mary Anice to ask her to marry him. He meets her father, who, learning his mission, orders him off the place. Jim's father volunteers to go and see Anice. Meanwhile Bart Hawkins, Jim's rival, has also been kicked off the place by old Anice, for the same reason. Bart's Indian servant, Crowfoot, is gathering firewood in the ravine which separates Anice's cabin from Bart's.

When Old Morraine asks Anice why he objects to Jim, Anice insults him and the two men come to grips. Morraine pulls his gun and fires at Anice who is standing on the brink of a steep slide. Anice, startled, by the shot which misses him and goes through Crowfoot's hat, steps back and tumbles down the slide. He is stunned. Morraine thinking he has killed the old man, resolves to make a get-a-way.

Anice comes too, and struggles to his feet, but Bart who has seen the whole incident, sees a way to get rid of Anice and calmly shoots Anice dead. Crowfoot has seen both incidents.

Jim, as sheriff, is brought to the scene of the murder. He knows that his father has been to see Anice, and suspects him. He goes home and finds his father's gun with one sheel spent. Old Morraine make no attempt to conceal his action from Jim. Jim, however, holds to his oath and arrests his father. His mother casts him off. The verdict of the jury is "Guilty" and the sentence is death. Jim, takes off his badge and resigns his office.

Bart kicks Crowfoot out, on the day of the hanging, and in revenge he goes to Mary and tells her that Bart Hawkins killed her father. Telling Crowfoot to wait in her cabin Mary finds Jim and tells him. Jim phones to the Governor, but he is on an auto trip. Jim tells the sheriff to arrest Bart and tells Mary to get Crowfoot while he rides to intercept the Governor for Morraine's pardon.

He overtakes the Governor, dropping down a cliff into his machine, but the governor does not believe the story. Jim holds him up and tells him he has to get to the jail and stop the hanging or he will get to the other world first. They drive to the jail, arriving twenty minutes before the time set for the hanging. But Crowfoot cannot be found and the Governor says he cannot interfere.

Bart who saw the Indian in Mary's cabin has become suspicious, so he questions the Indian and finding that he has seen the murder, he shoots him.

The clock is one minute before the fatal hour, when Crowfoot, just able to crawl, gets to the jail and tells his story before he dies. Morraine is dragged from the scaffold and saved while Bart is held for his double crime. Jim and Mary are united.

HAPPY HENRY was in love with Virginia Vamp, who was by the way, considerable vamp. Henry took her to the beach one day, to hit the high spots for a nickle, but Virginia grew tired of him, and when Near Bear Billy, whose stand was just crowed with girls, called her, she left Henry flat. But Henry, nothing daunted stole a counter and set it up right in back of Near Beer Billy's key of beverage. He put up a sign, two glasses for a nickle and tapped Billy's keg of Near Beer. Everything was going beautifully until Lota Fat asked for a pickle sandwich and he had to steal one of Billy's. But Billy's partner, Brownie, caught him in the act and led Henry a merry chase all over the place, finally making him take to the open sea.

Henry told his two pals that under a certain umbrella on the beach was the girl he meant to make his wife. But they chose the wrong umbrella and kidnapped Lota Fat, putting her in a big potatoe sack. After much trouble they arrived at the Justice of the Peace's house and forced him to marry Henry and what was in the potatoe sack. Just as the ceremony was finished, who should appear but Virginia Vamp and Near Beer Bill, to congratulate him. When Henry saw what he had married, he went out like a light.

Episode 3.

"The Life Line."

AGAIN Elmo's great strength saves the day and Edith and he set out on their return to the camp. But Guy Hatherton, after hearing Dan's story of the wreck, sets out with Lucille to make a last effort to finish the business. A canoe takes them swiftly down the river. Elmo and Edith on the cliffs above, recognize their pursuers and Elmo ropes Lucille from the canoe and drags her up the cliff. "We'll find out who this girl is," he tells Edith. Guy is overturned into the water and making his way to shore sets out to get at grips with Elmo. Leaving Lucille with Edith, Elmo climbs down the crags to meet his adversary. Lucille, seizing her chance, attacks Edith, and quickly overcomes her. She now plans to deceive Elmo again and changes clothes with the unconscious Edith.

Elmo beats Guy and returns to the girls. Lucille passes herself off as Edith, who in the meantime has wandered off in a dazed condition and fallen from the cliffs to the river below. Unaware of what has happened, Elmo accompanies the false Edith to the little lumber town, where he unexpectedly encounters Guy. Elmo decides to have him arrested for attempted murder. Lucille pretends to agree to the plan, but upon arriving at the sheriff's office, she tells Elmo that she has changed her mind and refuses to swear to the warrant.

In the meantime, Edith has been rescued by a man-ape known as Jacko. The animal takes her to his cave and ministers to her. Edith writes a note which she gives to Jacko, together with her handkerchief, telling the creature to find Elmo and give him her note. Guy has persuaded Lucille to sign a lease of Stilwell's mineral rights in the name of Edith Stilwell. Elmo, completely fooled, witnesses the lease, after doing which he leaves. At this moment arrives the man-ape. But instead of giving the note to Elmo, Jacko makes a mistake and hands it and the handkerchief to Guy. Elmo recognizes Edith's initial on the handkerchief, and also glimpses her signature on the note. At once realizing that Lucille has duped him, he attacks Guy in an attempt to recover the bogus lease and the note. The sheriff and his men rush to Guy's aid, and after a desperate fight, Elmo is overcome and handcuffed in the sheriff's office. Guy sends Dan to the man-ape's cave, with instructions to get Edith and put her out of the way for good. Elmo breaks loose from his bonds and makes a flying leap to a horse outside. The sheriff ropes him, but Jacko coming to Elmo's aid, attacks the sheriff, driving him indoors. Elmo takes the opportunity and escapes on a second horse. Guy and his gang now rush to a bridge spanning a dangerous canon, where they loosen the planks. Elmo comes galloping down the grade and across the bridge. The trap gives way and he is plunged with the horse down to his doom. At this moment appears the Mystery Man, who begins shooting at the gang.

Aunt	Grace Marvin
Her Ward	Charlotte Merriam
Man Across the Hall	Harry Rattenbury
His Wife	Elsie Cort

EDDIE and Lee are out of work, out of money and out of food. They buy their clothes on the dollar down and dollar a week plan, but fail to meet their payments and the hard-hearted tailor comes to their room and takes all their wearing apparel. The boys are prisoners in their room. To make matters worse they receive a wire from their rich Aunt who notifies them that she is coming with her beautiful young ward to visit the boys and that she expects them to entertain her well.

In the meantime the man across the hall has enjoyed a splendid breakfast which nearly ruined the day for the boys by its fragrant odor drifting over the transom into their room. When the man completes his breakfast he takes his wife and suit cases and leaves to catch a train for a long journey. The boys overhear them departing.

When the couple leave the boys go over to the room across the hall, get in and help themselves to food and clothing. The clothing was made for the man who was twice as big as the boys, but any old port in the storm was the motto of Eddie and Lee at that time.

The man and his wife miss their train and start to return home. In the meantime the Aunt and her ward arrive and find the boys dressed in the big pants of the man across the hall. The boys explain their garb by claiming that it is the latest style. They put on the stolen food which does not suit the Aunt, who is fond of fruit. She sends the boys after fruit. The boys find some money in the pants they have stolen and they go after the fruit. On the way the boys run into the returning man and wife and the clothes are recognized. A chase follows ending up with the boys being exposed before the rich Aunt.

EVERY really great story the world has ever known has been based on pure heart-appeal. "The Day She Paid" was adapted from the remarkable story, "Oats and the Woman," by Fannie Hurst. Because of the greater possibilities of the screen over the printed word, the picture transcends even the wondrous appeal of the story. Just as Fannie Hurst's power lies in her unerring ability to depict human frailty as well as nobility of character in a way that rings true, so will the picture touch the heartstrings of every person who sees it. THE popularity of Priscilla Dean and the appeal of the photoplays in which she has already appeared is not confined by any means to the United States. The small reproduction shown above of a full page advertisement in a British film journal speaks for itself. "Kiss or Kill" was the very first selection of Butcher's important distributing agency in Great Britain for their 1920 business and they don't make any bones about coming out and stating so in print.

On this side of the water the Jewel has also selected a Priscilla Dean picture as its first offering of the year. This picture is the $500,000 production "The Virgin of Stamboul," by H. H. Van Loan. It was produced by Tod Browning who took five full months to direct this gigantic production and another month to properly cut and title it. "The Virgin of Stamboul" is being rapidly prepared for its debut.

"The Virgin of Stamboul" is a story of a beautiful beggar girl who becomes involved in a love affair with an American officer in Constantinople. The story called for seventy original sets, representing street scenes, harums, palaces, mosques, and other atmospheric reproductions of Asia Minor.

Universal City has Its Own Local Board of Review

A SERIOUS error has no more chance to remain in a Universal photodrama than has a fat man to see his watch-fob.

A committee of chronic critics view every foot of film the minute it is dry enough to leave the laboratory.

The committee is required to abide by more rules than those usually governing the Most Sublime Monarch of a colored secret society. Here are the rules:

1—The committee must not view pictures until twenty minutes after the usual lunch hour of the members.

2—Any member who suddenly develops a kindly feeling toward the world in general must resign from the committee until his private stock is exhausted.

3—The death of a mother-in-law is sufficient cause for the resignation of any member. Upon acquiring another mother-in-law it is assumed that he will again be in the proper frame of mind for the committee.

4—Any member with a tooth-ache will have two votes on any disputed point.

5—Any director found slipping a critic a bottle of gin will lose his friend on the committee.

The critical board is unique in its personnel. It is composed of:

Percy Heath, scenario editor of Universal City and former dramatic critic of eastern newspapers; Charles L. Hertzman, director of publicity at University City and former theatrical manager and newspaperman; Lillian Greenberger, casting director of Universal City; Malcolm S. Boylan, assistant director of publicity; S. M. Tompkins, chief cameraman and Miss M. L. King, an attache of the scenario department.

Then the National Board of Review takes the film in hand to assure the country in general that it is strictly moral in every way. No Universal film ever goes out without this stamp.

P. M. Gonzalez

PEDRO Miranda Gonzalez, present manager of the Porto Rico Branch of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in San Juan, has worked his way to his present position by his own efforts and without any pull or special dispensation of luck. He is a native Porto Rican and received his primary education in the public schools of San Juan. In 1911 he entered the University of Porto Rico at Rio Piedras. Upon graduating he received his high school diploma and a certificate as special teacher in manual training. Two years later he received his Principal Teacher's diploma, having finished in 1916, the four year Normal Course in that University. While engaged in putting four years into one, he was also engaged in taking a correspondence course in bookkeeping which stood him in good stead when he started working for the Porto Rico branch of the Universal in San Juan as bookkeeper and translator.

Shortly afterward, he was made cashier and it so happened that it devolved upon him on several occasions to act as manager of the office, until May 25, 1919 when he was named General Manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in Porto Rico.

Broken "Blossoms"

No. 257 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President, Universal Film Manufacturing Company

LAST Spring various producers and distributors blossomed forth with marvelous promises to the trade. Whole sections of the trade papers were taken up with blatant announcements, showing how each distributor or each producer intended to play the role of Moses to the lowly and bewildered exhibitor.

Each and every Moses in the business "descended" to the level of the exhibitor and actually encouraged the flattered exhibitor to call him "Moe" for short.

Each Moe swore by all that was holy that he was going to let each exhibitor book Moe's picture as he bedamned pleased. He promised "selective booking", whereby each picture would be booked alone and no picture would be used as a club to make the poor exhibitor book others.

The millenium had milleniumed. Utopia had utoped. Moe kissed the exhibitor smack on the mush with a brotherly open-market kiss. Everybody was happy and yappy. Spring was in the air. All nature, plus Moe, expanded under the beautiful sunshine of love and goodwill 'n everything.

Then something happened quietly to the spring blossoms. Most of the blossoms became broken, like promises, or else they developed into bloomers. Nearly every Moe in the business who had been right down on the ground playing leapfrog with the lowly exhibitor, suddenly remembered his dignity. His publicity and advertising men suddenly quit talking about open bookings. Moe—became Moses and then Mr. Moses—and promptly forgot that there was such an animal as the exhibitor.

This, gentlemen, has been the history of this business. Broken blossoms. Forgotten promises. And yet each year's crop has been eagerly grasped by the eager exhibitor.

A careful survey of present booking conditions, as far as I can see, shows that only two companies have lived up to the letter and spirit of the open-booking promises. One of these companies is the United Artists. The other is the Universal.

This is no new thing for the Universal. It has always booked according to the needs and desires of the exhibitor. Any exhibitor can book any Universal picture separately, or he can book a group, or all of them. Any other plan is a false basis. The Universal plan is correct and fair in principle, and when a company stands on principle it stands on the only solid foundation on earth. The very fact that the Universal is doing by far the most tremendous business in all its career is proof enough that the Universal way is the only right way!

Spring is coming soon. And with it, very likely, a brand new set of promises will blossom forth. It will be interesting to see whether you've learned your lesson or whether you will patiently gulp down the same old guff!

A Message from Lord Northcliffe

HANDS-across-the-sea stuff has become so common of late years as to be incapable of exciting the re-action which once followed an international meeting of minds and mouths at the luncheon board. But there took place at the Astor Hotel last Tuesday an event which is worthy of and bound to receive space in every newspaper in this country and Great Britain. The heads of the film industry, several bankers who are not yet in, as well as many who are, and many newspaper men sat down together to join in welcoming an ambassador to the film Empire of America. He was not accredited from The Court of St. James, but from a mighty important part of the Fourth Estate of Great Britain, the Northcliffe Press. "Ambassador" Faulkner is in every sense Lord Northcliffe's personal representative to the Film Industry.

This luncheon is truly an event both in film history and in the history of Anglo-American relations, as Arthur Levey, who has associated himself with the Northcliffe Mission, stated in introducing the toastmaster, Mr. Melville E. Stone. No man has kept England more thoroughly stirred up for its own good for the last five years than Lord Northcliffe. No set of papers in the world has so fully recognized the significance of the motion picture or given it such whole-hearted support and extent of space as the Northcliffe papers. In a most diplomatic and cordial speech Mr. Faulkner called attention to this fact and in his speech stated that it was because Lord Northcliffe was thoroughly convinced that the screen was the most potent force in the world to-day—not excepting the printed word.

Lord Northcliffe's message as read by Mr. Stone, is as follows:

THE TIMES
1785.

A MESSAGE TO MY AMERICAN FRIENDS.

"In asking my friend Faulkner to cross the Atlantic, I had in my mind the creation of a better understanding in the film worlds of our country and yours.

"My personal interest in films is frankly educational—not in the dull sense, but largely in the sense of accuracy of detail.

"Some American films, beautiful in conception, that include reels depicting English life, are occasionally spoiled by little but damaging mistakes which make the public disregard the fine creative and accurate portion of such films.

"For example, I saw in Edinburgh what would have been a very popular film—American made—in which one scene was laid in an English country house. There was a butler and a footman. In an English country house the servants do not wait at breakfast. The guests help themselves from the sideboard, as everyone in the audience knew. Incidentally, the whole party were drinking ice-water, which is a luxury that we have not attained to in this country, but which, I understand, has been very plentiful in your country since the Thirsty-first.

"Such errors hurt filmland as badly as false news hurts newspapers. They make people doubt the accuracy of all films.

"A good understanding between the film people of our countries is the more essential because the development of cheap private projectors will produce such an increase in the manufacture of films and the desire to see films, that for every film put on the screen to-day, I venture to predict that there will be a hundred produced in ten years' time.

"I find that my own private projector has increased the desire of my household and circle of friends to go to all the neighboring picture theatres.

"This new development has infinite possibilities. In Great Britain we are not sufficiently awake to the fact that the moving picture is absolutely the greatest instrument of recreation and education that the world has ever known.

"In the United States I found during my residence there two years ago, that there were plenty of people even in that country, which is the home of the film who did not realize the possibilities of 1925 in filmland.

"My friend Faulkner goes to you with a message of good will from all of us here, and especially to say that any efforts in the direction of accurate and elevated production will meet with very warm support from the Northcliffe Press."

(Signed) Northcliffe.
London, 14th Jan. 1920.

William A. Brady replied to Ambassador Faulkner and speeches were made by Louis Tracy the novelist and W. W. Irwin.

I am the Motion Picture Camera

I AM the motion picture camera.

I am worth a little more than $2,500 all equipped.

There are thirty-five of my brothers here at Universal City, six of them with Universal expeditions in distant places of the earth, and ten of them in New York.

Oh, I am a member of a very wealthy family. In fact, the family is worth just $127,500 on the hoof. But I am essential to this infant industry. I make it possible for a lot of moon-faced people who couldn't earn their salt by working, to get millions of Carl Laemmle's and Adolph Zukor's money and for lots of people who would otherwise be selling sugar at war prices to be Captains of Art.

There is an old wheeze that a camera can't lie. Pooh! and a couple of baa's. We cameras are the best liars since Homer smote his lyre and said that his tune was original. I can make a chicken look like a hard boiled hen and a leather-faced old booze lapper look like a million dollars.

Of course, something depends on the man who operates us, but we can all make a straight line look like a peeved tomcat's back and a square look like a profiteer's soul.

Without me there would be no moving pictures. I put the move in movie and the sin in cinematography.

Four hundred feet of film is placed on my well shaped head every morning. In an hour or so another magazine of film is substituted for the first and my daily rations sometimes exceeds two thousand feet of film.

If the day's film is not good the cameraman can always discover something the matter with our insides upon which to blame his foozling of the film. As a diagnostician the average cameraman is a knockout.

A brother of mine was thrown from a cliff recently. They picked him up in a basket and found enough debris to build two flivvers.

To young cameras I have always said:

Eat lots of film and don't ogle the ingenues.

I am the Motion Picture Camera.

BAR-ROOM SCENES DENATURED BY PROHIBITION.

IT was a sad, sad day at Universal City. The property man with doleful mien approached the set where Harry Carey, the cowboy film star, was working on his latest Universal production, "Bullet Proof." "Props" was almost lachrymose as he carried gingerly a tray with bottles and glasses. No gladsome cry arose at his coming. They knew, those players, that he was only the property man, not the servitor of some genial philanthropist who had set his mind on being host.

The amber fluid in the bottles was only colored water. The glasses were for no real utilitarian purpose. Why should they be joyful?

Sorrowfully Lynn Reynolds, the director, and Hugh McClung, the cameraman, gathered around Harry Carey, and the three of them gazed long at what once had been a full-fledged quart. Then Carey retired to a corner to gaze some more. Pretty tough, mates, pretty tough, to be working all day in a pseudo bar-room these days of the great drought.

After the fitting tribute to the memory of his eminence, the late Mr. J. B. Corn, they proceeded soberly with the making of the picture. They all expect to proceed soberly with everything else they do in the future. But has this anything to do with the reason they changed the title of John Frederick's story, "Luck," to "Bullet Proof"? Anyway, it's one of the S. R. O. 12.

JACK FORD DIRECTS "THE GIRL IN No. 29."

WORK on the latest Universal production, "The Girl in No. 29," is finished. This is an elaborate production, with one of the finest casts Universal has ever assembled for a feature photodrama.

Jack Ford, who directed the most recent Harry Carey production, "Marked Man," heralded far and wide as the most perfect western picture of the year, had charge of "The Girl in No. 29," and the cast includes such prominent players as Frank Mayo, Harry Hilliard, Claire Anderson, Elinor Fair, Ray Ripley, Ruth Royce, Robert Bolder, Arthur Hoyt and Bull Montana. It will be released as one of the S. R. O. 12.

"The Girl in No. 29" is based on the popular novel, "The Girl in the Mirror," by Elizabeth Jordan. It is a story of fashionable New York, bordering on the artistic, literary and dramatic circles. And the high plane in which the characters move does not detract in the least from the air of romance, mystery and thrill with which the story abounds.

The leading character in the story is a young man of wealth who has written a successful play. His friends urge him to continue his literary career, but he is inclined to rest on his laurels. In order to stimulate his imagination his friends "stage manage" a great adventure which threatens to end disastrously for all concerned until the playwright's inventiveness evolves a solution to the problem which wins him added fame as well as the girl he had always wanted.

EDITH ROBERTS, EXPERT HORSEWOMAN.

THE work of Edith Roberts with Frank Mayo in the Universal production, "Lasca," and the riding skill she displayed won her such popularity that she was immediately cast in the leading rôle of a film play that would give her another opportunity to show her ability as a horsewoman. The part Miss Roberts takes in her newest picture, "The Daring Duchess," one of the S. R. O. 12, directed by Harry Franklin, gives her an opportunity to show her versatility as a screen actress as well as her expert management of a horse.

The charming star wears a number of pretty gowns in the play, but many of her friends told her she appeared to best advantage in her chic riding habit. Miss Roberts likes to get a mount from the Universal City ranch when she has a few hours to spare and gallop around the adjoining country. She is an enthusiastic horsewoman off as well as on the screen.

PHIL ROSEN DIRECTS MARY MacLAREN FILM.

MARY MACLAREN, Universal star, who has just finished her newest photodrama, "The Road to Divorce," has for two or three years been known as the American beauty of the screen. Her beautiful head and bust have been modeled in clay by the famous California sculptor, Frederick Schmohl, while the magic brush of the New York portrait painter, Edward Scooll, has transferred her perfect profile to many a canvass.

In her newest production, "The Road to Divorce," she divides her scenes with respect to her appearance. While as the young girl and the bride her beauty is seen to its full advantage, she appears careless and slovenly in other scenes, paying more attention to her household duties than to her personal adornment.

"The Road to Divorce" was written by J. Grubb Alexander and directed by Philip Rosen. Bonnie Hill, Edward Piel, Eugenia Forde, Helen Davidge and Roy Stecher appear in support. It is one of the S. R. O. 12.

Publicity for "Overland Red"

For the Herald.

THEY were two happy tramps together. They had discovered the location of a valuable mine and just as a girl had come into their lives, a girl that started them both dreaming of love and a home, a crooked sheriff, intent on learning the location of the mine, arrested them and sent them to jail.

They escaped and separated, Red to seek out the mine and Collie to work on the ranch where the girl was staying. They were about to become fabulously wealthy from the mine. The sheriff and his companions shot Collie in the back, after following him from the ranch when he went to meet his friend Red.

In a spectacular gun battle Red avenged his friend who had been taken to the ranch badly wounded. But Collie recovered under the tender care of the girl and his dream of love began to come true.

Meanwhile Red discovered that their mine really belongs to the girl and that they must give it up. Red also realized that he must give up something far more precious to him than a gold mine.

The unselfish way in which he sacrifices his own heart's desire for the happiness of his friend is developed with telling effect in the Universal production of "Overland Red," starring Harry Carey, which comes to the ———— Theatre on ————.

Advance Notes.

As usual, Universal has surrounded Harry Carey with a notable cast in his newest production, "Overland Red," in which he will be seen at the ———— Theatre on ————. Prominent in his support are Vola Vale, Harold Goodwin, Charles LeMoyne, David Gally, Charles Anderson and Joe Harris.

Harry Carey, the virile western star, known to millions of screen patrons affectionately as Cheyenne Harry and the Ace of the Saddle, is to appear at the ———— Theatre on ———— in his latest Universal production, "Overland Red." The photodrama is based on the popular novel of the same name by Henry Herbert Knibbs.

Advance Story.

"OVERLAND RED," the widely read novel by H. H. Knibbs, has been adapted to the screen and produced by Universal with Harry Carey as the star. The photodrama, said to be among the best yet presented by the famous Ace of the Saddle, is to be shown at the ———— Theatre on ————, and every theatregoer who enjoyed "A Gun Fighting Gentleman," "Marked Men" and the many other Harry Carey successes of the past few years will undoubtedly be on hand to be amused asd thrilled by his latest production.

Lynn Reynolds, the wizard of the open air photodrama, the man who directed "The Brute Breaker" and other virile film productions recently shown, supervised the filming of "Overland Red" and, aided by an impressive story and splendid cast, he has succeeded in creating another Harry Carey masterpiece.

In "Overland Red" Harry Carey appears as a knight of the road who happens upon a dying man on the desert, in whose pockets he finds some gold and a queer map evidently indicating the location of a secret mine. Red still retains the instincts of a former gentility, and, before this incident had attracted the attention of Louise Alcarme, an eastern girl coming west on the Overland Limited. A dishonest sheriff, who suspects the presecne of a gold mine, arrests Red for the murder of the prospector in the hope that he will divulge the secret. He escapes and outwits the sheriff through the aid of the girl on the train. After a series of the most thrilling situations, in which humor and romance are cleverly mingled, Red, now a man of wealth, finds delight in the happiness of the people he has befriended.

Prominent in the star's support are Vola Vale, Harold Goodwin, Charles LeMoyne, David Gally

About the Star.

IT is scarcely necessary to add a single word to the many that have already been used in praise and description of Harry Carey, the star of "Overland Red," which is announced for next ———— at the ———— Theatre. With a record of many years on the stage and screen, with one striking success following another since he has been associated with Universal as a star, Harry Carey has a following that is exceeded by none and is generally recognized as the foremost portrayer of western types in filmdom.

Harry Carey, off the screen, is entirely different from the Cheyenne Harry of the films, notwithstanding that he is a great lover of the outdoors and devoted to his dogs and horses. The son of a prominent judge in New York City, Carey was educated at the Hamilton Military Institute and later took a course in law.

Before embarking on a legal career he was stung by the stage bug and became associated with a stock company in Brooklyn. Later he wrote the play "Montana" and starred in it for a number of years, following that with another play of his own creation, "The Heart of Alaska."

Having written several scenarios which were accepted by D. W. Griffith some eight years ago, he finally began acting in the films. He specialized in "heavies" and became known as "The Biograph Burglar." His popularity soon advanced him to stardom, and for over four years he has been giving the screen superb portrayals of keen, virile, hard-riding, American types.

When not acting before the camera, Mr. Carey spends his time on his vast ranch in Southern California, looking after his fine live stock and enjoying the contents of his excellent library.

Harry Carey, Universal star who is to be seen at the ———— Theatre on ———— in his most recent screen success, "Overland Red," is probably the most popular portrayer of western types in motion pictures. Carey was a successful star on the dramatic stage, a recognized playwright, and a master of the sports and pastimes of the range and plains before he began acting before the camera.

In the four years that Harry Carey has been a screen star he has appeared in about two dozen productions. The first one was a success and his features have been constantly improving. Within the last six months he has been seen in such big hits as "The Rider of the Law," "A Gun Fightin' Gentleman" and "Marked Men," and at the ———— Theatre next ———— he will be seen in his newest Universal photodrama, "Overland Red."

AN aged prospector is found dying of thirst on the desert by Overland Red, a tramp retaining the gentlemanly instincts of better days, and Collie, a boy whom Red had befriended. On the prospector's person they find a quantity of gold and papers purporting to give the location of a secret mine. They bury the gold and papers near the railroad tracks. After the body has been taken to the nearest town by a section gang, Red and Collie are camped near the roadbed, when an overland train passes. A girl on the observation platform notices the two tramps and tosses them a rose. She is Louise Alcarme, back from the East to visit her father at the Moonstone Ranch.

Just then "Silent" Saunders, the crooked sheriff comes up and arrests Red and Collie. Saunders knows of the dead prospector and believes the two tramps could shed light on the location of the mine.

They are incarcerated but later escape from jail, while Saunders is planning to charge Red with murdering the prospector in the hope of forcing information.

Louise comes upon Red and Collie as they are camped in the desert near the Moonstone ranch. While she is talking with them, Saunders comes in pursuit. There is a bit of gun-play and Red escapes on Louise's horse. Louise persuades the boy to accept work on her father's ranch.

Red meets Winthrop, a wealthy Easterner on the desert for his health, and the two seek out the dead prospector's mine and start work. It proves to be a rich location.

The sheriff and his companions follow Collie when he goes to join Red at the mine and the boy is shot in the back. He is taken to the Moonstone ranch where he recovers under Louise's care, while Red and a number of men from the ranch go to avenge Collie. Saunders and two of his accomplices are killed in a desperate gun battle.

Red at last discovers that the prospector they found dying was Louise's uncle and had left the claim to her. He and Collie decide they must give up their dreams of wealth. Louise overhears them and declares they must all be equal partners.

Collie and Louise have fallen in love and as they plan their future, Red goes quietly away, relinquishing without a word the greatest dream of his life.

"Overland Red" didn't like the jail he was in, so he left it, a tramp fleeing from the law. You should see him return to that town, as the climax in the Universal production, "Overland Red."

His little world of dreams came tumbling about him. She was the girl he secretly loved, the man was his best friend. He stifled his longing without a word and they never knew. That's Harry Carey in "Overland Red."

She wouldn't accept his present. He mustn't even keep her glove. But she sent him her glove later and gave him all that a woman has to give. There's a big heart-appeal in "Overland Red."

They were two hobos. They stumbled upon a gold mine worth a million, but learned it belonged to someone else. They could have said nothing and kept it. Did they? See Harry Carey in "Overland Red."

A cultured girl on a train throws a rose to two tramps camped near the tracks in the outskirts of a desert town. Later she marries one of them. The story is told in "Overland Red."

The Story of Rubber

TWENTY years ago "experts" said that the demand for rubber, by reason of the coming of the automobile, was in excess of the supply, and that if the automobile industry was to be developed much further it would be necessary to find some other resilient substance from which to make tires. Nothing of the kind has happened. Rubber is still being used for automobile tires and for a thousand other purposes not dreamed of in the year 1900.

Whence comes the rubber? That question was asked of Harry Levey, managing director of the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, some eight months ago and he made up his mind to find the answer. The answer has just reached New York in tin cans—tin cans filled with some thirty thousand feet of negative motion picture film made by Roswell Johnson, of the Universal-Educational staff, in Sumatra and other parts of the Far East.

According to letters received from Johnson, he has lived a life of adventure since he started out to make a celluloid history of the rubber industry. His first stop for work was at Sumatra, where he found that an American automobile tire manufacturing company has developed from some twenty thousand acres of jungle land a rubber plantation that looks like Central Park. Only American enterprise, directed by an American, could have brought about such a development from the tropical jungle with native labor to depend upon. The man who did it is William Vaughn, who is shown in one of the accompanying illustrations.

Aside from the rubber industry, Mr. Johnson filmed the natives of Sumatra and Borneo, their manner of living and the scenic wonders of the Far East. When he had finished with the islands he went on to India whence he is sending additional thousands of feet of film. All this material, including the story of rubber, is to be released by the Universal-Educational Department for theatrical showing. In Sumatra and in Borneo, as well as in other wilder islands, Mr. Johnson found interest in motion pictures as keen as it is on Broadway, particularly among the feminine part of the population. He has sent back many try-outs of Far Eastern Mary Pickfords and Dorothy Phillipses for the inspection of film producers and the general public. His picture of a dramatic play given in Sumatra by means of characters painted on palm leaves, after the fashion of a marionette show, is something new for the United States and undoubtedly will create a sensation when shown. Some of the palm leaf plays run for months, Mr. Johnson says.

"I was amazed to learn of the wonderful accomplishment of American industry in this far-away part of the world" says Mr. Johnson in one of his letters, quaintly typed by a Chinese girl on an American typewriter. "But everywhere I have traveled it has been the same. Americans never realize the greatness of our country until they get away from it and see what fellow-Americans are doing toward the development of the world. Making a rubber garden out of virgin jungle is only one of the things I have seen."

Mr. Johnson developed his pictures at night with the aid of Chinese laboratory helpers. He found that the Sumatra sunshine was more brilliant and better adapted to motion pictures than even the sunshine of southern California. Going on with his personal experiences, Mr. Johnson says:

"The Governor of Siak got me to film his capital to show American mayors how a city should be run. He gave me an elephant for a Christmas present, but I don't know how I am going to get him home."

The Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal, under the personal supervision of Harry Levey, is working night and day on these Far East wonder pictures and they will be ready for circulation within a few weeks under the Universal-Exhibitor plan of direct payments.

Art Atmosphere in "Burnt Wings"

WHEN Frank Mayo, Universal star, learned that in his next production, "Burnt Wings," he would be called upon to play the part of an artist, he set about the task of familiarizing himself with the routine of studio life.

Edward Scholl, the well known New York painter and a friend of Mayo's, is at present engaged on a number of sittings in Los Angeles, and has opened a studio in the Southern Californa city. The actor spent several days with the artist, learning how to adjust an easel, how to handle a palette, brush and stump and how to feel at home in a smock and tam. "Burnt Wings" is the title under which this unit of the S R O 12 will be released. As "The Primrose Path" it was a huge stage success by Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law" and "The Thirteenth Chair," and was used as a starring vehicle by the author's gifted wife, Margaret Wycherly. Its scenes are laid in Paris and New York. It is being directed at Universal City by Christy Cabanne, who is himself a successful artist. He secured a dozen young women students of the California Art Institute.

In addition there are five French actors appearing in "The Primrose Path." Marcel Blanc plays the part of a doctor; Rene Guignard appears as a French officer; Meyer Ouhayon portrays the role of an art connoisseur, while Etta Ormond and Eugene Ponyet appear as the proprietors of a lodging house in the students' quarter of the French capital.

Universal Program "drags 'em in"

Canadian Universal Film Co.,
Calgary, Alta.
My Dear Mr. Kohn:—

Kindly send me a revised schedule of the Century Wild Animal Comedies we shall be receiving in the near future. This request is being made as I feel these comedies are worthy of considerable exploitation. In view of the standard maintained in them during the past four or five, I intend in future to feature these comedies. They are positive knockouts with our patrons here.

And, whilst writing, let me go on record in saying that I consider the new "Big Twelve" to be the best, and most consistent, pictures that money can buy. We ran "Loot" last Saturday to solid capacity, and had patrons waiting out in a snowstorm until ten-fifteen at night waiting to get in. Honestly, I don't know if its "Elmo the Mighty," your features, or your comedies, that "drag 'em in" for us, but the fact remains that we do the biggest Saturday business in this city of any of the three houses with our Universal Program. Let the opposition keep their opposition programs—it's Universal for us.

Sincerely yours,
LEN S. BROWN,
Manager Colonial Theatre,
Lethbridge Alta.

P. S.—And please remember I've been running Universal since the old Licensed and Independent Days.

"THE DAY SHE PAID"

Story by Fannie Hurst. Scenario by Hal Hoadley. Five Reels. Universal.
Reviewed by MARION RUSSELL.

An abundance of atmosphere and heart-interest of a convincing kind make this a very acceptable picture. The presentation is of a high grade, featuring manniking in a swell dress establishment, reminiscent of "Lombardi, Ltd.," but sufficiently original to register many dramatic situations.

From The Billboard.

"Overland Red"

as the Critic of the News sees it—

THERE is no denying the strength of this feature. The Harry Carey offerings have been conceived on such program foundations that when a work of the calibre of "Overland Red" happens along it is entitled to the highest praise by virtue of its vividness and vitality. No matter if the theme is not entirely logical the director has so treated it that it carries a semblance of reality. The star assumes the role of a tramp here—a different characterization for him, and so colorful is it drawn and executed that the figure will be long remembered.

It is a story which is strong in all the necessary ingredients, and no doubt it would score even though Lynn Reynolds gave it an ordinary production. But undoubtedly he was inspired by the rich assortment of incidents and the picturesque characters, and so the picture is embellished with high lights (they look like Reynolds' own), and richly scenic backgrounds. The plot moves forward with ever-increasing action, although this element is bewildering at times, because of its rapidity. Carey's tramp, in some respects, is his best contribution to the screen. He makes it a rollicking likeable figure, who accepts everything with a keen sense of humor, but who is resourceful enough to take care of himself and those who have earned his affection.

The picture is well fortified with romantic moments and the humor and pathos are elements which are emphasized for their full values. Mr. Carey is supported by Harold Goodwin and Vola Vale, two players who are genuine in their interpretations. The former may be put down as one of the most capable juveniles on the screen. He is tremendously in earnest and always natural. H. H. Knibbs is the author of this different Western.

Two-Reel Century Comedy
Featuring Century Lions

(Copyright 1920 by Century Comedy Co.)

CIRUS was the man about the farm, chief of police, sheriff, and everything imaginable in his home town. He was young and handsome and in love with one of his Mother's summer boarders. The summer boarder, Lois Neilson, had long forgotten whether it was winter or summer she was waiting for.

The chickens (the feathery kind) were very fond of Cirus and when he slumbered beneath the haystack, they fondly pecked at his toes. Jumbo, the dog, chased the chickens and ducks and a funny situation occured when one duck turned back and chased the dog.

A gem-laden boat docks at their port, and when two crooks come to Cirus with a hard luck story that they are taking things easy, he helps them inspect the town.

On the same boat, some stowaways come to life and make their escape. These stowaways happen to be about six nice 'n pretty lions, with teeth and everything. They jazz up the town, frighten everybody onto the stove in Cirus's kitchen and we leave them to a roasting time, with the lions ready to devour the burnt offerings.

"AT THE MERCY OF MONSTERS"

Stella	Kathleen O'Connor
Westcott	Jack Perrin
Enright	Henry Barrows
Lacey	Leonard Clapham
Celeste	Gertrude Astor
Lion Man	Mack Wright
Bill	Harry De More

THE hand car on which Westcott had been tied with Stella, who has made a leap upon it and is endeavoring to release him, goes over an embankment into a pool of water, but Westcott and Stella manage to swim out, unhurt.

Enright, Lacey and Celeste, seeing the Sheriff and his poose riding up, steal Westcott's car. Westcott and Stella are taken by the posse back to town.

Again back at the mine, Westcott confesses to Stella that he is out of funds and that he must shut down the mine as he has not the money to pay his workmen. Stella tells him that she has some money due her from an inheritance, and offers to turn this over to him for an interest in the mine, an offer which Westcott gladly accepts.

Pay day is past due, and Westcott's miners, egged on by Bill, one of Lacey's men, are in an ugly mood. Stella receives word that the money has arrived and she hastily rides to town for it. Learning of this, Bill notifies Enright and Lacey, who determine to capture her on her way back. From ambush Stella is dragged from her horse, taken to the side of the road and tied up. Enright and Lacey leave with the money, and Celeste is left to guard her.

But the Lion Man appears, releases Stella and assists her to tie Celeste to the tree. Telling Stella to wait, the Lion Man tosses in a note at Enright's cabin stating that if the money is not left at a spot near the cabin, at once, Celeste's life will be the forfeit.

Enright and Lacey replace the money in the box in which it had been shipped, as a plan comes to Lacey. He substitutes for the money an infernal machine, placed in the box in such a way that whoever opens it will be blown to pieces. This box is left at the designated place and carried by the Lion Man to Stella.

Urged on by Bill, the miners have surrounded Westcott's cabin and are angrily demanding their pay. Westcott is trying to put them off until Stella's arrival, and is wondering what is detaining her, as she rides up.

The men angrily take the box from her, and opening it, a terrific explosion occurs that wounds many of them. Now thoroughly enraged, and believing that the box was only a trick to destroy them, the men surround the cabin in which Westcott and Stella take refuge, pile brush about it and set it on fire. The cabin begins to blaze furiously, Westcott and Stella overcome by the smoke and heat, sink to the floor.

CAST

The Stranger	Elmo Lincoln
Edith Stilwell	Louise Lorraine
Robert Stilwell, her father,	William Chapman
Paul Horton	Ray Watson
Dan Bulger	Frank Ellis
Guy Hatherton	Gordon McGregor
Checko	V. L. Barnes

AT this moment the Mystery Man appears on the scene. He shoots, driving the gang away, and then draws Elmo up to safety by means of the rope—disappearing as suddenly as he had appeared. Elmo continues to Edith's rescue on foot, and meets Checko, who has discovered that Dan has found Edith at his cave and made off with her. With almost human intelligence, the man-ape undertakes to lead Elmo to the rescue. In the meantime, Guy overtakes Dan and the girl. Guy wants to have her killed, but Dan refuses, saying he wants her for himself. The two men begin to quarrel fiercely. Elmo comes on the scene. Edith, unconscious, lies on the river bank. Elmo, on the cliffs above, swings to a tall, slender tree, which he weighs down till he can reach Edith, whom he picks up while the men are fighting. Getting back to the cliffs, he makes off, followed by Guy and Dan, who have discovered the ruse. Elmo and Edith now hurry to Guy's house, hoping to there find the bogus lease. However, the mystery man has beaten them to it, and already taken the lease from Guy's desk. Elmo is therefore unable to find it. They discover that Lucille is in the kitchen helping the cook. They plan to capture her and make her tell where the lease is. They are successful in getting the girl, but she is unable to tell them what they want to know. The cook now discovers that Lucille is a prisoner and leaps through the window for help. His apron catches on the stove, overturning it. The cook finds Guy and Dan and tells them of Lucille's predicament. They hurry to the rescue. Elmo forces Lucille to hide with him in a closet, while Edith tries to pass herself off as Lucille, thus helping to fool Guy into telling her where the lease is hidden. But warned by the cook, Guy and Dan know her for Edith Stilwell and make her their prisoner. At this moment Elmo comes from the closet—a desperate fight follows—Elmo is hurled through a trap into the cellar below. But now it is discovered that the overturned stove has set the house on fire. The flames leap up. Guy and Dan manage to escape, but Lucille, overcome by the smoke, falls through the trap into the cellar, where Elmo lies, knocked down by the stove as it fell through the kitchen floor.

Deputy	Andy Waldron

JIM DAWSON and his wife started their married life with a different viewpoint. Jim trusted nobody—Maisie trusted everybody. By a series of incidents the pendulum was swung the other way and Jim began to be as trusting as Maisie.

Whereupon the very first person who happened along with a hard-luck story was taken straight to Jim's heart. But the person in question happened to be one of a gang of bank-thieves and the result of Jim's trust was that he himself was robbed of a thousand dollars and made the goat in a little matter of the escape of one of the bank-robbers from jail. Jim tackled the situation, recaptured the robber and recovered his thousand dollars, but at the last minute he came near being put out of business by a trick of one of the thieves.

To his rescue came Ping, the Chinese cook, whom Jim had turned out of the house on the previous day on an entirely unjust suspicion. So Jim came to the conclusion that trust was a matter of fifty-fifty—trust and judgment.

THE famous Ida of the song, is not the only one who loved sweet apple cider as little Leon Wolcott of Redbank, N. J., will testify. He discovered a new use for his father's auto jack and sells his cidar to passersby. Mr. Victor Daniel Brenner is the man who designed the Lincoln Penny. He is a Russian born sculptor who has won scores of the world's most coveted awards for his art. Then we are given a glimpse of Dame Fashion as she will appear in her summer togs. It is the fashion now to give exclusive models names to fit them, so your new gown of silver lace with a motif of embroidered roses will carry the picturesque name of The Three Roses, while a daring combination of red, blue and green satin, taffeta and straw will bear the interesting name of Poppy. The amazing part of Japanese movies is the ability of the actors to appear and vanish at convenient moments. Just when the villian is going to murder the heroine-bing—she vanishes into thin air. This issue of the New Screen Magazine closes with some funny answers that children attending the schools in New York City's ghetto, gave to examination questions.

"The Story of the Jaguar."

Major Jack Allen Animal Hunt Special

THE Jaguar Club composed of fearless hunters, was always good for a yarn, for one could not belong to the Club unless he had captured a jaguar dead or alive, but no member of the club seemed to think that one could be captured alive. For that reason Dick Harraty felt that he was taking the long end of a sure-thing bet when he wagered Major Jack Allen that there wasn't a man on earth who could capture a Jaguar alive.

Two days had elapsed now, and the Major had not been heard from.

"I knew I'd win that bet," said Harraty. "That beast is more than ferocious. I know, because I took one once, but I had to shoot him," and he launched into a highly spiced account of how he had been forced to shoot a jaguar in the Brazilian jungles. "So you see, fellows," he said, as he concluded his narrative, "why I felt perfectly safe in wagering Allen $5,000 that he couldn't capture one alive."

The remark was scarcely out of his lips when a fast driven automobile wheeled into the gateway and stopped on the lawn. Dick and his friends ran down to meet the car for Major Jack Allen, "the man who never used a gun," had just debarked over the starboard wheel.

"Sorry, Dick. You loose the bet. Our friend the jaguar is in our midst and very much alive," and he pointed to a taupaulin heaving violently in the tonneau.

Dick wasn't convinced and he raised a corner of the rubber and let it fall again with an exclamation, while the Major launched into the details of the jaguar hunt without waiting to be asked. The three friends were so taken up with the story that when Allen had finished they started to walk to the club house.

"One moment, please," said Allen. "I believe there is a $5,000 check coming to me, is there not?" And there was.

ARE YOU GUILTY?

No. 258 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President, Universal Film Manufacturing Company

ONE of the worst evils practiced by small exhibitors is the use of mounted posters.

Of course no first-class exhibitor follows this practice. He is too good a showman, too good a merchant.

In other lines of business, the man with goods to sell puts his best foot foremost. Even the smallest merchant in the cheapest street makes the very best window-display he can possibly dig up. He does not put his worn-out, fly-specked goods in the window. He uses his best. In this respect he is a better showman than the theatre man who uses mounted posters.

Mounted posters are bound to misrepresent your show. They are dirty, cracked and mussy after being used only once. They are anything but an attractive invitation for people to enter your house.

The excuse given for the use of mounted posters is that the small exhibitor "can't afford" to buy fresh, new, clean paper. The truth of the matter is that he can't afford to use anything but clean paper.

The true showman, the successful showman, never lets the people see the seamy side of his business. The first principle of showmanship in any line of business on earth is a good clean front. You can't have a clean, attractive front with dirty, second-hand posters. You might as well smear your front with dirty paint, never wash your lobby, and let things go to pot generally as to try to get people to come in by advertising your show with posters which repel!

Theatres all over the world are doing the biggest business in history. If you are not participating in this remarkable prosperity, maybe I've given you a tip on one of your worst failings as a showman!

SEX AND THE SCREEN

A Defense of Movies as They Are Censored

To the Editor of The Tribune.

Sir: An item in "The Tribune," under the headline "Churchill Denounces Stage," has just come to our attention. From the clipping it appears that Thomas W. Churchill, formerly president of the Board of Education, denounced the stage and motion pictures in an address before the National Motion Picture League, at the Broadway Tabernacle, declaring that the majority of present-day plays and screen attractions depend for their popularity on "sensationalism and sex appeal."

The National Board of Review, a volunteer organization reviewing about 99 per cent of all dramatic pictures exhibited in this country and co-operating throughout the country with numerous groups and public officials having in charge the local regulation of motion pictures, is compelled to take issue with this sweeping statement. It is admitted that the motion picture, like the play, must deal in thrills if it is to make an appeal to the popular audience. But to present thrills upon the screen or the stage is certainly no crime. It is done in direct answer to popular demand. The great power of the motion picture is that it supplies thrill and romance to the great mass of people in whose lives the thrilling and the adventurous are singularly missing.

The pictures relieve a suppression. They allow people whose existence is drab to imagine themselves as heroes and heroines. Sensationalism may be quite as innocuous as matter-of-fact realism. To imply that sensationalism is necessarily related to indecency and unfitness for the mind of the general public is erroneous in a high degree. As for "sex appeal," the pictures are less culpable—if, indeed, the presentation of sex, the great fundamental in life, is culpable—than the press and the popular magazines. Aside from this, to attempt to divorce sex from drama or from any presentation or revelation of life is to take the motive power away from the vehicle.

Does Mr. Churchill remember that probably in no great play on the English-speaking stage or on any other stage, and in no great book in any language, has the element of sex been entirely subordinated or left out?

The gist of the matter is that opinions differ, and what may be objectionable to Mr. Churchill may be entirely unobjectionable to his neighbor, who is as well qualified to hold an opinion as Mr. Churchill. The criticism of the motion pictures is largely based on an attempt to define by rule of thumb what is moral and what is not moral. It is a mischievous desire to guard one's neighbor from influences from which one's neighbor in most cases does not wish to be guarded.

Mr. Churchill is further alleged to have announced that an inquiry is being made in the public schools of New York to determine just what effect motion pictures have on the minds of young children. In this connection it is interesting to note that an investigation recently carried on by the National Board of Review into the charge that the motion picture was responsible for a large proportion of juvenile delinquency conclusively proves that this is not the fact. The most experienced persons in the work of juvenile courts almost without exception have declared and gone on record that the screen's connection with the cause of juvenile error is practically nil.

WILTON BARRETT,
Secretary the National Board of Review.

New York, Feb. 13, 1920.

It's just that difference between a feature and a 'filler'--the difference between pictures the audience makes it a point to see and pictures they feel like walking out on, that makes or mars the value of a News Service--which is the reason why exhibitors straight across the country prefer the service whose facilities, equipment and efficiency give them the big world events first--while interest is fresh and keen. More exhibitors subscribe to The Big Three {International News / Universal Current Events / Hearst News}---released through Universal --- than to a-n-y o-t-h-e-r N-E-W-S S-e-r-v-i-c-e.

THE biggest houses in the country are playing these Century Lion Comedies and are making them regular features of their programs. The reason is—a Century Lion Comedy is, first of all, good comedy, and second, it adds the supreme joy (for grown-ups no less than kids) of seeing the big kittens romp in at crucial moments and send the fun up to one-hundred-and-three-per-cent. You can judge for yourself as to the popularity of the Century Lions by the fact that the first of these comedies made such a hit that it was at once followed by the production of nine more—and they're calling for them to-day faster than ever. See any one of the list given here at your nearest Universal Exchange—you'll book them all—they're all howls!

Universal Film for Coffee Week

"STRONG as death, hot as h——l and sweet as the love of a woman"—that was the great Duke of Talleyrand's idea of the right kind of coffee as he expressed it after one of the Napoleonic battles. Charles Dicken's idea of American coffee, expressed after his memorable visit, was "a mess of slops." But since the days of Dickens and Napoleon the world, including statesmen, war heroes and authors, has learned more about coffee, good coffee, and how to make and drink it.

"Coffee Week" in the United States, by mandate of the National Coffee Roasters' Association, the Joint Coffee Trade Publicity Committee, grocery associations and the general public, has been fixed for the week of March 29—April 4, when there will be great doings. One of the principal features of the celebration will be the exhibition in the motion picture theatres of the country of a motion picture entitled "The Gift of Heaven," especially made by Harry Levey, of the Universal's educational department.

If anyone is doubtful as to what beverage has stepped into the niche vacated by King Alcohol that person can peruse a few figures just compiled from Custom House reports and judge for himself. In the last six months of 1919 every individual in the United States drank on an average of 45 more cups of coffee than he or she drank in the last six months of 1918. The increase in coffee drinking in the United States during the last six months of 1919 over the last six months of 1918, measured in cups, reaches the enormous total of 5,000,000,000 cups. Figuring on the basis of 110,000,000 population in the United States the average of slightly over 45 cups per person is reached.

Continuing with statistics, it is shown that the amount of coffee consumed per capita in the United States is between 12 and 13 pounds—or 1,212,000,000 pounds a year for the whole country.

These figures stamp the United States as the greatest coffee drinking nation in the world. Yet how many people know whence coffee comes, the numerous processes through which it must pass before it is placed on the table? That the people of the United States might become better acquainted with their country's most popular beverage, as proved by statistics, Mr. Levey has produced a picture which takes the patrons of the theatres through the Brazilian coffee plantations and shows them in the most complete detail how coffee is grown, picked, sorted, shipped, roasted, sold and how it finally reaches the table of the consumer.

Months were spent by a corps of directors and cameramen in securing the proper scenes in South America, and weeks were consumed in the Universal's studio at Fort Lee, N. J., the Biltmore Hotel, old coffee houses throughout the country and other locations in securing other scenes for the pictures.

Interwoven throughout the picture is a romance in

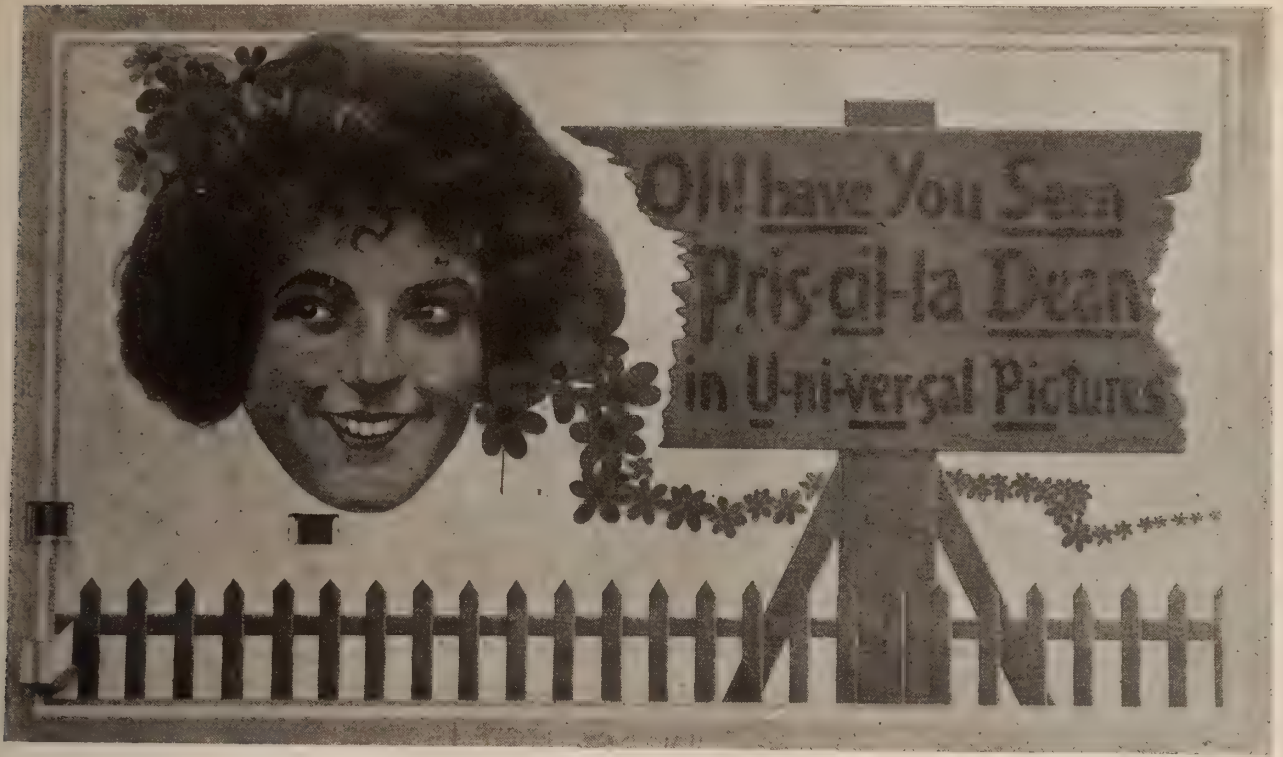
Oh! Have You Seen Pris-cil-la Dean



The biggest painted sign on Broadway and probably in the world.

"OH! Have You Seen Priscilla Dean in Universal Pictures?"

If you haven't something's wrong in Denmark—or somewhere. The sparkling eyes, the pearly teeth and the mischevious smile of Universal's vivacious star now smile down on bright Broadway from the biggest painted sign in New York and probably the world over.

It was originally planned to have a display of the usual size painted on the building where this sign is located. After the sign painter had looked at Priscilla's likeness, he threw up his hands and struck—struck for more space!

"I like to do good things in a big way," he said. "I couldn't do justice to those eyes and that smile and the dimples and—oh—I want more space, or I won't paint the sign."

As a result there is a sign which reaches from the fifth floor to the roof of the ten-story Mecca Building at Broadway and Forty-ninth Street. The sign extends the full width of the building which runs through from Broadway to Seventh Avenue.

And so Priscilla Dean's smile now beams gaily down, morning, noon and night from the biggest painted sign in the metropolis, on the greatest of all pleasure thoroughfares in the world—the Great White Way.

As for Priscilla—she has just finished the final scenes of "The Virgin of Stamboul", Universal's forthcoming special, under the direction of Tod Browning. This production is based on H. H. Van Loan's picturesque story of Constantinople which is almost ready for release. It is Universal-Jewel's biggest effort to date.

AT LAST PRISCILLA BATHES

"ME for a Turkish bath," said Priscilla Dean when the camera clicked its last click on "The Virgin of Stamboul," her latest and greatest Universal photodrama which Jewel is about to release in eight reels.

"I'm going to soak for a month, too," she added as she disappeared with a can of scouring powder, a curry comb and all the refined equipment of the Turkish bath.

For five months Priscilla Dean has been compelled to wear a complexion not her own. She was forced, at the beginning of the picture, to stain her skin a copper-red for her role in the amazing photoplay. Because it was too much trouble to put on and take off the stain, and because Tod Browning, her director, feared that she would not be able to exactly duplicate the shade, she wore the paint for five weary months, with the exception of an occasional from Saturday to Monday week end.

Now that the big production is finished the beautiful Priscilla is going to resume her own alabaster-like complexion. It will require a long Turkish bath to remove the Turkish complexion but she is going to get rid of the color if she has to sunburn and peel.

Publicity for "Burnt Wings"

FOR THE HERALD

WHEN Ned Templeton was sick and starving in Paris his pretty wife sacrificed the most precious thing in a woman's life to nurse him back to health and strength. He thought the money came from her father, who had really disowned Joan for marrying the young artist. They returned to America where success came. But with it came an estrangement brought about by a wealthy art collector whose daughter had fallen in love with Templeton.

Wealth and fame were Templeton's, but his little wife had gone quietly away thinking he had ceased to care and she was struggling to make a decent living as an artist's model. Then Templeton learned all about it, the sacrifice she had made and the efforts of his rich patron to buy him for his daughter.

The story is inimitably told in the Universal production of "Burnt Wings," from Bayard Veiller's great stage success, "The Primrose Path," and is ably directed by Christy Cabanne. Frank Mayo, the popular Universal star, as Ned Templeton, is supported by Josephine Hill, Betty Blythe, Rudolph Christians, Beatrice Burnham and other players of note.

ADVANCED STORY

THE bitterness of seeing the man for whom she had given more even than her life drifting away from her when success came to him was almost more than pretty Joan Templeton could bear. It wasn't her fault, nor his, but it seemed that her life was to be wrecked by the very sacrifice she had made for him.

They were starving in a Paris attic—Joan and her young artist husband, Ned Templeton. Sickness came when hunger had left an opening for it in their squalid little home. They must have money. Joan was pretty. There is always money for a pretty girl in Paris.

The story is told with a powerful appeal in the Universal production of "Burnt Wings," coming to the ———— ———— Theatre on ————.

Frank Mayo, the star, appears as Templeton, the promising young artist, while Josephine Hill is his heroic little wife, Joan. They return to America and meet James Cartwright, played by Rudolph Christians, and his daughter Helen, played by Betty Blythe.

Cartwright is a wealthy art collector and he commissions Templeton to paint his portrait at the request of his daughter, who falls in love with the young artist. They drift on toward the brink of a love tragedy, until, as a final punch to the story, Joan tells her husband what happened when he lay sick in Paris. The story is developed and brought to a smashing climax in a masterful way by Christy Cabanne, the director.

ABOUT THE STAR

THE American screen knows few actors as well equipped for stardom as Frank Mayo, who is to be seen in his latest success, "Burnt Wings," at the ———— Theatre next ————. The son of Edwin Mayo, an actor of enviable reputation and the grandson of Frank Mayo, the idol of the American playgoing public of the last generation, young Frank went on the stage at the age of five and played in his grandfather's company until the elder man's death, three years later. At the age of eight young Mayo was placed in the Peekskill Military Academy, up the Hudson, and he remained there until he was sixteen, when he decided he had received enough schooling.

Then followed his first grown-up part on the stage—an important role in "The Squawman," in a company organized especially for London. Mayo made a hit in England and remained there for eight years, supporting all the leading dramatic stars. Returning to America before the war he decided to take a whirl at the film game, winning stardom about two years ago, when he became associated with the Universal studios. With inherited dramatic talent, good looks, a fine physique and the ability to portray any sort of a role from cave man to a matinee idol, Mr. Mayo finds the most congenial role of his career as the artist in "Burnt Wings," in which local theatregoers will see him on ————at the ———— Theatre.

THE STORY

JOAN, a pretty country girl who eloped and married a struggling young artist, is living with her husband, Ned Templeton, in Paris. They are happy in their love but the road to success is a rough one and they are in desperate straits financially when Ned is taken sick.

The doctor prescribes rest and plenty of clean, wholesome food. The landlord is threatening eviction because the rent is unpaid. He suggests a "way out," telling Joan that no pretty girl need be without money in Paris.

She is horrified at the thought, but in desperation she finally goes out on the street and meets a rich American, from whom she receives sufficient money to nurse Ned back to health and strength. Joan's husband thinks the money came from her father.

In America Ned's work attracts attention and James Cartwright a wealthy art collecter, engages the young artist to paint his portrait at the behest of his daughter, Helen, who has been impressed by Templeton.

Helen falls in love with the artist and Cartwright, anxious to gratify his daughter's wishes and hoping to have Templeton for a son-in-law, causes an estrangement between Ned and Joan.

The patronage of the wealthy art collector brings Ned success, but through the machinations of Cartwright, Templeton and his wife have drifted apart, each thinking the other has ceased to care. Cartwright finally goes to Joan, who is having trouble earning her living as a model, and offers her money to give up her husband to his daughter.

He persuades Joan to come to the Cartwright home that night, saying he will prove to her that she no longer occupies a place in her husband's affections. He extends a similar invitation to Templeton.

They all meet there and Joan, stung by the injustice of it all, finally tells her husband before Cartwright and his daughter how she obtained the money that saved Ned from starvation in Paris. It was Cartwright himself whom she met that night on the street. She reveals his actions in trying to keep them apart and then quietly slips away while Ned is in the midst of a stormy scene with Cartwright.

Suddenly Templeton realizes that his wife has gone. He overtakes her in the garden and all misunderstanding is cleared away, their love blazing up bigger and brighter than ever before.

ADVERTISING DISPLAY LINES

She made a woman's supreme sacrifice and then nearly lost him. But love finally triumphs in "Burnt Wings."

She refused to sell her husband because—because she loved him. See Frank Mayo in "Burnt Wings."

Her husband was sick. He needed food, medicine. They were penniless. But there is always money for a pretty girl in Paris. Was she justified? Judge for yourself in "Burnt Wings."

One woman had wealth, beauty, every worldly thing. The other had made for him the greatest sacrifice a woman could—and she was his wife. The story is powerfully told in "Burnt Wings."

They told her she was blocking her husband's success, that he had ceased to love her, that she could give him up. But she wasn't, he hadn't, and she wouldn't. That is pretty Joan's predicament in "Burnt Wings."

All the powerful appeal of Bayard Veiller's great stage success, "The Primrose Path," is brought out in "Burnt Wings," its screen adaptation produced by Universal.

WHEN you get a story with that hardest thing under the sun to find—the thing every author racks his brains for, what every director will lose sleep to lay hands on—the plot with a new twist, you don't have to be told here's something that will make a hit with your public. The first thing that struck all the critics of "The Forged Bride" was its brand new twist, which is one of the reasons why Harrison tells you "This is a good picture."

ADD to the powerful pull of this popular idol the fact that in "The Prince of Avenue 'A'" he is seen in a feature play that fits him as splendidly as his own dress clothes, and you will realize that here is an attraction with a double punch. "Humorous situations and elements of sentiment and pathos keep the spectator constantly interested, to say nothing of the colorful characterization," says the New York Review, while the Billboard adds—"Here are all the ingredients that make a picture successful—the fight scene alone will set the crowd howling with delight."

A UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

THELMA PERCY-7

THE latest addition to the ever increasing number of stage children who are "making good" on the screen is Thelma Percy, who has been engaged by Universal as leading lady with Eddie Polo in his latest serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," by Hope Loring.

Miss Percy, who is but seventeen years old, has been on the stage ever since she was nine, making her first appearance with Maude Adams as one of the fairies in "Peter Pan." Since then she has played children roles in a number of Broadway productions until her sister, Eileen Percy, made such a success in Universal and other motion pictures that she advised Thelma to come to California, where the "water's fine." It must have been then that she passed through Cleveland and was interviewed by the famous Billy Leyser of the Cleveland News, an interview which you will see on page 36 of this book.

Many other prominent film stars began their public career as children on the dramatic stage. Mary Pickford played with Belasco when she was in short frocks; Mary Miles Minter made a hit in "The Littlest Rebel" when she was six; Priscilla Dean played little Minna in "Rip Van Winkle" with Joseph Jefferson; Viola Dana began acting before she was ten; Ernest Truex was a child phenomenon on the stage when he was five years old; Josephine Hill was prima donna of the Pollard Lilliputians when she was four years old; Frank Mayo played little Dave in "Davy Crockett" with his famous grandfather when he was five years old; Dorothy Phillips was playing with a stock company in Baltimore when she was still a school girl; David Butler was playing children's parts in a San Francisco stock company of which his father was director. The list could be continued.

Universal Film for Coffee Week (Concluded from page 26)

which Ruth Dwyer plays the feminine lead. It is the general rule in America that coffee, to be palatable, must have sugar. Realizing this the directors and scenario writers of Universal's educational staff collaborated and wrote a romance around the story of coffee and they aver that Miss Dwyer supplies the necessary sweetening qualities by being as sweet as three lumps all by herself.

That the picture might be flawless from a technical angle before releasing it, Mr. Levey gave a private showing of "The Gift of Heaven" before a super-critical audience comprising noted coffee men of New York City. They unanimously stamped the picture with their approval and were particularly impressed with the more technical scenes showing the growing, drying and roasting processes.

The Hotel Biltmore's coffee room and some of the oldest and quaintest coffee houses that could be found in various parts of the country as well as other locations, figure in the picture which tends to make the film not only instructive but more entertaining than the usual run of educational pictures.

"The Gift of Heaven" will appeal to every housewife in America and every man who loves good coffee.

Harrison Says:

in regard to "Overland Red" with Harry Carey

HERE is a picture you should be proud to show. It is one of those that set ever heartstring to vibrating. It is the kind that refines the feelings, making a picture patron come back for more.

And don't think for a minute that there is anything extraordinary about the plot; for there is not. It is just human—a page from life. But in this very simplicity lies its strength as well as its charm; which is a conclusive proof that an author need not seek far to find suitable screen material. It lies close to his door. Though a Western, it is a picture any theatre could run. —Universal.

P. S. Business on "Elmo the Mighty" is still on the increase and it will be necessary to ask for police protection, as the crowds get so excited I am afraid they will break up my chairs. "Marked Men" Made Convicts Cry

MANY photoplays are advertised with a guaranty to "make strong men weep" but few are warranted to bring tears to the eyes of a convict. In a recent letter from Frederick Mark, chairman of the entertainment committee of the Mutual Welfare League, of New York's famous Sing Sing Prison, Universal received positive proof that one of its pictures, "Marked Men," starring Harry Carey, deeply affected the inmates of that institution.

Universal supplies Sing Sing with regular cinema programs, twice a week, free of charge. "Marked Men" recently shown there, deals with escaped convicts who are turned to the right through the influence of a waif.

"The story of how a little baby, found in the desert, led three escaped convicts into the way of being noble, God-fearing men," wrote Mark, "is told with infinite tenderness that leaves one with a lump in his throat, while some of the humorous scenes are tinged with a pathos that forces a tear through the smile. It was a good picture for us to see, indeed for any man or woman to see, I wish to thank Universal for the interest it has taken in the men here. More than one, heretofore a desperado, has been shown through pictures that it pays to go straight."

"BOY, stop that check."

"And boy, don't wind the clocks, feed the cat or answer the phone. Take a day, week, month or year off. Draw your pay for a couple o' years, take a note to my wife that I've lost my memory and wandered away—throw my trunk out the window and let the house burn down. I'm not in."

The boy tore a couple hundred pages off the calendar, tried to think of something that'd take two years to finish, decided to buy something on the installment plan, then wandered out around the state asylum to play with the squirrels.

Thelma Percy had sent in her card to see the boss. The card bore her reproduction which is pictured above. (No. It's on page thirty-four.) Editor. The boss looked so long and often at the card while swiving in his swivel chair that he contracted whirling sensations in his head.

The picture as you can plainly see, is one of descriptive attitude. Thelma is either a muscle dancer posing as looking at the muss the muscles are making in her arm, or she had the headache and is seen in the position of holding one's head trying to remember what occurred the night before, or she is taking a nap while standing.

The boss tried to figure out whether Thelma was a waitress in a Greek classic restaurant or a high diver with a circus. He wasn't sure and didn't care. He knew Thelma wasn't like anything he had out home—and was equally positive that she wasn't a relative of any of his wife's folks.

"This Jane," mused the boss as he wiggled his mustache, "is either an advertisement for some Rock of Gibraltar insurance company or the advance agent for a hokus-pokus outfit of dancing burlesque damsels. Anyhow, she's good to look upon."

And the black screen of forgetfulness fell between the boss and those dependent upon him. He opened the door and bade Thelma enter.

"Whither which?" asked the boss.

"I'm an actress," answered Thelma.

"Art from Heaven?" asked the boss.

"From New York," answered Thelma.

"'Tis the other place," mused the boss.

"I want to go into pictures," said the girl.

"What's holdin' you back?" asked the boss.

"An opportunity," said the girl.

"You're hired," said the boss, shifting gears on his mustache.

And Thelma went into moving pictures.

The boss claims credit for her advancement, and for the good judgment he showed in engaging her. Since his family left him he seeks only the Greek expression of beauty, not acquired by the eating of ham and or buckwheat cakes, or food with varying degrees of fat-producing power.

Anyhow, and seriously, Thelma Percy is Universal's new serial star. In a comparatively short time she has surprised the picture world with her artistic work, and has been acclaimed by sculptors and artists as one of the most perfect types of American beauty on the screen.

She is appearing next in Universal's big serial, "The Vanishing Dagger." Eddie Polo plays opposite her. Eddie, it is generally known, very recently broke his leg. He isn't recovering quite as rapidly as he should, which recalls to our mind that song of recent popularity about a man not wanting to get well.

Boy, come back to work.

The Full House Five

SOME bright individual in the Sales Department of the Universal conceived the idea that the uncertainty of the success of serial bookings could be eliminated and the run absolutely safeguarded to an exhibitor by an adaptation of the series plan of booking which has proven itself so satisfactory in the booking of feature pictures. It was a daring plan and if it could be put through would relieve the exhibitor from the greater part of his booking worry and would enable him to plan his serials almost a year in advance. Sure, it was a fine thing for the exhibitor, but could the production department at Universal City possibly manage to produce five serials at almost the same time? That was the big question. It was put up to the studios and Tarkington Baker, general manager, who is personally in charge of all production activities at Universal City, devised the plan of serial making which made it possible for the huge studios at the coast to put on five serials at once. It cost a lot of money, but it will be worth it in the end. And it will give the exhibitor something he has never had before.

That is how the Full House Five came into existence. Now a word about what constitutes this full year of serial successes. First there is "The Lion Man" with that pair of interesting and daring performers, Jack Perrin and Kathleen O'Connor and a cast of supporting players which includes J. Barney Sherry, Gertrude Astor, Leonard Clapham and Henry Barrows. The story was a famous novel entitled "The Strange Case of Cavendish" and the serial was directed by Albert Russell, brother of William Russell. The second serial in the series is "Elmo the Fearless," starring Elmo Lincoln. He is assisted by Louise Lorraine, a beautiful new leading lady, and Gordon McGregor, William Chapman, Frank Ellis, Ray Watson and V. L. Barnes. The story was written by Henry A. Gooden and was directed by J. P. McGowan.

"The Moon Riders," with Art Acord and Mildred Moore, is being directed by Reeves Eason, while Eddie Polo himself is directing the serial in which he is to appear as the star, "The Vanishing Dagger." Polo is to have a new leading lady also in Thelma Percy, whose sister Eileen has appeared in a number of Universal Pictures. The last serial in the series is Marie Walcamp in "The Dragon's Net," a story of the Far East and produced in the Far East by Henry McRae.

"My Dog Pal."

Two-Reel Century Comedy.

Directed by Fred C. Fishback.

OLD "Pop" Walker owned a farm, two babies, a wonderful dog and other interesting things. Bud the grandson, and Merta the granddaughter made things pretty lively for "Pop." Their dog "Brownie" see-sawed for them all day long. When the postman came Brownie jumped off the see-saw and sent the two of them spinning through the air.

"Brownie" always up to mischief, steals the food from "Pop," Bud is accused of it and is given a severe spanking.

A letter arrives for "Pop" advising him that he has been made the sole proprietor of the "Lily White Cafe," owing to the death of his uncle John Barleycorn.

They pack up and venture forth to take possession of the Cafe. There the girls shimmy and dance for old "Pop." He makes Bud the cook. Merta attempts to sing for the audience, but they all run out. The manager orders her under the sink with her pipes.

The manager and head waiter plan to rob "Pop" of the money they have taken in. Brownie overhears the plot and steals the money from the Manager. The Manager and the head waiter go outside thinking they have the money, and throw bombs into the cafe to blow it up. Brownie runs after the bombs and puts them underneath the box on which the two thieves are sitting. The bombs explode and knock the two crooks into smitherins. Brownie brings the money to "Pop" and a happy ending follows.

ELMO and Edith are rescued from the burning house. Lucille is killed, but Guy and Dan escape. A note reaches Edith, telling her that her father is a prisoner of the smugglers at Hell's Point and that the ship's safe has been located—also that the smugglers are making preparations to salvage the safe. Guy steals this note and wires Horton what he has learned. Elmo and Edith get a car and set out for the caves at Hell's Point. Horton picks up Guy and the gang and follows. Using guns, they force Elmo from the road and his car goes over the cliff into the sea. Believing Elmo and Edith dead, Horton and the gang hurry on to the smugglers' cave, where they find Silver Dick, the chief, and his men testing the new diving suits. Stilwell is there, a prisoner, and Horton and he have bitter words. In the meantime, Elmo and Edith, having saved themselves by jumping as the car pitched over the bluffs, make their way in a boat to the rope ladder that hangs down the face of the cliff from the mouth of the cave, two hundred feet above water. They both start up, Edith in front. It now happens that Horton, anxious to get at the safe lying at the bottom of the sea, has persuaded Silver Dick to make an immediate attempt to salvage it. The gang starts down and discovers the presence of Elmo and Edith on the ladder. A fight follows—Edith is noosed by a rope and drawn up into the cave. A couple of the smugglers start down the ladder. Elmo pitches one off to his death. The second man attatcks him with a knife. Elmo gets the knife away from him and chases him up the ladder. As the man beats it into the cave, Silver Dick cuts the ladder loose and Elmo is sent flying through the air. While this is happening, Checko, believing Edith is his daughter, Lucille, has locked himself in the inner cave with her. The man is apparently crazy. Edith is terrified for her life.

With the gang was Maggie—and she and Jim became friends—and more. Then Jim was caught red-handed on one of the Spider's jobs and he retired to Sing-Sing for a stretch. The evidence against Maggie was vague, so she got off.

While Jim was in jail, Maggie thought things over and cut loose from the Spider and when Jim came out, Maggie got word with him before the Spider could spin another web and she made Jim promise to run straight. Jim nearly starved, but he wouldn't break faith with Maggie so he caught the "Box Car" Limited and went West.

In the little town of Sawbuck he found a big house with an open window and in the window shone a light. Jim went in and found a safe. While trying the tumblers the cop saw Jim at work. He stepped into the room and trod on the burglar-alarm which Jim had stepped over. That brought Colonel Anderson, the Sawbuck City banker, downstairs and he explained to the cop that the window had been left open for his son's return.

Jim was amazed and the Colonel explained that he had driven his own son out of the house—regretted it ever since—and had left the window open and the light shining each night to bring his Tom, home. As Tom didn't come, the Colonel meant to give Jim a chance. He was quick at figures and the Colonel took him into the bank and gave him a home in the big house, where he met Mary, the Colonel's ward. Jim and Mary were fast friends and—nothing more, because Mary told Jim all about Tom and how she loved him.

One night when Jim was at the bank, Tom Anderson did come back. He went to the bank, broke in through a window and "souped" the vault. Jim found him at work. The explosion of the vault as the door blew out put Tom off his guard for a moment and Jim got his gun from him and held him up. Then he recognized Tom from his photograph and told him that this would surely kill the Colonel. Tom broke down and wished he could go back, but there was the wrecked vault to account for. Jim told Tom to go home "straight." Jim would attend to the vault. So Tom went home and found the open window and the light shining. Jim stayed in the bank and saw the best chance in the world to get rich quick staring him in the face, but he remembered the Colonel's square deal and his own promise to Maggie and he didn't take as much as a dollar bill. He just left and started hoboing back East to Maggie. And the job in the bank was put down to Jim's account.

Lion Man	Mack Wright
Bill	Harry Ds More

WESTCOTT and Stella are in the burning cabin, surrounded by the enraged miners. Sinking to the floor, overcome by the smoke, Westcott and Stella are saved from a terrible death by the Lion Man, who opens up a trap door and takes them to a tunnel below. Revived, Westcott and Stella go to Enright's cabin to recover the money stolen from them. They force Enright and Lacey into a clothes closet and depart with the money, Westcott telling the men that he will return shortly with the Sheriff. Enright and Lacey succeed in escaping from the closet, and before they leave the cabin they place a heavy steel trap before the door, so that whoever enters will step into it. The jaws of the trap they smear with cyanide, a deadly poison.

Celeste, tied to a tree where Stella had left her, is rescued from death from a pack of wolves by the Lion Man, who tells her that he only saved her because she was a woman, and warns her that she and Enright must leave Westcott and Stella alone.

Westcott pays off his miners, who gladly return to work. Leaving Stella at her cabin, Westcott starts for the sheriff.

Enright and Lacey chance across the Lion Man, who has removed his head mask to drink at a stream. They obtain this head mask, and coming to Stella's cabin, Lacey dons the mask and enters, just in time to save Stella from the advances of Bill, one of Lacey's men.

Stella, taking Lacey for the Lion Man, tells him that she is never going to give up until she has Enright, Celeste and Lacey behind the bars. Lacey, enraged, pulls off his mask, and Stella flees pursued by Enright, Lacey and Bill.

Westcott, with the sheriff, returns to Enright's cabin, but as they are about to enter they look off and see Celeste, who has just come up.

Stella is overtaken on a woodpile, and in the fight falls and lands senseless on a sawing machine below. Enright, Lacey and Bill, coming down to her, decide to leave her where she is, and start the machine going.

Westcott and Sheriff decide that Celeste has eluded them, and Westcott starts to open the door of Enright's cabin, with Stella being drawn closer and closer to the sharp teeth of the revolving saw, as the episode ends.

A HERO OF THE FILMS

Art Acord tells "Hoot" Gibson all about it. "Hoot" looks sympathetic.

WOULD you break a leg for a pretty girl? Or rather, to be quite correct, would you break your leg to save that of a maiden fair?

Art Acord, cowboy champion and film hero, the original, in real life, of the late Charles Van Loan's famous western character, Buck Parvin, and starring in the Universal serial production, "The Moon Riders," has just spent three weeks in a hospital and is now walking on crutches for that very act of gallantry.

It was in the seventh episode of "The Moon Riders" that Acord, rescuing Miss Moore from the clutches of the mountain bandits, swung her on the saddle in front of him, and urged his fleet pinto pony to a swift gallop down a canyon trail. To Art, this feat is like walking across a room. He has won so many prizes for reckless horsemanship, bull-dogging and roping that he uses many of his trophies as ash receivers.

But this time the one accident in a thousand occurred. The horse's hoofs slipped on a loose bit of gravel and he reared high to save himself from a fall down the ravine. Art could have hopped off the animal's back in a twinkling, but his first thought was of Miss Moore. Realizing that if he permitted the pony to right himself he would surely slip over the brink of the trail, he drew on the reins with all his strength, lifted Miss Moore to safety, and then the animal fell backward from the cruel strain on his mouth, carrying Acord with him.

At the hospital they discovered that the film hero's leg had been broken in two places. Miss Moore escaped with a few slight bruises.

Hoot Gibson, crowned king of the "bull-doggers" at the last Pendleton round-up where the best cowboys of the country gather to compete in sports of the range, is telling Art how he too, had a change to make a real-life hero of himself the other day. A steer escaped from the stock yards of a meat packing concern in the outskirts of Los Angeles and ran amuck through the down-town streets. Pedestrians climbed telephone poles and scrambled for the first haven of refuge they could find. Hoot happened along and took in the situation at a glance. As calmly as if he were working at Universal City, he charged the animal, got it by the horns, and threw it to the ground, amid the cheers of the frightened spectators. Hoot was working in a two-reeler called "Held Up In the Makin's," which is a gem of a Western. If you have a weak five-reeler booked and want to save the day get this film. It will do the trick.

"THE LION MAN" IS COMPLETED

THERE was much rejoicing and jollification at Universal City a few days ago when Albert Russell, directing the sensational serial, "The Lion Man," shot the final scene of the eighteenth episode of this chaptered melodrama, bringing to a close a production that has been eight months in the making. When Jack Perrin and Kathleen O'Connor, stars of the serial finally met in the leafy bower, with their troubles and tribulations things of the past, their enemies thwarted, and the future bathed in a roseate hue, it marked the first peaceful scene in thirty-six reels of slam-bang, whirlwind action.

So happy was Director Albert Russell that the serial had finally been completed that he jumped astride the black horse ridden by the Lion Man throughout the story, grasped Kathleen O'Connor by the waist and lifted her to his side, and together they executed a series of St. Vitus movements indicating complete satisfaction. "The Lion Man," which is based on the novel by Randall Parrish, "The Strange Case of Cavendish," is one of the most thrilling episodic melodramas produced in a long time. It engaged a cast of unusual distinction, including Kathleen O'Connor, Jack Perrin Barney Sherry, Gertrude Astor, Henry Barrows, Leonard Clapham and Mack Wright.

The company is taking a rest.

Kathleen O'Connor is reveling in woman's favorite indoor sport—shopping. Her shopping list is composed of clothes, hats, shoes and the other fixings that make up the feminine wardrobe.

For the past eight months Miss O'Connor has been playing the leading feminine role in the Universal serial surprise, "The Lion Man," and she had no opportunity to wear clothes a la mode. A boyish disguise, a rough riding habit, a western outfit and similar garments made up her costume plot for this production. Now Kathleen is able to do shopping to her heart's content. True, she was immediately cast for the feminine lead in Harry Carey's latest feature, "Bullet Proof," but her role in this piece is not strenuous.

Miss O'Connor was born in Dayton, Ohio, and came to Los Angeles about three years ago as the result of winning a beauty contest conducted by a middle west newspaper. She has been with Universal for almost two years, first playing opposite James J. Corbett in his serial, "The Midnight Man." She also played opposite Harry Carey in his recent release, "A Gun Fighting Gentleman."

Corbett as "Bugs" Sees Him

EDITORIALLY we cannot refrain from repeating in these columns the erudite and unregenerate effusions of Mr. Bugs Baer anent the movies and particularly those performers who formerly graced the prize ring, said effusions having taken place in the New York American. Said Bugs is the very best antidote for subway nausea, and is in constant use by all Bronxites. Bugs is a great friend of James J. Corbett, star of "The Prince of Avenue A," and his remarks last week must have been inspired by seeing this Universal Special Attraction. Here is what he says in part:

IN the old days before the boll weevils got into the liquor crop and there weren't thirty rent days in a month, a fighter used to be a guy who fought.

THEN the galloping kinetoscope busted forth and the fighters started to get their hair cut and stall twenty rounds for the movies.

NOW the industry has reached such an excruciating point of development that the camera can spar with Kid Broad and come out uncracked. The Kid is some lens buster and was about the first fighter to capitalize his beatings. The Kid plays pirate parts, sometimes, paling around with Ensign Kid and sometimes driving taxicabs. In garden scenes, they bury the Kid to his neck and he plays the cauliflower.

JIM CORBETT is the duke of the profession. Jim is always hanging around neighborhoods where lead pipes are trumps. Somebody generally insults an Alderman's honest daughter. Jim takes off his three-ply kid gloves with the lace edging and starts in to sock one gross of assorted sizes and shapes of the very best thugs. As James throws a natural with either mitt, the roughians are soon staggering around like mice who took wood alcohol in mistake for rat poison. Jim is a sourball in the close-ups as there ain't enough putty in the world to caulk up his wrinkles, but he sure can massage 'em pretty with his slapsticks. In one picture, he irons out two hundred hardboiled playmates who think that blackjacks are lipsticks. All the pies in the Corbett comedies are made in boiler factories.

IN the final fade-out with the Alderman's daughter, Jim's part is played by a substitute who does the kissing and other dare-devil work.

A Few Corrections

TAKE nothing for granted that you hear and very little that you see is a good rule to follow. Here are a few corrections on the announced list of Special Attractions which are proclaimed as the S. R. O. 12. The feature "Jewel" has been withdrawn temporarily at least from this list and will not be released in this list of twelve. Its place will be taken by "Togs," a magazine story by Izola Forrester, with Edith Roberts as the star. The picture will be directed by Jack Ford. They will start as soon as Miss Roberts finishes "The Daring Duchess," on which she is working at the present time, and Jack Ford finishes "The Girl in No. 29," on which he is at present engaged.

The seventh of the twelve will be called "Virginia" and will feature Anna Cornwall and Claire Anderson. "A Tokyo Siren," which will have as star Mme. Tsuru Aoki, is now being directed by Norman Dawn instead of by Tod Browning, as was at first intended. Mr. Browning is in New York in connection with the details incident to the first showing of Priscilla Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Horses are an Item at Universal

THE semi-annual statement just submitted by Fred Reamer, ranch superintendent at Universal City, reveals the fact that horses cut almost as important a figure in motion picture productions as do human beings.

Although the Universal ranch contains about 150 head of horses, many animals have to be rented at times for film purposes. The statement shows that in the past six months the producing companies at the Big U studios used 14,215 horses. Figuring about 160 working days in that time, it makes an average of ninety horses per day. Of course, there are many days when no horses are used, and other days when anywhere from 100 to 1,000 will be required.

In "The Virgin of Stamboul," which is soon to be released, for instance, 300 coal black horses were used for three weeks in filming the desert scenes. There are only 40 horses of this description in the Universal corral, and the rest were rented from outside sources.

In addition to the regular stock of animals, each of Harry Carey's flying squadron of rough riders has his own horse, and many of the cowboys engaged in the western dramas ride their own animals.

Reamer's department also comprises about 100 different vehicles, including every horse-drawn contrivance from the Roman chariot to the fashionable phaeton of the first years of the present century. A herd of oxen, camels and other hay-eating quadrupeds are also included in Universal's ranch department, which is the largest owned by any motion picture plant in the world.

EXTENDING UNIVERSAL CITY

ACTIVITIES at the vast studios at Universal City have increased to such an extent that it has been found necessary to enlarge what Universal officials claim to be the biggest motion picture plant in the world.

While President Carl Laemmie was visiting Universal City, recently, he left word with General Manager Tarkington Baker to make room for big things in the spring, and work has already begun on a new stage that will occupy about one-third the area of stage space already covered. The new stage will measure about 400 feet by 140 and will contain a subcellar generating plant which will supply light and power for the buildings known as the main stage, the north stage, the west stage, the old and new light buildings and the new theatre building, and it will easily be the largest single electrical installation ever made in any studio.

The switch boards will be forty feet long and sixteen feet high, in two tiers. The current will be supplied from the Edison Company's lines at 15,000 volts and distributed to various transformer stations at 2200 volts. All the main feeders and branch distributing panels will be located above and below the stage and controlled from switches located at various points on the outer wall. It will be so arranged that the electricion will be able to control anyone or all the lights from any location in the studio. This will cut out the objectional stage cable running all over the floor and is a feature originated at Universal City.

The structure will be known as the new stage and Sub-Station and will be able to accommodate from sixteen to twenty-four individual sets. Its estimated cost is about $96,000.

THREE NEW ALLEN WILD ANIMAL FILMS

UNIVERSAL announces that three more Major Jack Allen animal pictures will be released shortly. The first of these "The Story of the Jaguar" is on the list for March 1st. "The Story of the Wolf" will be released on April 5th while the date for "Tiger Land" is set for May 3rd.

Major Allen's pictures have aroused enthusiasm wherever they were shown. There have been but three released to date, namely: "Trailing the Leopard," "Bear Trapping," and "Lion Trapping."

Major Allen, internationally known as an adventurer, naturalist and trapper, has studied wild animals for over twenty years. When he signed a contract with Universal to produce a special series of pictures it was not thought at the time that they would prove so successful as the idea was a new one and the public pulse had not been felt.

The pictures proved to be so unique that they went over big. Wherever they were shown there was an actual demand for more of them. Universal started receiving letters asking for Major Allen's personal appearance at various showings.

The first three pictures were produced before the Capitol Theatre had opened its doors in New York. Two of the remaining three, "The Story of the Jaguar" and "Tiger Land" have had pre-release showings at this playhouse and the third has also been booked. Universal is receiving an unusual number of advance reservations for dates on these pictures because of an unlooked for public interest in Major Allen's unique methods of catching wild animals without rifle or ammunition.

Previous to the present series of pictures—he made several, four of which were shown at the New York Strand and one at the Rivoli. In his pictures he demonstrates before the camera how the fiercest jungle beasts may be captured by human methods. Outside of the educational interest to these pictures there is the everpresent feature of thrill about them as the scenes are constantly depicting ticklish moments when the wild animals are on the verge of disregarding their "director" and going on the rampage.

Universal Super-Attraction De Luxe.

AS you read this copy hundreds of thousands of people are gasping at the bewildering daring of Ormer Locklear in this marvelous air melodrama. Printers' ink simply won't do justice to our efforts to let you know what a tremendous proven box office attraction this picture is. Get it, or regret it all your born days.

“Created a Furore”

VERY soon, in May, to be specific—these two favorites of the screen will appear in a series of five-reel comedy-dramas, to which their popularity and success have long since entitled them. There is no better way to put your patrons in the proper receptive spirit for the bigger, better Lyons-Moran comedies than to play the short ones in which these genial, likable fun-makers created the popular demand for their side-splitting selves.

If you like to laugh and wear good clothes, the sparkling fun of these up-to-the-instant comedies will do the first for you and their popularity will do the second.

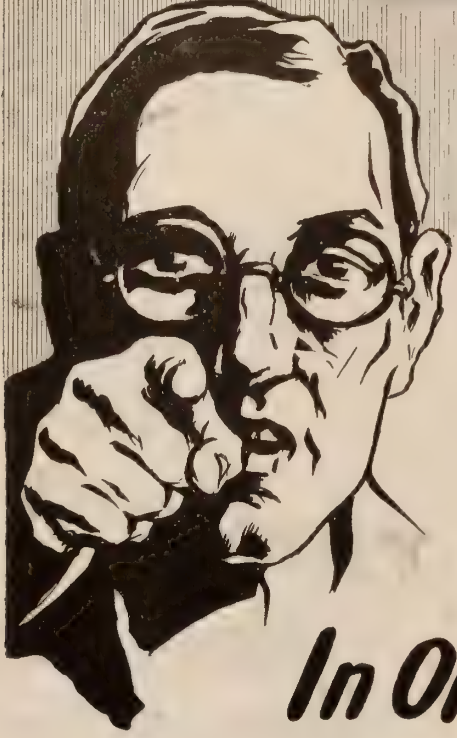
The Truth about



The Sultan of Turkey once remarked that it was known to all grown men that one of two horses could always run faster than the other—so why all the excitement about horse races?

The same is true of News Reels. There can be but one "best." There always is one "best." One that gives your theatre more scoops and more beats and more subjects in the course of a week than any other Service. Once you know which News Service this is, there is no longer need for argument. Competition, so far as you are concerned, is deader than the Sultan of Turkey's horse-race.

Here are the facts as to the BIG THREE:

In Only 8 Months, 31 Scoops

Between May 1st, and December 1st, 1919, a period of eight months, the Big Three, the Service that gives you the cream of the news three times a week, gave you no less than 31 separate and distinct scoops. Seven of these were in May—five were in June—four were in July—two were in August —five were in September—three were in tober—three in November and two were in cember. This makes an average of four absolu exclusive pictures a month and proves that you depend on the Big Three for just this kind of service month in and month out.

62 Days ahead!

Next to scooping your competitor comes "beating him to it," and just as a sample the Big Three offers the fact that on April 23 it released a picture of the Government's Aviation Orientator that was sixty-two days ahead of all competitors. Previous to that, on March 29, it released a picture of Great Britain's Airship R33 that was sixty days ahead.

THE BIG

the News Reels

We beat all competitors in Number of Subjects shown

From May 1st, 1919, to December 31st, a period of eight months, our nearest competitor released sixty-nine issues at the rate of two a week. These sixty-nine issues contained, in all, 546 subjects—a pretty fair record as news gathering and news picturing goes—except for the following fact:

In the same eight months International released 16 issues, containing 977 subjects, or seventy per cent more than its competitor. In other words, if you were showing the Big Three you had nearly two chances to one of showing a big news picture ahead of your competitor, leaving out the fact that the Big Three would probably beat its competitor anyway.

We beat all competitors in the Dates of Mutual Subjects

As stated above, our nearest competitor issued in eight months 546 subjects. Of these International was ahead on 129 in the date of showing—in other words, was ahead to the extent of twenty-three per cent in the dates of showings of mutual subjects. Now compare this with our competitor's showing on mutual subjects, as given in the next column.

In the same period of eight months, International issued 917 subjects. Of these, our nearest competitor was ahead in only 4.2/10 per cent—in other words, International was nearly six times as enterprising as its nearest competitor in showing your people the news while it's news, the pictures they want to see.

"OVERLAND RED"
From the famous Novel by Henry Herbert Knibbs
Starring HARRY CAREY
Directed by LYNN F. REYNOLDS

Gloria Holt in "The Road to Divorce."

NOTES.

Can a woman neglect her personal appearance after marriage and still hope to retain her husband's love? That is one problem suggested by "The Road to Divorce," which is to be seen at the .... Theatre next .... In this Universal photodrama, directed by Philip Rosen, Mary MacLaren, the star, plays the role of the wife, Edward Peil is seen as the husband and Bonnie Hill has the part of the "other woman."

Many remarkable marine scenes are shown in "The Road to Divorce" the latest production starring Mary MacLaren, coming to the .... Theatre next .... The boundless ocean is shown in its varying moods—the gentle breakers on which gay swimmers are disporting themselves, the rolling swells over which gay yachts are calmly sailing, and a raging storm which shows old Neptune in his angriest mood.

The Herald for "The Road to Divorce"

DR. MYRON SHAW, a rising young physician, and his wife, thought their happiness was complete when they were married and had settled down in a little seaside cottage. But after a few years the wife neglected her husband and herself in her devotion to the little ones.

Then Pauline Dallas, beautiful, cultured, always correctly dressed, came to visit them. The contrast was hardly fair to the young mother. Any one could have noticed the difference. Dr. Shaw began to think that he had outgrown his wife. As the days passed they were all drifting unconsciously toward a family tragedy that might have spoiled all their lives, when the husband was brought to his senses with a violent and heartrending start. The outcome of this powerful story is wonderfully depicted in the Universal masterpiece, "The Road to Divorce," depicted by Philip Rosen and starring Mary MacLaren, supported by Edward Peil, Bonnie Hill, Helen Davidge, Eugenie Forde, and Roy Stecker, which is to be shown at the ——— Theatre on ———.

NO MORE CHINKS FOR EDDIE PIEL.

"DO you want me to play a Chinaman?"

That was Edward Peil's query when he was called on the telephone by the casting director at Universal City and told that he was wanted for a leading role in support of Mary MacLaren in "The Road to Divorce."

He was assured that he was to play an American physician in this photodrama.

"All right," answered the actor. "When shall I report?"

It later developed that Edward Peil had promised himself not to play a Chinese character for a year at least. He had scored such a tremendous success in the role of Evil Eye in Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" that he was immediately engaged to play the role of the crafty Mongolian with H. B. Warner in "The Pagan God." No sooner was this story released than he received several other offers from directors to play Chinese characters. But he called a halt. He had no intention of becoming identified with any single line of parts.

"I left the dramatic stage because I grew tired of playing the same part for a season or longer," said Peil later. "I became a screen actor because it afforded me an opportunity to play a new role every few months, and I don't want to become a one-part actor."

AND SHE IS STILL DRAWING.

BONNIE HILL, who appears in the rôle of the "other woman" in Mary MacLaren's production, "The Road to Divorce," to be shown at the ——— Theatre on ————, is one of the stunning beauties of the screen.

Coming from one of the first families of Virginia, she early developed a taste for painting and came to Greenwich Village, New York. Here she maintained a pretty studio for two years, doing magazine covers and other sketches. Several better known artists finally persuaded her to pose for sketches for Vogue, and thus her classic features and graceful carriage became familiar to millions of readers throughout the country.

One of Miss Hill's friends in New York was Madame Nazimova, and it was the Russian actress who suggested to Bonnie Hill that she come to California and appear in photodramas. Just to show her confidence in Miss Hill's ability she gave her an important role in "The Brat," and when her success on the screen was assured, she was cast for a principal rôle with Viola Dana.

Universal was quick to appreciate the beauty and talent of the newcomer to the screen and engaged her for a prominent rôle in "The Peddler of Lies" in support of Frank Mayo, and as soon as this story was filmed she was cast for the part of the fashionable Boston girl in "The Road to Divorce."

A trained dog, a cute kitten, a funny monkey, several birds and one or two insects are used by Philip Rosen, Universal director, to gain bits of human nature effects in the latest Mary MacLaren photodrama, "The Road to Divorce," which will be shown at the .... Theatre on ....

Three of the cleverest kiddies on the screen have splendid parts in "The Road to Divorce" the Universal photodrama starring Mary MacLaren which is to be seen at the .... Theatre next .... These are Arthur Redden, Gloria Holt and Roy Stecker—the oldest eight years of age and the youngest just past three.

THE wedding of Mary Bird and Dr. Myron Shaw was a wonderful event for the farming colony on the stern New England coast. All the family relatives were on hand, and Pauline Dallas, Mary's fashionable friend from Boston, was maid of honor. After the wedding Dr. Shaw established his young bride in a pretty cottage by the sea. All Mary's dreams were coming true. It was just like playing house.

A few years passed. The stork has visited the Shaw family on two occasions and Mary finds so much to occupy her mind and time in the care of the babies that she begins to neglect herself and her husband. The husband is often compelled to eat alone because Mary must look after the children. She is too busy dressing the infant to think of adorning herself in her former pretty frocks. Unconsciously the two are drifting apart. The husband thinks he has outgrown his wife and Mary is worried over Myron's growing indifference.

At this time Pauline Dallas comes to visit them. Pauline is dressed in the height of fashion. She is interested in politics, in the latest feminist movements—while Mary scarcely has time to read the papers. No wonder the husband makes a mental comparison of the women, and Mary suffers by contrast.

On the final day of Pauline's visit the doctor takes her for a sail. Their proximity tempts Myron to unburden his thoughts, and he tells the Boston girl that he cannot find in his wife the sympathy his higher intellectual nature requires. Just as their conversation is about to reach the danger point, the doctor's attention is called to the storm which is fast approaching. By hard work he manages to make a landing in the semi-darkness.

Arriving home, exhausted and drenched, he is informed that Mary had gone for a swim in his absence and had not yet returned. Forgetting all but his wife in his anxiety, he rushes out in the storm to search for Mary. In the raging surf, with the furious storm about him, he realizes what his wife means to him and what life would be without her. When she is finally rescued he carries her tenderly home, and the few unhappy years are forgotten in the hour of their reunion.

ADVERTISING DISPLAY LINES

It was not until he thought he had lost his wife that he realized what she meant to him. Then—was it too late? See the powerful story told in "The Road to Divorce."

They failed to heed the danger signal on the sea of matrimony. It was not until the breakers were just ahead that the husband sensed the danger in "The Road to Divorce."

They were moving steadily along "The Road to Divorce." He didn't realize it until his wife was gone. See Mary MacLaren's latest Universal picture.

It took a violent upheaval in the life of the young husband to bring him to his senses. He felt that he had outgrown the mother of his children. A family tragedy is narrowly averted in "The Road to Divorce."

"A man's best friend in this world is his wife." But it required an impending domestic disaster to make this clear to the young husband in "The Road to Divorce."

"Why can't I be beautiful?" Many a wife has said that to herself, struggling to hold back the tears, as she saw life's greatest drama fading away. But the wife in "The Road to Divorce" had saintly beauty of motherhood and her husband finally saw it.

Rainbow Two-Reel Comedy

DOWN on the farm lived old Hezekiah Pretzel, besides owning vast lands, he had a beautiful daughter. She was young and ambitious like all chickens. Her aim in life was to become a movie star or some kind of a shining object.

Sapolio (Harry Swett) the man about the farm, was desperately in love with Paulino, the daughter. He neglects his work to play hide and seek with her, upsets the animals and causes a general riot on the farm. The farmer fusses and fumes at Sapolio. Sapolio puts the pitchfork down, and innocently sticks it through the farmer's feet. He finally extricates the farmer, by lifting him up with a huge log and throwing him into the hay-pile.

Came to this peaceful village, one day, a bold handsome and wily thespian. One who had tread the hard-boiled railroad ties, and starved for the want of food. Fate leads him, by bumping a mere string of trains into him, into the house of Hezekiah Pretzel.

He loses no time in making love to Pauldino, who serves him with delicious biscuits, does the "shake the corest-cover" dance for him and as meekly as a lamb, falls for his marcel-waved hair. Sapolio sitting on the steps outside the house, despairs about the loss of his love. He pets his horse standing nearby and promises to be true to the horse.

Our hero actor flees with Pauldina. Sapolio follows later on, and discovers their whereabouts. He enters the room, just in time to save Pauldino from absolute disgrace. He springs at the actor and gives him a terrible beating. He crashes into the wall, which happens to be made of paper, and the secret is out. The couple were rehearsing a scene for a movie act, the director orders Sapolio thrown out, he is not too gently taken bodily and thrown over a high wall. However, you can't keep a good man down, Sapolio returns behind one of the moving pieces of scenery, makes an attempt to grab the girl, but the girl and actor leap out of a nearby window, leaving a wig in Sapolio's hand. He wakes up to find his horse's tail in his hands and his sweetheart calling him to come into the house. The farmer had thrown the actor out, and all ends happily.

Lion Man	Mack Wright
Bill	Harry De Moore

STELLA is saved from a frightful death by two workmen, who rush up and stop the engine of the wood sawing machine, into the jaws of which Setella was being drawn. Enright, Lacey and Bill have run off, but in a moment of anger Lacey draws his gun, fires off and wounds one of the workmen. Stella and the other men flee, and become separated.

Westcott is just about to step into the poisoned trap in Enright's cabin as the sheriff, again seeing Celeste, grabs him and they rush out after her.

Stella, fleeing from Enright, Lacey and Bill, comes to a high bluff, and desperate, she jumps over it, and rolls down an embankment to a ravine below. Here she comes across Celeste, who is running from Westcott and the Sheriff, and they struggle.

Enright, Lacey and Bill, coming to the top of the bluff, and looking down, see Stella, but not Celeste. They start to shove a big boulder over the bluff. Westcott, who has become parted from the Sheriff, sees this from a distance, and runs up just in time to shove Stella and Celeste from the path of the descending boulder. He and Stella return to her cabin.

The Sheriff, giving up the chase for Celeste, returns to Enright's cabin, steps in the poisoned trap and is killed. Enright, Lacey and Bill, with Celeste, come to the cabin, find that the Sheriff is dead and realizze that they must make a getaway at once.

But the mining boss brings word that Westcott's miners are so close to his tunnel that their tappings can be heard. All proceed on to the mine to investigate.

A blast set off by Westcott's men opens up a hole into Lacey's tunnel and a man is sent to notify Westcott. He and Stella rush down to the mine. They enter the tunnel, as Enright, Bill and Lacey enter the tunnel on the opposite side. A gun fight ensues in the tunnels. Then, backing away, Enright comes across the powder chest in Lacey's tunnel and he and Lacey see a way not only to destroy Westcott and Stella, but the mine as well.

Pretending that they have fled from the mine, they place the explosives on the other side of a heavy fire gate, which they close and bar. Westcott and Stella come to this fire gate, and start to batter it down, little realizing that on the other side a heavy charge of explosives is awaiting them, and that the fuse is burning closed and closer. Then, as they begin to break down the door, a terrific explosion ensues that buries Westcott and Stella with debris and rock.

Checko	V. L. Barnes

ELMO after being hurled from the rope ladder, manages to cling to a jutting rock and pull himself to safety. He climbs up the face of the cliff and reaches the top. He sees smoke coming from a hole and worms his way through the opening and finds himself looking into the inner cave. Checko has barred the door and refuses admittance to the rest of the gang. Watching him is Edith, terrified by the man's actions. Elmo seizes his chance and drops to Checko's shoulders, knocking him out. He then escapes with Edith up through the chimney. Silver Dick breaks into the cave with his gang and discovers that Edith has escaped. They make preparations to continue their diving operations and start down the ladder to the boat. In the meantime Elmo and Edith swim to the boat and are about to make off with it when the gang comes aboard. Elmo and Edith hide in the cabin. Silver Dick takes charge and the boat is headed for the sunken safe. Checko goes below to get into his diving suit. Elmo grapples with him, choking him to unconsciousness. He then gets into the diving rig and goes on deck. The gang thinks he is Checko. He goes overboard to salvage the safe. Almost immediately Edith is discovered and the unconscious Checko. Realizing that Elmo has played a trick on them, Silver Dick sends down a diver after him. A fight under water follows. Elmo gets entangled in the kelp and is helpless. The gangster sends the safe up and follows. The door of the safe is blown and Horton finds the wanted plate. This done, the safe is sent overboard. It sinks down, pinning Elmo to the ocean bed. A great shark is menacing him. The gang heads the boat for the city, taking Edith with them as prisoner.

"When the Cougar Called."

Garry Bowes, the Cougar	Robert Burns
Caroline	Madga Lane
Mrs. Bowes	Dorothy Hagan
Ray Sweet	Charles Dorian
Sheriff	Chick Morrison

THERE was a mystery around the cabin on Thunder Mountain. Nobody ever saw its occupant, for the door was always locked. The occupant was Garry Bowes, whose mysterious disappearance from civilization after a fight with his partner had strained the imagination of all the countryside, but as a matter of fact the partner was alive and well and had offered a reward for the discovery of Garry because he wanted to end the feud. Garry heard the cry of the Cougar one night, took his gun, and went out to look for the beast. He didn't find the cougar but he did find a girl lying stunned under a tree whose overhanging branch had swept her from her horse. Garry picked her up and took her to the cabin. When she recovered, she was full of fear lest the sheriff should trace her, and Garry jumped to the idea that Caroline was outside the law, like himself. The sheriff did trace her and Garry contrived to hide her, but he didn't hide the evidence of her crime—a bag of jewels which had been stolen from Mrs. Bowes, Garry's mother. So the sheriff took Garry prisoner and Caroline was left in the cabin, but in getting out of her hiding place she upset the lamp and the cabin was burned to the ground. Events proved that Caroline was not a thief, she had discovered that her own brother had stolen the jewels, had recovered them and was taking them back to Mrs. Bowes. And the end of the tale was that Garry found that he wasn't a murderer, and that Caroline wasn't a thief. So he took her home to his mother and everything ended happily.

Leader of Purity Squad	Dan Crimmons
Bara Sisters	Elsie Cort Betty Petterson

THE small village was all worked up over the arrival of the Bara sisters burlesquers, who were to appear that night at the local show house. The girls arrive just as the Purity Squad have made their demands on the proprietor of the Hotel who is also the manager of the Opera House that they will never elect him Mayor if he allows the girls to appear. The girls are urged to give a demonstration of their evenings show. Their first number meets with approval of the committee and also looks fine, but their next change in abbreviated costume so terribly shocks them that the girls are told that they cannot appear. The girls go to their rooms. About this time a telegram comes telling the girls that they would be given 30 weeks on the Pan time if they were blondes. They are happy and one of them says "Let's Dye Together." The boys in the hall hear this and thinking that the girls are going to commit suicide tell the committee downstairs and some of the women faint and the boys yell WATER WATER. Some villagers outside hear this and thinking that there is a fire wagon and arriving at the hotel start to play water on the crowd. Picture ends with the breaking down the door just as the girls have finished dying their hair.

IF Rip Van Winkle had lived a century later and had awakened from his Sleepy Hollow sleep a year or a year and a half ago and in Phoenix, Arizona, instead of Tarrytown, N. Y., he would have been surprised far beyond the vivid imaginative power of Irving to comprehend. He would have seen an arid and useless desert blooming not with roses, but with cotton—long staple cottton which Sea Island alone formerly produced. Then again, in accordance with present day methods of hustle and bustle, Rip would not have had to sleep so long. It required a war to make this change, as it did in Rip's day, but it only required one-twentieth the time. Washington Irving never conceived such a fairy tale as this which is about to be unfolded before your eyes. And it is going to be all the stronger, because it is to be made into a moving picture. Irving would be as surprised at the picture as Rip would be at the miraculous change.

There are today two prosperous, thriving towns in Arizona, Goodyear and Litchfield, which are located twenty-five miles west and thirty east of Phoenix, respectively, and which eighteen months ago were a blazing and arid desert. Any one of the paintings of Remington, or at least the background of his pictures, would have been a faithful reproduction of either Goodyear or of Litchfield twelve months ago.

Today should a modern Rip Van Winkle return to the spot where Litchfield now stands, or Goodyear, not even his best friend could convince him that the place he knew and the new cities are the same.

About eighteen months ago, when the tilt between Democracy and Autocracy was at its highest, every resource of the United States was called upon to the limit. Among the many commodities necessary to the prosecution of the war none was more essential than automobile tires. Marshal Petain's order, "Ils passeron pas," is perhaps the most famous of the war. They shall not pass—and they did not pass, thanks to the poilus of France and—automobile tires.

Verdun's defender—Marshal Petain—ordered that one automobile truck per minute should pass a given spot on the way to Verdun's forts, carrying the precious ammunition and food to its brave defenders. The roads were pockmarked with shells. No tires can last long under such conditions. The cry came again and again for more tires—and they came.

Cotton is one of the main constituents of automobile tires. Not the cotton of the South—which is short staple cotton and played just as large a part in the war as that which goes into automobile tires—but long staple cotton, which, because of its length, has greater tensile strength and makes a rougher cord. Such cotton was to be had on Sea Island, but not in sufficient quantities to keep satisfied the hungry roads of France.

Then began a continent—wide search by soil experts to find a soil which in Nature was like that of Sea Island and suitable for the production of long staple cotton. Not a spot on this continent was overlooked, and finally one of the experts found the land. Not in a fertile well-watered spot, as one might think, but in the desert. Twenty-five miles from Phoenix, Arizona, the soil technicians came upon land as suitable to long staple cotton raising as any in the world, if water could be secured to irrigate it.

Then came the engineers. Roosevelt Dam, the pet project of the late president, was but 130 miles away and what was 130 miles when the lives of our soldiers and the security of the country hung in the balance! Straightway the engineers went to work, and inside of a month water in prodigious quantities was pouring through flumes and irrigation ditches to the thirsty soil. So started Goodyear—a year and a half ago a desert—today an oasis blooming in that desert.

The story of Litchfield is but a repetition of that of Goodyear. Except that the crisis was past when Litchfield was started.

Today 30,000 acres of non-productive land is producing as good long staple cotton as is anywhere in the world produced and two towns, the equal of any that Arizona can boast, are on the map, which all goes as evidence as to how the army back home stood behind the men in the trenches.

Situated at Silver Lake, Arizona, Roosevelt Dam, so called because it was a favorite project of the late president, the first appropriations for it being made during his administration, irrigates between two and three hundred thousand acres of otherwise arid land. A leading spirit in the Roosevelt project also was Alexander O. Brodie, formerly lieutenant colonel of Roosevelt's Rough Riders and later governor of Arizona at the time the project gathered full sway, and to whom much credit may be given for the enterprise.

The dam was formally opened March 18, 1911, and as attested by the towns of Goodyear and Litchfield as well as other towns of Arizona, it has more than fulfilled its purpose of putting hundreds of thousands of acres of otherwise arid land into the cultivated class. While not the largest dam in the world it is one of that class, and possibly in its ultimate development may be the dam which of all others in the world, releases the greatest single acreage to irrigation. Of course in this connection it must be remembered that the Egyptian projects, much larger in their entirety, are actually a series of dams and runways and not a single project as is the Roosevelt. The Roosevelt Dam is in fact one solid wall 1,080 feet long at the crest, which is 284 feet above the base. The thickness is 168 feet at the bottom and 20 feet at the crest. President Roosevelt lived to see the fruit of one of his many projects, ripen to maturity when the country depended on it, in the case of the Roosevelt Dam.

With the coming of peace there was no slacking in the work of raising long staple cotton at Goodyear and Litchfield. Indeed, as time goes on, the acreage is constantly being increased and the force of workers augmented. Goodyear, started first and entailing an acreage of something less than 15,000 acres about eighteen months ago, was followed up by rearing Litchfield, Goodyear's twin cotton producing town of Arizona, which in acreage exceeds the area of Goodyear, covering somewhat more than 15,000 acres and being six months younger.

The towns are in every way most modern and up-to-date. Fine sewerage systems, good water, electric power, churches, half a dozen modern school buildings, motion picture theatres and clubs and recreation halls for the employees all tend to rank these two new towns with any in the country of their size.

In fact, when it was decided to have the history of the Arizona cotton industry recorded in celluloid, it was unanimously decided to place films of the two towns well to the

This land was formerly planted in alfalfa, which crop the cotton men alternate with cotton, as cotton cannot be consecutively grown on land without using up all the nitrates present in the soil. Thus the liguminous plant alfalfa is used to replace the nitrates. The larger tractor is a Fitch four-wheel drive and the smaller one is a Fordson. As shown in the picture, the sow and her offspring enjoy eating the upturned alfalfa roots.

Miss Laura Bromwell, aviatrix, who made daily flights over the city.

EVEN New York, which has been going its way, borrowing none of the new ideas of exploitation of pictures, has at last succumbed to the inevitable and gone in for "circus stuff" in at least one instance.

When "The Great Air Rbbery" was booked for the Broadway the publicity department for the producers recognized its chance to get out of the rut and combined forces with the Broadway publicity department in originating something new for the engagement.

It was first planned to have a parade up and down Broadway every day. Plans were completed for this when a little blizzard hit the town. The police, because of the congested streets, refused a permit for this.

The next thing tried was to get airplanes up in the air over the city. The flying fields on Long Island were all snowed in. By a special effort the Curtiss people finally managed to shovel a path for a take-off at their Mineola Field.

For the novelty, a woman pilot, Miss Laura Bromwell, was engaged to make the first flight for "The Great Air Robbery." Taking off in a snow storm she flew over New York at an altitude of barely one thousand feet and showered the city with leaflets announcing the showing at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre. One newspaper commented that another snow storm had hit Times Square.

Figuring on attracting the eye to the name of the picture a very novel exploitation stunt was then arranged. After an unthought of amount of searching a live cow was located in New York. Figuring that it was a long time since "Broadway was a pasture," it was decided that a cow on Broadway would be quite an unusual sight for New Yorkers. The cow was therefore carefully bedecked and with two sandwich signs on either side and a man dressed in the costume of a "Death Head Squadron" member leading her, the parade down Broadway commenced. In large letters on the sign were the words, "THIS IS NO BULL!

"GIVE me a drama that might be true of any girl in my audience,'" said an exhibitor, "give me a picture that seems real to the shopgirl—real to the girl-in-the-limousine—with the sort of happenings that they've dreamed of for themselves—that's the kind of picture that packs 'em in." Here's just that house-packing sort of picture—the sort every girl craves to see—with fascinating Mary MacLaren in the role of the girl who, like millions of every-day girls, believed all her golden dreams would come true "on the stage."

"BONNIE, BONNIE LASSIE" is quite the best picture ever allotted to Mary MacLaren," says Virginia Dale, in the Chicago Evening Journal. "They don't make them as good as this one very often, nowadays. A PICTURE of a different sort, yet fully as strong in its appeal to all classes of patrons, is "The Pointing Finger," the story of an orphan girl who, under stigma, leaves the dreary orphanage and has to disguise her beauty to make a living. MacLaren personality dominates this genuinely human little drama. Play it with the assurance that the market offers nothing cleaner or finer.

"A PETAL ON THE CURRENT"

"THIS is the best picture Universal has given us in a long time," writes Genevieve Harris in the Chicago Evening Post. Embodying the world-wide prestige of Fannie Hurst, the author, with the poignant personality of its star, "A Petal on the Current" is a production no exhibitor can possibly afford to overlook.

CHARLES WILSHIRE, son of an English duke, renounces his title after a quarrel at home, leaves for America, buys a ranch in the west and severs all past family ties. Before his death, however, he leaves with his lawyer certain documents establishing the identity of his young daughter, Ellen, a typical western girl, who is left to superintend his Texas estate.

At the death of her grandfather, the Duke of Wilshire, she is advised that she has fallen heir to an estate and a title and to come to England with the proper papers of identification.

Her father's lawyer, having been outwitted by Ellen in a scheme to get possession of her ranch for a fraction of its value, plots to palm off a chorus girl as the rightful heir and denies that he has any documents belonging to the girl or her father.

Ellen sails for England, followed on the next steamer by the lawyer. Her titled relatives are shocked at her style and manners, but at a reception the next evening, attired in borrowed finery, she becomes the centre of attention and wins the heart of Gerald Knowlton.

The arrival of the lawyer with the fair impostor raises a doubt in the minds of Ellen's new-found friends; but the girl contrives in a very ingenious way to thwart the plans of her traducers, with the result that her aunt and cousin propose a trip to America to obtain positive proof of Ellen's identity.

Arriving at the ranch all complications are cleared up, much to the satisfaction of Gerald Knowlton, who never doubted the girl's genuineness and who had decided to propose to her whether she was the real heiress or not.

ADVANCE STORY

AN opportunity to display her skill as a horsewoman as the manager of a Texas cattle ranch and also to looking charming in pretty gowns as the heiress of a big English estate is given Edith Roberts, the pretty Universal star, in her latest Universal picture, "The Daring Duchess," which comes to the .... Theatre on ....

Miss Roberts established herself as an expert rider when she appeared with Frank Mayo in "Lasca." Later in "The Triflers," a society drama, she showed that she was equally at home in a drawing room and that she could wear pretty evening gowns in a most attractive way.

In her latest Universal release, "The Daring Duchess," she appears to advantage both on horseback in Texas and as the center of attraction at an exclusive function in English society circles.

Supporting Miss Roberts in her latest picture, which was directed by Harry Franklin, are other Universal favorites including Virginia Ware, Harold Miller, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Kathleen Kirkham, Ogden Crane, Hugh Saxon, Rudolph Christians, Leota Lorraine, Leonard Clapham and Henry Woodward.

In "The Daring Duchess," a Texas girl is left an English estate by her uncle, the Duke of Wilshire. Her father, the Duke's brother, had come to America years before and severed all relations with his family. The daughter, played by Miss Roberts, established her identity after many complications.

FOUR STUNNERS

THE four principal feminine members of "The Daring Duchess," the photodrama announced for next.................. .... at the .... Theatre, which includes the charming star, Edith Roberts, are all noted for their ability to wear beautiful clothes becomingly.

Edith Roberts has the reputation of being one of the smartest dressers in the Los Angeles film colony and usually appears in the cafes or social functions in the newest Parisian models. Her modiste, in New York, is always on the lookout for fashionable frocks suitable to Miss Roberts' petite personality, and there is scarcely a week when the little star does not receive something in the way of a gown, coat or hat from the metropolis.

Kathleen Kirkham, who plays the role of Lady Clara in "The Daring Duchess," has many opportunities in this photodrama to wear some stunning frocks. Miss Kirkham is the statuesque type and can wear the most daring creations. She has played leading roles with many of the screen stars, and supported Edith Roberts in a former vehicle, "The Triflers."

Leota Lorraine was a Chicago society girl before going in the films, and her pretty gowns attracted much attention when she first flashed on the screen as the heroine of a number of the George Ade fables.

Virginia Ware, who plays the dowager in this photodrama, specializes in roles of the "grande dame" type and is as well known for her modish attire as for her splendid acting.

ABOUT EDITH

For a little girl who is still in her teens, who is just five feet tall and who tips the scale at a trifle over a hundred pounds, Edith Roberts has made remarkable strides up the road to success.

But beginning her stage career at the age of six, in dramatic and musical performances, and later touring the vaudeville circuit in a sketch in which she acted, sang and danced, she had a fairly good start when, at the age of fourteen, she came to California with the intention of adopting the screen as the scene of her future efforts.

Edith Roberts came to Universal City first, and she has never left the film capital since, except for an occasional vacation. She required no breaking-in process. She was young, petite and, what was more important, she could act. One or two minor parts gave her camera wisdom and then she was given leading roles in Lyons and Moran comedies.

In less than a year she was playing in dramatic features opposite every important Universal star, and two years ago she was promoted to stellar prominence. As a screen luminary she has appeared in such successful productions as "O'Connor's Mag," "The Deciding Kiss," "The Love Swindle," "Beans," "A Taste of Life," "Lasca," "The Triflers" and others.

Her latest production is "The Daring Duchess," directed by Harry Franklin, in which she will be seen at the .... Theatre next ....

EDITH ROBERTS, the Universal star, may be said to have two leading men in her newest feature, "The Daring Duchess," which is to be seen at the .... Theatre on .... The two players are Harold Miller and Leonard Clapham.

While Harold Miller, in the role of Gerald Knowlton, a scion of British nobility, is the conventional leading man, winning the fair Edith in the end the role of Slim, the foreman of her ranch, played by Leonard Clapham, is just as important and, possibly, more colorful.

Harold Miller is one of the youngest screen leading men, having acted in films for less than two years. He first gained the attention of producers by his work with Olive Thomas in "Upstairs and Down," and with Frank Keenan in "The World Aflame." He then came to Universal and has since appeared in leading roles in "The Peddler of Lies" and with Mary MacLaren in "The Forged Bride."

THE STORY

AT the death of the Duke of Wilshire, his will bequeaths to his cousin, Lady Harriett, and to his nephew and niece, Gerald Knowlton and Lady Clara, his entire estate, provided his brother, Charles, who years before had severed his family connections and gone to America, has not left a legal heir. Out in Texas, Charles Wilshire had renounced his title, bought a ranch and, upon his death the estate was operated by his daughter, Ellen, who rode with her cowboys, superintended the work and bossed the establishment. Martin Saunders, who had been her father's lawyer, harbors a grudge against the girl.

The mail brings a letter from a London attorney advising her that she is heir to her uncle's estate and to come to England with legal identification. Knowing that her father had left the necessary papers with Saunders, she goes to him with the letter. Saunders knows of a girl in a London music hall whom he intends to palm off as the heiress and he tells Ellen that her father had left no papers with him.

Ellen starts for London, and she is followed by Saunders on the next steamer. Arriving at the Wilshire estate her titled relatives are shocked at her style and manners, but at a reception the next evening, attired in borrowed finery, she becomes the centre of attention. Gerald Knowlton is especially interested in the girl, but the next day a bombshell is exploded when Saunders arrives with the music hall girl, properly dressed for her new role, and presents his papers proving that the girl is the daughter of Charles Wilshire.

In her desperation Ellen decides to return home for more adequate proof of her identity, but finds her funds low. Knowing that Saunders had been anxious to buy her ranch, she proposes to sell him an option on the property for money enough to make the trip. He falls into the trap. They go to a notary where the option is executed.

Ellen leaves for America, but the following day the notary, in conversation with the Wilshire attorney, is introduced to the chorus girl who is posing as Ellen Wilshire, and informs the lawyer that it is not the Ellen Wilshire who had executed a paper in his office the previous day. This raises a doubt in the attorney's mind and he advises the family to go to America to get first hand proof as to the Wilshire heiress.

Ellen gives them a taste of American ranch life and has no difficulty in establishing her identity, especially to Gerald Knowlton.

Clothes do help. An evening gown transformed a little girl fresh from a cattle ranch into the favorite at an exclusive function among English nobility. See Edith Roberts in "The Daring Duchess."

Her titled English relatives all turned up their noses when she arrived from Texas, where she had been raised. Some feminine noses were still up when she became a social favorite of the nobility. But that's a long story. See it all in "The Daring Duchess."

There were two heiresses from Texas claiming the estate of the Duke of Wilshire. So the English went to straighten it out. There was also nobility in Texas. See Edith Roberts in "The Daring Duchess."

The cowboys wanted to settle the dispute over the duke's estate in true Texas fashion. It wouldn't have gone well in an English court. But Edith Roberts, as the rightful heiress, wins out in "The Daring Duchess."

WAKING UP SLEEPY BROADWAY

The best show in town is THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY, at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre."

This unique stunt attracted tremendous attention. As it was quite an unruly cow it actually stopped traffic several times. The second day of the cow's march proved the last one. The police again interfered and stopped further work along this line.

By this time business was picking up nicely at the theatre. B. S. Moss, owning a string of theatres in New York, decided that he could circularize his other patrons and get them down to see the picture. A cleverly worded "Aerogram" in the form of a telegram was therefore printed. Thousands of these were given away at theatres in all parts of the city. This brought a good deal of extra business.

A man dressed in an aviator's uniform and carrying the skull and cross bones insignia of the robber band in the picture on his garments with the sign announcing the picture, walked daily through the busy thoroughfares of the city handing out Aerograms to the passing throng. His striking costume attracted a good deal of attention.

By his time the picture was going so strong at the Broadway that the manager decided to hold it over for another week.

The permit for the street parade having been denied, a plan was made to frustrate the police in their attempts to stop the exploitation of the picture on the grounds that it interfered with traffic. A Fifth Avenue motor bus was hired to run its regular route daily and carry a special party. The sides of the bus were completely covered with huge signs announcing Locklear and "The Great Air Robbery." The Naval and Militia Band sent a contingent of players to ride on top of the bus and furnish the music. This bus travelled up and down Broadway and Fifth Avenue in the thickest of traffic and the music heralded its coming. The idea was not original, but it was exceptional that it could be put over on New York's busiest fashionable drive.

In the meanwhile airplanes had been making bombing flights over the city. Among the passengers carried were Miss Agnes Smith of the New York Telegraph, Miss Delight Evans of the Photoplay Magazine and other prominent moving picture writers. Besides Miss Bromwell, Bertrand de Acosta, Eddie Killgore, Casey Jones and other well-known pilots were included in the flying contingent.

The New York exploitation stunts were primarily intended to acquaint the metropolis that the picture was playing at the Broadway. Interest in "The Great Air Robbery" already had been excited by the widespread publicity campaign mentioned above. The newspaper and magazine stories were depended on to draw the people to see the picture. The methods, judging by the crowds which attended, proved very successful.

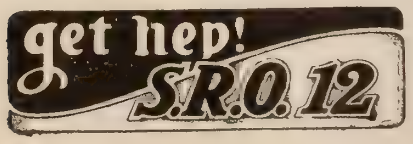
UNIVERSAL CITY SELF-SUSTAINING.

IF Universal City was besieged by an invading army the world's film capital would be able to sustain itself indefinitely.

The two thousand workers within its gates could be fed, clothed and cared for without the necessity of leaving the 680 acres comprising the great producing metropolis.

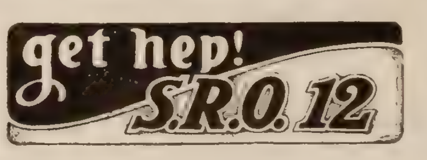
Universal's vast ranch acreage would be put under cultivation to supply food. The immense herd of cattle could be slaughtered for meat. The electrical engineering corps under Harry Brown could illuminate the buildings and keep the structures warm.

The technical department would erect fortifications. The arsenal would supply guns and ammunition. The ranch could mount a full company of cavalry on the best horses in the west.



From among the regular Universal employes an army of former service men could be recruited that could easily repel invaders. This force would be officered by former officers of the army who would resume their rank and supervise the movements of the troops.

It is not anticipated that it will ever be necessary for the world's film capital to beat its camera into a sword but the little city of dreams-come-true would give an invading force a very pleasant evening.



BONNIE HILL A "FAIR VIRGINIAN"

THEATREGOERS all over the country have been asking questions concerning Bonnie Hill, a comparative newcomer to the screen, who played the haughty society roles with Viola Dana in "The Microbe," with Nazimova in "The Brat," and who has now joined the Universal forces, her first role being a society beauty in "The Peddler," based on the Saturday Evening Post story by Henry C. Rowland.

Miss Hill is one of the most beautiful women in photoplays, and came to the screen after two years as special model for Vogue, during which time she attracted the attention of almost every important artist in America and received numerous offers to go on the musical comedy stage. She can be well described as a statuesque beauty, and there are few women in fildom who can wear stunning clothes with such natural grace.

Miss Hill was born at Peterboro, Virginia, and comes of a socially prominent family in the South. She joined the Greenwich Village colony in New York just for a lark about four years ago, and it was there that she became interested in modeling, at the request of several artist friends. Her success on the screen seems assured.

The Wigwam—one of the oddest buildings in the United States. This building, the property of Paul W. Litchfield, after whom the town of Litchfield, Arizona, is named, is an exact replica of the Pueblo or Cliff Dwelling Indians' homes. Every feature in the houses of the ancient cliff dwellers is present in The Wigwam, even to such minute details as the use of rustic ladders in place of stairways. In the days of the cliff dwellers the ladders were necessary in order that when an enemy appeared the cliff dweller could mount to the roof or upper stories of his home dragging the ladders after him, thereby making his family and himself immune to the attacks of a lowly foe. The ancient cliff dwellers also always had on hand a goodly pile of stones on the roofs of their residences from which they selected very hard ones to hurl down at their enemy to make his scaling of the walls even more impossible. Even this feature has not been neglected in The Wigwam, for on the topmost roof of all reposes a pile of stones.

It serves the purpose of a guest house and is open at all times to visitors to Litchfield and also contains a large directors room where the directors of the plantation hold their meetings. All furniture and woodwork in the building is made of roughly finished wood, and at all times a maid and cook are in attendance. Although ancient in architecture, it is most modern in appointment, having all the modern conveniences. Electrically lighted throughout, the bulbs are cleverly hidden from view by being placed in inverted pots and pieces of ancient Indian bric-a-brac.

Raising Cotton In An Arizona Desert

fore. Harry Levey, general manager of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was called in to make a motion picture record of the entire industry, and already 30,000 feet of this interesting and educating film have been developed and will soon be seen by the motion picture audiences of America.

The very fact that cotton is grown in such large quantities in Arizona, will indeed come as a surprise to the American public, which can never think of cotton without associating it with the South and pickaninnies, strumming guitars, and linen clad, white goateed colonels. And the American public cannot think of Arizona without associating it with alkali dust, cactus and other things natural to that southwestern state. But the present educational film, soon to be released, will clear up any misconceptions the public may have as to Arizona.

One feature of the film is the Wigwam House, located at Litchfield. The Wigwam House is perhaps one of the oddest buildings in the United States. The property of Paul W. Litchfield, after whom the town is named, and costing almost $100,000 with furnishings, it is an exact replica of the cliff dwelling or Pueblo Indians' home.

Every feature in the homes of the ancient cliff dwelling Indians is faithfully reproduced in The Wigwam, even to such minute details as the use of rustic, mobile ladders in place of stairways. In the days of the cliff dwellers, removable ladders were necessary in order that when an enemy appeared the cliff dweller could mount to the roof or upper stories of his home, dragging the ladders after him, thereby making his family and himself immune to the attacks of a lowly foe.

Reposing on the roof of every cliff dweller's domicile was also a goodly-sized pile of rocks, which served as ammunition in those primitive days, and from which the cliff dweller could at his leisure select large and particularly rough ones to hurl down at his enemy to make his enemy's scaling of the walls even more impossible. Even this feature has not been neglected in The Wigwam, for on the topmost roof of all reposes a pile of stones. However, they are there for ornamental purposes only, and will never be called into play to serve the part of ammunition.

The Wigwam serves the purpose of a guest house at Litchfield at the close of the day are always made welcome. the directors of the company meet when in that neighborhood, and the managers of the plantation meet to discuss matters of business. The latch string at the Wigwam House is always out, and visitors finding themselves in Litchfield at the close of the day are always made welcome.

All furniture in this odd house, as well as the woodwork in the building, is made of roughly finished wood, and although the architecture of the building is, in design, thousands of years old, in appointment it has every convenience of the most modern sort. Electrically lighted throughout, the bulbs are cleverly hidden from view by being contained in inverted pots and pieces of ancient Indian bric-a-brac of the most curious and artistic sort. To further aid and comfort the weary traveller a maid and native Indian cook, well versed in the Mexican culinary art of making the most delicious tomales, chili con carne and tortillas, are on duty.

The Broncho Kid	Hoot Gibson

"Half Portion" Adams	George Field

OWING to an unfortunate mix-up in ordering, two towns in the grand and glorious West were deprived of the great indulgence. No, not booze, cigarettes. Goldspur and Lasco, the two towns in question were plumb loco for a smoke. The last pack was put up as a prize and the Bronco Kid won it in the closest race of his career. But over in Goldspur they heard of a small consignment coming on the next stage and decided to go out and meet it.

In the meantime, "No-luck" Eddie Fielding had written to his sister to come out and share the prosperity which he anticipated as the outcome of his claim. The next day he found it was worthless. He brooded over this fact a few weeks and decided that he would have to hold up the stage to get money somehow to support his sister. As luck would have it he tried to hold up the stage the tobacco was on, not dreaming that his sister would come on that same stage. But he was not startled enough by seeing her to desist, and he got the fatal "box" and escaped. Only his sister had seen him and the Broncho Kid, who had tried a rescue but had been prevented by the beauty of Stella. When he learned her story he made a break for Eddie's cabin and surprised him in the act of taking out two cartons of cigarettes.

"Terbacer, that's worse than money. They'll lynch you sure if they find that on you."

He was right, too. That Goldspur bunch was so rabid that they decided to hold up the stage themselves. They were like a nest of angry hornets when they found that No Luck Eddie had been ahead of them. They descended on the unlucky Eddie's cabin like a cyclone. But Broncho had planned it all out for the brother of his new divinity. He had blazed a trail with boxes of cigarettes away from the cabin and up into a hollow blind where they lost themselves, and when each cowboy had a cigarette in his mouth he straightway forgot about the heinous crime of No Luck Eddie Fielding.

Larry Donovan	"Hoot" Gibson
Marjorie Taylor	Mildred Moore
Zeb Taylor	"Tote" Ducrow
"Dusky" Walters	George Field

THE mid-summer life of the Circle C Ranch would have been pretty quiet had it not been for two things—the practical joking of Larry Donovan, the boss of the ranch, and the presence of "Dusky" Walters and his band of outlaws and cattle thieves in the neighborhood. Larry did not know about the band and probably he would have cared less if he had known for all Larry cared about was his little joke and he carried this to extremes. The only person Larry took seriously was Marjorie Taylor whose father owned the neighboring ranch, and he was willing and anxious to surrender to her for life.

One day when he was calling on Marjorie, her father came in with a set of green rattles and a large sized shudder. "That's the fifth rattler I've killed to-day!" he declared. Everyone hated rattlers and the peculiar and unmistakable noise that the reptile makes just before he is going to strike would cause a mummy to jump out of its swathings. The episode put a new idea into Larry's head and he began to practice the hiss of the rattler until he had it down fine. He tried it on the gang when he went home, and twenty men jumped forty feet in the air.

Just then came word that Dusky Walters had been cornered in Turtle Canyon and the whole gang rushed to cut them off at the pass. Most of the band were captured, but Walters and two of his men came through, though Walters had a bullet in his arm from Larry's gun. He decided to get even with Larry by stealing his girl and taking her to a cabin on the desert. He knew that Larry would follow and he was ready for him. As Larry got to a poisoned spring with his mouth parched and his eyes red and bleary, Walters rose up from the other side of the spring with a gun in either hand. He had the drop but Larry was a quick thinker. The next instant Walters heard the dreaded hiss of the rattler and he jumped just the same as any one else would have jumped. Only when he came down he was looking into Larry's gun. So the rattler's hiss finally brought Larry to the cabin just in time to save the girl from two lieutenants of Walters'.

WESTCOTT and Stella, caught in the explosion in the mine, are rescued by the Lion Man. In leaving the tunnel they come across the mother lode that has been opened up by the explosion, and realize that they must go to the land office at Quartzite at once and record the mine.

But Enright, Lacey and Celeste also discover the lode, put up their notices and hastily ride for the land office. Some of their men they despatch to prevent Westcott and Stella from reaching Quartzite.

Westcott and Stella are leaving by auto as these men ride up, open fire on them, and in so doing puncture their gasoline tank. Running out of gasoline, Westcott leaves to obtain some from a ranch house, and Stella is made a captive by the men, who have followed them. Westcott, returning, outwits them by a ruse, frees Stella, and they proceed on.

The Lion Man, who has overheard Enright, Lacey and Celeste planning to beat Westcott and Stella to the land office, comes to Quartzite, and determining to hold the land agent until Westcott and Stella arrive, he goes to his cabin and makes him a prisoner.

Enright, Lacey and Celeste hide as they see Westcott and Stella approaching. Finding that the land office will not open for another half hour, Westcott and Stella decide to have a bite to eat.

Enright and Celeste decide to go to the land agent's home and return to the office with him. Lacey is despatched to get rid of Westcott. He manages to lure him from the restaurant to which he and Stella had gone, knocks him senseless and throws him into the yard of an alligator farm.

Enright and Celeste arrive at the land agent's cabin, and succeed in cornering the Lion Man.

Lacey, having gotten rid of Westcott, decides to put Stella out of the way as well. As she is seated by an open window, he tosses in his rope, managing to get it over her shoulders. The other end of the rope is tied to a horse, which is frightened and dashes off, dragging Stella from the restaurant window.

"Burnt Wings"

WHEN pretty Joan stole out from her husband's side that night in Paris it was to make the greatest sacrifice a woman ever can—so tremendous a sacrifice that every girl and every woman when you play "Burnt Wings" will ask herself: "Did she do wrong or right?"—a point so puzzling—so vital, as to make women ask each other: "What do you think?"

The picture that sets womenfolk a-talking is the picture that packs your house.

Goes to Australia

James V. Bryson.

LAEMMLE'S AMBASSADOR TO THE EASTERN WORLD.

Bryson Starts on Three Years' Tour to Establish Exchanges and Start Exploitation.

ON March 16th, James V. Bryson, for twelve years connected with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and the organizations from which it was developed, sailed from San Francisco for Australia. Arrangements for his trip were hurried and made largely by telegraph, when Mr. Laemmle decided definitely to send a world representative to Australia, India, Singapore China, Japan and the Phillipines.

The first, and probably the most important office of all will be established in Australia and Mr. Bryson is accompanied by Dewitt G. C. Adams, whom he will leave as manager at Sidney. After thoroughly surveying Australia and establishing exploitation centers and methods for Universal pictures, Mr. Bryson will continue on his merry way and it is not likely that his friends in Minneapolis or New York will see him before three years at least.

A great many Universal pictures have been sold and shown in Australia, but so far there has been no Universal exchange and no Universal exploitation on the Continent. Mr. Bryson is an old-time showman and will equipped to give a surperb account of his stewardship in any country. He has been connected with Mr. Laemmle and with Mr. Laemmle's various institutions for twelve years and prior to that was for four years in the infant motion picture business as a salesman. Twelve years ago, he was selected by Mr. Laemmle to pick out a suitable location for a Pacific Coast exchange. He got as far as Minneapolis and liked it so well that he located the exchange there. Under various names and in various localities it has existed and mightily prospered down to the present time. During almost all of this time Mr. Bryson has been the manager of the exchange. He will be succeeded as manager by J. D. Roderick. Mr. Roderick was at one time manager of the Milwaukee office and was also district manager of Universal's southwest territory.

Mr. Bryson writes a characteristic good-bye to his friends and confreres and it is so much like him that it is printed verbatim as he himself wrote it.

A sample program from the Empire Theatre of Homer City, Pa.

HERE is a letter which speaks for itself. It was received by Herman Stern, manager of the Pittsburgh Exchange, from J. M. Risinger, manager of the Empire Theatre of Homer City, Pa. Homer City will not stack up very big even with the new figures that are coming in from the census enumerators, and the Empire only opens its doors on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays, but the people in Homer know what is good entertainment and what is not. They know now that Universal is good entertainment. Here is a letter to prove that Universal can supply, unassisted, all of the variety and quality that any audience can desire.

Jan. 22, 1920.

Gentlemen:—

I ran a well-known service in the Empire Theatre for more than two years. Recently I made a change in favor of Universal, the theatre being now an exclusive Universal house, and I do not regret having made this change, for everything has worked out to the eminent satisfaction of all concerned. My patrons have been more than pleased with the quality of entertainment afforded by Universal pictures, and when they are so well satisfied, why, of course, I am too.

I have always been careful about giving recommendations, but I feel it is due to the service that I have received from Universal to do so now. "The Brute Breaker," "The Unpainted Woman," "Loot" and "Destiny" are to be classed among the best pictures I have run and I anticipate equally fine results from forthcoming pictures. Yours very truly,

J. M. RISINGER,
Empire Theatre,
Homer City, Pa.

How He Spent His Hundred Dollars

NICHOLAS AMOS, top salesman in the Universal Des Moines office in the recent $6,000 drive, found a remarkable way to dispose of the Century spot which the Universal Exchange management sent to him as the prize which he had won. If he had bought an automobile with it, or a house and lot, or an airplane, or any of the other conventional things, we would never have been induced to run this story about him in the Moving Picture Weekly, but he did something quite out of the ordinary and something which reflects a great deal of credit upon him.

Mr. Amos felt that every one of the employees of the Des Moines Exchange had been instrumental in helping him to keep the business of so many exhibitors in line, to hold what he had and to acquire the new accounts which put him at the head of the list. He felt that every employee should have an opportunity of sharing in the prize which he had won because each one had had a part in winning it, so here's what Amos did. He had a little dinner and dance in the exchange to which he invited everyone of the employees of the Universal, together with their families. The dinner wasn't elaborate and the music wasn't expensive, but they managed to have a very jolly time and every employee felt as though he personally had been rewarded for the three months drive which brought the prize to Mr. Amos. Incidentally, Mr. Amos felt fully repaid for his generosity in sharing the prize as he did. We wouldn't be at all surprised to hear that he paid out more for his little show than the amount of the prize.

LAURIE DEVON and Rodney Bangs wrote a successful play. Laurie was the genius—Rodney the plugger. Devon refused to try to write another—because he was rich. He lacked an incentive.

When Laurie looked in his mirror one morning he saw the reflection of a beautiful girl, seated at her window with a revolver raised to her forehead. She thrilled him. He raced over to her studio apartment around the corner, and prevented her from committing suicide. It was natural, too, that Laurie Devon should appoint himself guardian of this wonderful girl who called herself Doris Williams and seemed to be in constant fear of some terrible influence.

The terrible influence proved to be one Ransome Shaw, a villainous person who followed Miss Williams everywhere and finally decoyed Laurie into a mysterious abode and dumped him into the cellar for the night, during which time Shaw made off with Miss Williams. But Laurie was hot on their trail the next morning, with his speedy roadster, and by night he had traced them to an old farmhouse on Long Island. Disguising himself as a mechanic he cleverly carried off Miss Williams who was being held a prisoner. All under the cover of night.

But just as their getaway seemed certain, Shaw himself showed up, and Laurie for the third time had to fight against fearful odds. While Miss Williams waited in the car, Laurie fought his last fight with Shaw. This time they used revolvers and Laurie saw Shaw crumple up on the ground as he fired his last shot and dashed off to take Miss Williams back to safety.

Returning to his apartment after his terrible ordeal, with the girl safe and sound, his friends burst in upon him and tell him that all the harrowing events of the past few days had been pre-arranged especially to provide him a thrill and a plot for another play, and that all the principals in these episodes, from Miss Williams to Ransome Shaw, were actors engaged for the occasion. Laurie then informs them that their little drama had worked fine for it resulted in his killing a man. Miss Williams asked to see the gun.

"It's the weapon you took from me," she said, "and it was loaded with blank cartridges."

BULL MONTANA A PERFECT K. O. TYPE

THE awed portion of the public who have seen Bull Montana, appearing in "The Girl in No. 29," now showing at the .... theatre, will readily agree with many film directors, that Montana is the most perfect type of the abysmal brute, whatever that is. Bull rather prides himself on being "The Hardest Looking Guy," now at large. But under his hairy expanse of chest there beats an over-sized heart, according to those who know him, and many a man whose physiognomy is more—well, orthodox, to put it kindly—would do well to copy Montana's affability and constant good humor.

Montana was a professional wrestler and "20 minute egg" of the New York East Side, when discovered there some four years ago by Douglas Fairbanks. After assuring himself that it was genuine and that a man could really look like that, the irrepressible "Doug" brought Bull back to Southern California with him to show to his friends. Montana appeared in Fairbanks' next picture, taking the part of a second story man, a character all the critics agreed the new actor was admirably fitted by nature to represent. After appearing in several ensuing productions, it was soon evident that he could do more than stand in front of a camera to be photographed as one of Natures vagaries. There were certain kinds of parts that he could play and play well.

When Jack Ford, the well-known Universal Director, was selecting his cast for "The Girl in No. 29," he engaged Montana to play one of the thugs always ready to do the villian's bidding. Montana gets more than one laugh all his own from the audience. He is particularly good in his terrific fight with Frank Mayo, the Star of the picture.

The short scene in which Bull Montana, who is supposed to be holding the girl a prisoner in an isolated house, succumbs to the witchery of her smile, shows the contrasting results obtainable in facial architectures, when the same number of eyes, ears and other features are used in each case.

Bull himself, admits that he is a "Hard looking Egg." He was formerly a professional wrestler and both ears became badly "Cauliflowered" during his mat career. Then there are other characteristics about him that have won him the title of "The Homeliest Man in the World." He is rather proud of it.

Miss Anderson is the girl with whom Frank Mayo falls madly in love in "The Girl in No. 29," when he sees her reflection in a mirror. She is that kind of a girl. She has masses of golden hair, and a smile that would light up the darkest of rooms.

Although Montana was depicting the brute incarnate in his scene with her, she really wasn't at all frightened, for he is affable, good humored, and really a pretty good sort, according to those who know him.

But when he scowls ferociously, and starts after the Hero with a hatchet the most intrepid might easily become alarmed.

WHO FRANK MAYO IS.

THE versatility of Frank Mayo, the popular Universal star, is more than ever demonstrated in his latest picture, "The Girl in Number 29," which comes to the .... Theatre on .... The photoplay is the Universal production of Elizabeth Jordan's novel, "The Girl in the Mirror."

In "Lasca" the star had the part of a western hero. He showed that he could both ride and shoot. In "The Brute Breaker" he bested the bullies of several north woods lumber camps. In "Burnt Wings," one of his more recent Universal productions, he had the congenial role of a young artist of Paris and New York. In each, the character he portrayed seemed to be the one for which he was best fitted by nature. In "The Girl in Number 29" local theatregoers will have an opportunity to see him as a young man of fashion abundantly able to look out for himself in a desperate rough-and-tumble fight with a band of thugs. The star is just as likeable in his latest success as in his former pictures.

Mayo is an actor by instinct, birth and training. He is the son of Edwin Mayo, an actor well known on the American stage, and a grandson of the late Frank Mayo, who established himself in the histrionic hall of fame as star of many stage classics and especially with his presentation of "Davy Crockett" and "Puddin' Head Wilson" a generation ago. While still a very small boy the present film idol played child parts in his grandfather's company, although at the age of six he was sent to a military school, where he remained for ten years.

The star of "The Girl in Number 29" declares his greatest ambition is first to write his name large on the screen and then return to the stage and uphold the Mayo family's reputation in the spoken drama.

ADVANCE STORY

MOST screen plays are classed either as dramas, comedies or melodramas; but the management at the .... Theatre promises a melodramatic comedy in "The Girl in Number 29," a Universal production starring Frank Mayo, which is to be shown on ....

Frank Mayo, who will be well remembered as the star of "The Brute Breaker," "Lasca" and "A Peddler of Lies" appears in this story as Laurie Devon, a young man of considerable wealth who has turned his literary ability to good use by collaborating with a friend, Rodney Bangs, in the writing of a play. When it proves a success he is quite satisfied to rest on his laurels, although his friend, more ambitious, attempts to interest him in the writing of other stage stories. When the efforts of Bangs and the theatrical manager prove ineffectual, Rodney enlists the services of Devon's sister, and together they plan to put a thrill into Laurie's life.

One morning not long after, Laurie happens to see in his dressing-room mirror the reflection of a young girl evidently in a nearby apartment. She is holding a pistol to her head, apparently bent on suicide. Devon rushes to the adjacent building, takes possession of the weapon, and offers to be the young lady's knight errant. She refuses to divulge her secret but intimates that she is pursued by an enemy who is driving her to self destruction. Then things begin to happen very swiftly and Laurie finds himself in the midst of a maelstrom of exciting adventure. Just when the entire story threatens to become a tragedy, a curious turn of affairs transforms it to a delightful comedy.

Elizabeth Jordan's popular novel, "The Girl in the Mirror," is the basis for this photodrama, which was directed by Jack Ford, and in which Frank Mayo is supported by a splendid cast including Claire Anderson, Elinor Fair, Harry Hilliard, Robert Bolder, Arthur Hoyt, Ray Ripley and Bull Montana.

Attends Utica Convention as the Representative of Gov. Alfred E. Smith

MRS. HENRY MOSKOWITZ
©BY UNIVERSAL EDUCATIONAL

MRS. HENRY MOSKOWITZ, who recently announced her affiliation with the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, attended the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors Convention at Utica as the representative of Governor Alfred E. Smith. As secretary of the State Reconstruction Commission, and as a member of the State Labor Board, Mrs. Moskowitz came in contact with the motion picture industry, but the Utica convention gave her the opportunity of seeing the exhibitors at close range.

In her report to Governor Smith she calls the New York exhibitors "responsible, conscientious men."

"Knowing that I was deeply interested in motion pictures—sufficiently so as to associate my future with the industry—and having on his conscience a regret that he could not attend in person, Governor Smith asked me to attend the convention of the New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors in Utica as his representative," said Mrs. Moskowitz in an interview yesterday. "I was very glad of this opportunity to view this branch of the industry at close range as I have just come into it, and I had known the exhibitor heretofore at long range only, and as a social worker interested in community amusement problems.

"In the early days when we first discovered that there was such a thing as commercialized amusement, and that motion pictures then just beginning to be shown were likely to prove an important factor in this field, no such group of exhibitors as I found in Utica existed. In those days it was a branch of the industry that people thought 'anybody could run.' It had no problems then other than finding a vacant store, putting in a few seats, covering every possible space where light might enter with something as black as you could find, opening the doors letting in the neighborhood, collecting the nickels and fighting the 'uplifters.'

"I found in Utica a group of responsible men, conscious of their duties in the community and eager to fulfill them. I found men with a real conception that they form the last trench line between the producer and the public, and enthusiastic to give to that public the best that they could find in the field.

"Every business has its peculiar problems, and where the social worker has been inclined to look upon the motion picture exhibitor as nothing but a money making man, I wish that a hundred of them could have attended the convention and could have been able to see the seriousness with which they considered whether the time was ripe and whether they could conscientiously ask the Legislature to permit them to have children in their houses, and whether they were able to afford the children the kind of protection to which they think them entitled.

"I have seen many conventions, and convention psychology is something that is apparent from the moment you enter the door. This convention had enthusiasm written all over it, every individual participating, and the group as a whole was enthusiastic. They were sure they were being served to the utmost of their capacity by their officers; they were conscious of the dignity of their work and they were more than anxious to be an upstanding, progressive business group in the community."

a certain film," says James V. Bryson, of the Universal exchange, "but this time, believe me, it takes real nerve, and plenty of it when you have a boat ticket in your pocket and look at the map and see that it takes you to the other side of the world. And that is just the feeling that's over me now. When I go anywhere I generally wait until I'm there before I commence to talk about it, but this time when I find myself with a ticket and a passport in my pocket and going to a place I've no chance to talk back from, I'm simply forced to say good-by, and go. Often I've wondered how a man ready to be hung must feel when it comes to say good-by to the world forever. With me I'm not exactly saying that but I am saying good-by to those who to me are near and dear, and that's to the men and women in the moving-picture business in this territory, those whom I have dealt with and those whom I haven't.

"It has been the loyal support and the business that the exhibitors of this territory have given me that has made my good luck possible, and I appreciate and cherish those thoughts more than anything else on earth outside of my wife, and can you blame me? No matter whether you have been my customer or not, you are in the business and it's the business as a whole that has made me and given me the job.

"And to you, my friends, whether you live in a big town or a small one, whether you are the owner of one or a dozen houses, if you are the operator or the janitor, and to my competitors, I say good-by for now. God bless you now and always, and many thanks for all that you have helped me do, and helping me being recognized by the 'boss' and getting a better job. Drop me a line way out there in Sydney, Australia, and I'll tell you a lot about what's on the other side of the globe."

"No Such Thing"

says Edith Roberts

ANY man who thinks a woman wears pretty clothes to catch his eye and attract him, is vain, conceited, egotistical and wholly mistaken, says Edith Roberts, the little Universal star recently seen in "Lasca" and "The Triflers." Although she is one of the smartest dressers in the Los Angeles film colony, Miss Roberts boils with rage when it is intimated she has the other sex in mind.

"It's just an old time fallacy," she says, "that when a woman does her best to emulate the example of the peacock she is doing it for the sole purpose of attracting and pleasing the opposite sex. Not one man in a thousand appreciates the difference between a Paris model and a Sixth Avenue creation—and every woman knows it. Of course, most men can appreciate the general effect of a well groomed woman, but as for distinguishing between the newest modes and the vintage of the autumn before last, the male sex, as a whole is as ignorant as a Fiji Islander.

"But with women it's different. Every well dressed well informed woman knows what's what in the matter of dress. Women are their own severest critics and it is to please the members of her own sex that an actress must do her level best to acquire the very latest models to wear in pictures that call for fashionable costumes."

In "The Daring Duchess," her latest picture, Miss Roberts wears all sorts of feminine garments, from the simple ginghams of a country girl to the Parisian finery of a titled heiress.

"The Daring Duchess" is a comedy drama which affords Edith Roberts an opportunity to do, in a new way, those things she did so well in "Lasca," and "The Triflers," besides permitting her to show other phases of her fascinating personality. It tells the story of a girl born and raised on a western ranch in America who learns that by the death of a relative in England she has fallen heir to a fortune and a title. Packing her humble effects, principally a saddle which she had won as a prize in a riding exhibition, she journeys across the sea, only to find an array of clever people determined to cheat her out of her inheritance. Of course the little American wins out in the end, after meeting with adventures both humorous and exciting. In Miss Roberts' support are Harold Miller, Rudolph Christians, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Katherine Kirkham, Ogden Crane, Hugh Saxton, Lecta Lorraine and Leonard Clapham. It was written by Tarkington Baker.

Edith Roberts in "The Daring Duchess"

Harrison Says:--

about "The Peddler of Lies"

THIS is one of the best society crook plays released lately. The situations combine human interest, thrills, and suspense:

The hero, impersonating a peddler, is really a detective, detailed to capture a gang of society crooks. A young girl's brother is suspected as having stolen a valuable diamond. The hero knows the young man is innocent. He eventually captures the thieves, who were posing as society people, and were entertained by them. He thus proves the innocence of the young man. He marries the young lady.

The picture conveys no bad moral for children. Good for any theatre.

M. KASHIN is a past master in the art of exploitation and that is one reason why he is in such high demand as a big theatre manager. At the present time he is managing the Holman Theatre in Montreal. The title of "The Great Air Robbery," which was to play the Holman on Feb. 15th, suggested a stunt to Mr. Kashin which he had pulled before, but which was particularly adapted to this title. He took out a full page advertisement with the Herald of Montreal in the form which is shown above. The cut has been made in two pieces to indicate where the fold in the newspaper comes. You will notice that the top part of the cut looks like a tremendous newspaper sensation, whereas if you see the entire sheet together, the advertisement on the bottom of the cut gives the thing away. Kashin bought 5,000 extra Heralds for this occasion, folded them on the page where his Ad was printed, and hired a lot of newsboys to stand on the corners and give them out.

The strange part of this was that they discovered it was easy enough to sell the papers, whereas if they gave them away the people thought there was something the matter with them. After several of the boys got on to this fact, the papers went like hotcakes, and the Herald boys who were selling the newspapers with the ordinary page outside, discovered that they got on very much better by folding their papers to show the extra, "The Great Air Robbery." The cut on the right of the page shows the advertisement which Kashin devised and ran the full length of the page in the Montreal papers.

As a result of the exploitation previously done, and the newspaper stunt Kashin started an extra show at ten o'clock, and this show was one of the most heavily patronized of all the performances during the day.

NOT all of the famous violins are made in Italy or by Stradivarious. The Screen Magazine has discovered a modest violin maker who lives in the Cumberland Mountains and is sending many famous fiddles on their musical way. His name is William H. McGee and he has been making violins for a number of years. The fifty-ninth number of the Magazine shows how Mr. McGee constructs these instruments, which are the nearest approach to the human voice. Curley maple is the biggest part of the violin, but the tone quality of the instrument depends on the top, which is made of spruce seasoned for three hundred years.

Pat Sullivan comes to life again with a very entertaining cartoon entitled "Stung," and Mrs. Margaret Wade Grinager exhibits a number of her fascinating models. One is called the Triste, a mourning negligee. The Mascot is an oriental creation, while the Bird of Paradise is an evening gown of silver and apricot brocade. An Americanization cartoon by I. Ticktin called "A Stirring Bolshevictory" gives a patriotic touch which permits one to laugh with equanimity at a strange assortment of proof reader's mistakes which bring the Magazine to a close.

THE town of Beer Bottle Bend is so tough that the babies chew tobacco. It is run in a high, wide and handsome manner by the owner of Riley's saloon.

There is a little church in the town that was built in haste many years ago when there happened to be a lull in the festivities. It had been securely boarded up for years. Mr. Riley intended that is should remain so for his Sunday business was booming.

A travelling evangelist, who learned his profession as a circus performer arrives in the town with Charles Bullephant, a peevish elephant and Joe Martin, a highly cultured oang-outang. He also has Buster, a famous trained horse.

With the help of his friends he sets out to make Beer Bottle Bend a church going community.

Riley realizes that he has strong competition and tries to upset the skypilot's plans by having his favorite dancing girl vamp him. The preacher, who is somewhat of an athelete, takes the toughest of the bar-beetles down the line for a sound thrashing and begins work with his animals.

Charley Bullephant stampedes them into the church. Joe Martin dashes around and drags in deliquents. Buster hauls off and flattens out the unruly with his last two feet.

Within a fortnight Beer Bottle Bend enjoyes a change of heart. On Sunday morning the little church is filled to the brim. The minister hands out large slices of the gospel, the animals stand by for more service and right again triumps over might.

"A Lion's Alliance."

Two-reel Century Comedy

Written and Directed by Fred Fishback

MERTA and Bud were two great big grown up kinds, claiming as their parents, a four-foot Daddy, and a three-foot Ma. However, they do not escape spankings, etc., from their Dad, who was a near relative of Simon Legree.

Buddy catches Dad making love to the nurse and then the fun begins! The nurse had a better half—like all nurses. The better half invites Dad and Bud to come to his beauty parlor to be improved upon.

They go there—are given some nice gentle massages by the chief bully, Blue, the colored heavy-weight champion of the town.

When they get through with the treatments, they don't know whether they are on the head or feet.

Like all country towns—there was a circus, and while Mert and Bud are chasing each other in and out of the tents, they accidently chase through the lion's cage and leave the door open. The lions escape and some of them find their way into the Beauty Parlor, where several damsels are indulging in the Fountain of Youth, etc.

A little colored boy, the mascot of the Parlors, tries to escape the lions and hides in a filing cabinet, but Mr. Lion manages to open the draw—Picky escapes through the transom of the door, but not before another lion has discovered him. He is chased for miles and miles by the wicked lions—He gives them the slip and is calmly eating pumpkin pie when his Dad, Blue arrives. All ends in a happy peaceful way—the lions fall into the tank in the beauty parlor and sink to the regions below.

"The Furnace of Fury."

CAST

Stella	Kathleen O'Connor
Westcott	Jack Perrin
Enright	Henry Barrows
Lacey	Leonard Clapham
Celeste	Gertrude Astor
Lion Man	Mack Wright

WESTCOTT has been left senseless in the yard of an alligator farm, and some of the hungry animals are surrounding him. Stella is being dragged helpless behind a frightened horse. The Lion Man, just about to be unmasked by Enright and Celeste, breaks away from them, dashes out of the land agent's cabin, in which he had been caught, and as the horse that is dragging Stella passes by, he makes a flying mount on it. Then, turning and picking up Stella, he rides on.

Stella tells him that something may have happened to Westcott, and that she must get back to the land office at once. The Lion Man takes her back, but seeing Lacey and one of his men in front of the land office, Stella goes around to the side and climbs in a window. When the land agent comes, she grabs his gun as he enters, bolts the door, and forces him to draw up the papers recording Westcott's mine. Enright and Celeste, who have come to the land office, see this through a window, and with Lacey start to smash in the door.

The Lion Man, passing the alligator farm, hears Westcott's calls for help and rescues him. Westcott then starts for the land office.

Stella has the mine recorded as Enright and the others break in. Then Westcott appears, and he and Stella leave, well satisfied.

In the meanwhile the body of the Sheriff has been discovered in Enright's cabin, and a telephone message is sent to the deputy at Quartzite to place Enright and Celeste under arrest, the informer stating that they have gone to the land office.

The deputy rushes to the land office, asks if a Mr. Enright and a Miss La Rue have been there, and Enright, seeing Westcott and Stella driving away, points them out as the parties wanted. The deputy obtains a machine, gives chase and Westcott and Stella are captured. They protest that they are innocent, but the deputy places them in jail.

Enright, Celeste and Lacey, realizing that the deception will soon be discovered, decide to hide out, and they go to an old pottery works, in which a gang of moonshiners are using the pottery business only as a blind for their illegal operations.

That night the Lion Man assists Westcott and Stella to escape and they start on foot for Topaz. But coming to a house, they decide to try to rent some horses. Enright and Celeste, seeing them as they enter the moonshiners' house, lock them in. Westcott and Stella try to fight their way out.

A drunken cowboy discloses to the deputy that he obtained his liquor at the old pottery works, and with a posse the deputy starts for there.

Westcott and Stella are hurled through a trap door into the room where the pottery is being baked. Both are senseless, and Lacey, half drunk and hearing the deputy and his men above, throws them on the movable track that leads into the roaring furnace.

Steve Hatton	Bob Reeves
Dolly	Dorothy Woods
Tampa Joe	Scott Turner
Sheriff	Chick Morrison
Bud Thomas	J. Russell Powell

A REAL live actress, stranded in a little mining town and needing money to get out, started a manicure parlor in the deserted barber shop of the hotel. Next to the barber shop was the Express Office. Steve Hatton a wandering, irresponsible cowpuncher, drifted into the town and saw Dolly at work. He fell hard and spent most of his time and money getting manicured. But Dolly wasn't kind to him. So Steve went to Tampa Joe's Dive and gambled—lost most of his remaining money and then went to Bud Thomas of the hotel and offered to be the barber. Bud tried him out, and the first customer was the sheriff. Steve started in on his head with the clippers, got interested in Dolly and forgot the sheriff until he had clipped a four-inch trail across the sheriff's head. This made the Sheriff mad and he had it in for Steve and got him fired. Steve went back to Tampa Joe's and this time cleaned out the outfit. Among his winnings was a bill with an ink stain on it, which the Sheriff had paid in to the Express office. The Express office was broken into and Steve's fingerprints were found on the window sill where the entry was made. Dolly had an idea that she could match up the finger prints, so she told the sheriff and then started getting prints of her clients' fingers, while she was manicuring. Steve's prints matched up with those on the window, and Steve was too afraid of being laughed at, to tell them that his marks got on the sill when he climbed up to look at Dolly. So Steve was taken to jail, searched, and the ink-stained bill found in his pocket. The Sheriff told Steve that he had himself paid the bill to the Express Company and that it must have been in the safe the night of the robbery. Then Steve knew it was Tampa Joe who had done the dirty work as he had won that bill from Joe, so Steve made a getaway over to Joe's Dive, fell on his neck and handed him over to the Sheriff. The rest of the missing money was found in Joe's place, and Steve was set free. Dolly was so sorry that her sleuthing had sent an innocent man to jail, but her excuse was that she needed the reward. So Steve offered to share the reward with her—if she would take him, along with it. And she did.

Within a few weeks Universal will release a 1000-foot novelty reel. This release will consist of a number of startlingly odd and original subjects. The entire world is being combed for material which will present an irresistible appeal to photoplay patrons possessing even the most jaded of appetites. It will be a combination of humor, travel and adventure. It will contain examples of marvelous trick photography, the like of which the industry has heretofore never seen.

The Name We Want

We want a NEW NAME that will present an irresistible appeal to photoplay patrons of every degree, from the type of audience ences which attend the palatial picture palaces, to those whose sole amusement resort is the 200-seat house. The name should be short and distinctive. Under no circumstances will a name in which the word "magazine" appears be considered.

Terms of the Contest

This contest is for the single prize of $250. It is open to Exhibitors only. There are no other prizes. There is no limit on the number of names you may suggest. IF MORE THAN ONE EXHIBITOR SUGGESTS THE NAME SELECTED BY THE JUDGES, AN AMOUNT EQUAL TO THAT OF THE PRIZE WILL BE AWARDED TO EACH OF THE WINNERS.

Contest Period

The contest for this $250 prize for the best name to be given Universal's wonder-reel, opens with the publication of this advertisement in the current issue of this paper. IT CLOSES FRIDAY, APRIL 30th. All suggestions must be in the hands of Universal by midnight of that date.

Write your suggestions on one side of the paper only, and be sure to give the name and address of your theatre. Write clearly and legibly. Lists of names not containing the name and address of your theatre will not be considered.

THE JUDGES

In selecting the judges for this contest, Universal has obtained the services of three men who are known wherever motion pictures are shown. Their decision will be announced as soon as possible after the closing of the contest. They are:

S. BARRETT McCORMICK,
Managing Director, Circle Theatre, Indianapolis.

WM. A. JOHNSTON,

JAMES L. HOFF,

IMPORTANT In forwarding your lists of names, be sure to address them care Hal Hodes, Universal Film Manufacturing Company, 1600 Broadway, New York City.

Famous Writer Opposes Censorship

THOSE who are familiar with the recent activities of the National Board of Review in formulating plans in cooperation with the Authors' League to combat state censorship, may not be surprised at the news contained in this caption. That a man of Walter Pritchard Eaton's literary standing should share with his confreres their views on this subject seems at first thought natural. As Everett Dean Martin, chairman of the National Board, has put it, "The trouble with all this censorship is that there is no limit beyond which it may not be carried . . . . Do you realize that if Chaucer or Shakespeare or Tolstoi or Keats or Shelley or Fielding or Macaulay or even Ibsen were alive in America today his writings would be under the ban as obscene and not permitted to circulate through the mails? The motion picture is a new form of expression. . . . Let us be extremely careful that we do not allow obsolete and provincial prejudices to forever prevent the appearance of great dramatic artists capable of using the motion picture as Milton and Petrarch used poetry, and Ibsen the drama;" and as the Authors' League put it in a recent statement of their position in the matter, "Legalized censorship of the film is . . . not less dangerous than a censorship of the press or the stage, for it places a ban upon ideas . . . Great as has been the improvement of the film in recent years, it would be greater and more rapid were the menace of censorship eliminated and the art allowed to develop along its natural lines, governed by common sense and the good taste of American people."

But to those who know Mr. Eaton as a none too gentle critic of even the best motion picture productions, the following letter from him in the Pittsfield Berkshire Eagle of March 9, called forth by the attempt of Massachusetts reformers to fasten a censorship on that State, appears of particular significance. Mr. Eaton argues against censorship not only because of the fetters it casts around the development of thought, but because, in Mr. Eaton's own words, and as the National Board of Review has repeatedly emphasized, it "cuts to the fundamental right of men and women to enjoy their leisure in their own way, and the fundamental necessity for artists to be free and untrammeled in their expression, in their choice of subject, if art is to make any progress whatever, or stand for anything except pious hokum." Mr. Eaton's letter follows:

To the Editor of the Eagle:

In the last Eagle which has succeeded in breaking through the drifts, I read a communication from some woman who is evidently issuing propaganda (everybody is a propagandist these days) for a state censorship of motion pictures. Nobody can successfully accuse me of any great love for, or undue sympathy with, the movies, but I see no reason why the millions of patrons of the silent drama have not quite as good a right to their entertainment as the patrons of the spoken drama. State, or any other kind of official censorship, is a mediaeval relic. In all its history, it has never succeeded in doing anything except blunder and obstruct. No one man, and no group of men, ever has been, or ever will be competent to say what is good and what is bad for their fellow men to see—not, at least, until all men and women are just alike, and all meat is meat for all men; which time, praise God, is still far away. The official censor, meddling with morals and art, invariably hits what is true, i. e., what is art, and passes what is false, hence what is not art. The long history of the British drama, for example, has been a constant battle between progress, as exemplified by the real dramatists, and reaction and stupidity on the part of the Lord Chamberlain. It is a striking case in point that one of the vile, sinful wicked, abominable films your correspondent cited as being the sort the censor would forbid in Massachusetts was "Broken Blossoms," which chances to be one of the few films that give us a hope the movies may yet evolve something truly artistic, something with genuine beauty and passion. Yes, indeed, I quite agree, it was exactly the sort of film a censor would forbid! Quite reason enough never to have a censor.

But it cuts deeper than that. It cuts to the fundamental right of men and women to enjoy their leisure in their own way, and the fundamental necessity for artists to be free and untrammeled in their expression, in their choice of subject, if art is to make any progress whatever, or stand for anything except pious hokum. If the time has come in Massachusetts when the people cannot be trusted to enjoy themselves without going to the devil, it is quite too late to bother with salvation by censorship.

AUTHORS' LEAGUE DISAPPROVES

AT a meeting of the Author's League leading authors of the country took a unanimous position against state censorship of pictures. Now that some of the best modern novels and more important magazine contributions are being adapted to motion picture form, the authors realize that they cannot afford to have their literary works when translated to the screen mutilated by the stupid action of politically appointed censors. The following is a statement of the position which the Authors' League adopted:

"Legalized censorship of the film is a dangerous departure in a free country. It is no less dangerous than a censorship of the press or the stage, for it places a ban upon ideas. The indecent, improper and immoral film can be eradicated by the same methods as are used against indecent, improper and immoral books or plays. It may make the passing of films a matter of political influence and result in consequent abuse of power. It does not reflect public opinion, but merely the professional views of the censors themselves. The experiment which has been tried in other states does not warrant such a radical departure from the principles upon which our Government is founded. Nor does there appear to be the necessity for that departure. Great as has been the improvement of the film in recent years, it would be greater and more rapid were the menace of censorship eliminated and the art allowed to develop along its natural lines, governed by common sense and the good taste of the American people."

Among those present at the meeting were Henry Sydnor Harrison, George Creel, George Middleton, Rex Beach, James Hopper, Juliet T. Bottle, Gelett Burgess, Arthur Somers Roche, Channing Pollock, Leroy Scott, Orson Lowell, Percy Mackaye, Cleves Kinkead, Rupert Hughes.

In two wonderfully human stories portrayed with the wonderfully human Carey Art

THAT wonderful thing we call "personality"—that makes some folks so human—so likeable—is just about the hardest thing to put across on the screen—yet that's exactly what Harry Carey has achieved in these two delightfully human stories—so perfectly portrayed in the Harry Carey human way that you feel they are real—the kind of picture that people come to see again and again.

The New Line Up On The S. R. O. Twelve

DID you ever stop to think what a remarkable organization it requires to turn out twelve pictures of the high standard of excellence demanded of the S R O Twelve, and not put out one bad one? You just try to shoots twelve bulls-eyes in a row, roll twelve strikes on a dry alley, or baberuth twelve home runs over the fence. You get the idea. Thank you. We started out to sell exhibitors twelve big, popular, photoplays with both drawing power and satisfying power. You, exhibitor, took them, booked them on the strength of the stars, the titles and the magic of the Universal's name and reputation for making good on its promises. Your faith was justified, just as it has always been when placed in the Universal organization, just as it was when so many of you booked the Full House Five of serials.

You may be wondering by this time why we are saying this. Most of you believe it or you would not be booking our special attractions. Here's why. We had to make a few changes in the order and titles of the S R O 12 and that gave us an opportunity to say what we would not for the world have said until we were certain, —that there is not one single one of the S R O 12 that is not fully up to what we have claimed for it in our advertising.

Oh, yes, the changes. 'Virginia," Ida M. Evan's story, in which Ann Cornwall appears as the star has been changed to "The Path She Chose." "Dodd's Diary" in which Edith Roberts will be seen will be called "Alias Miss Dodd." Here is a slightly changed order of release.

To Whom It May Concern:

Believing that one exhibitor can profit by the discreet judgment of another, we take this opportunity of commenting on the VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL, the Universal production featuring Priscilla Dean.

After having reviewed the picture personally, I immediately concluded that it was THE picture for our House, and at once got in touch with Mr. Levine, Manager of the Exchange. We booked this feature at a record film rental, but are confident that our expenditure will bring excellent results, for a production of this type is seldom seen.

The VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL will be shown at the ALHAMBRA Theatre the first week of May.

Advertising "The Great Air Robbery" in The Air in Brooklyn

This Was The Stunt

From

THE CHAT

(Yes, it's Brooklyn.)

WATCH THE SKY ON MARCH 27: FREE PASSES IN THE AIR.

RESIDENTS of the uptown section will be gazing skyward on the morning of March 27. The cause will not be a new serial phenomenon nor will there be a visitor from Mars making his presence known. Interest will be just as decided, nevertheless, for promptly at 11 o'clock fifty toy balloons, each containing a free pass, will be released from the roof of the Electra Theatre at 1160 Broadway, at the direction of the managing director, Maxwell M. Chetkin, who has taken this means to advertise the presentation of Lieut. Locklear, the daredevil of the air, in his famous picture, "The Great Air Robbery," at this theatre on Wednesday, March 31.

The passes will be secured to these rubberized spheres and to those who capture the latter will be accorded the privilege of attending the performance on March 31, either in the afternoon or evening. The novel method in which Mr Chetkin proposes to bring to the attention of the people that Lieut. Locklear in his screen thriller will be soon within their midst has been adopted mainly because the story has its principal actions in the air. It is a story that holds one from the moment the first picture is flashed before the audience. An incident that fairly bristles with intense excitement is shown in the rescue of a fellow pilot from a runaway plane. While his own machine dashes giddily a mile above the earth over, under and around the other machine, Lieut. Locklear is seen to crawl to the tail of his plane. The swaying ladder of the runaway is his objective point and in his endeavor to grasp it he defies death in a manner that is almost beyond belief.

Another interesting feature of the afternoon and evening performance will be a concert by the U. S. Naval Band of twenty-four pieces, under direction of Commander Taylor. As guests of Mr. Chetkin there will be representatives of the Aero Club of America and the aerial branch of the U. S. Army. A collation will be served following the afternon performances, to the members of the band and invited guests.

And You Can Do It Too

ON this page is reproduced a stunt which any one can imitate in exploiting "The Great Air Robbery," and that is the reason it is being reproduced.

Maxwell M. Chetkin is manager of the Electro Theatre, which is located in Brooklyn. It is one of the chain of theatres operating through the Marilynn Amusement Company. As you will see by the article in the first column, Chetkin went somewhat out of his way to electrify Brooklyn, and in the column directly below this you will see the result. This just proves once again that exploitation pays in proportion to the cleverness and originality of the stunt.

This one can easily be arranged in any town or city of the United States. Go ahead and do it.

This Was The Result

My Dear Mr. Bear:—

(Can't blame him for transposing the middle letters of the name.)

It is with gratification that I write you advising you that my stunt was the biggest winner yet. I simply crowded them in from the moment I had my doors open until 10:30 at night.

Traffic was stopped, the street my theatre is on was black with people who desired admission and could not get in. "The Great Air Robbery" properly advertised is bound to bring big results.

Kindly extend to Mr. Rozenzweig my kindest regards. Yours, etc.,

MAXWELL M. CHETKIN.

EDITH ROBERTS

The Moving Picture World Says about

"HER FIVE-FOOT HIGHNESS":--

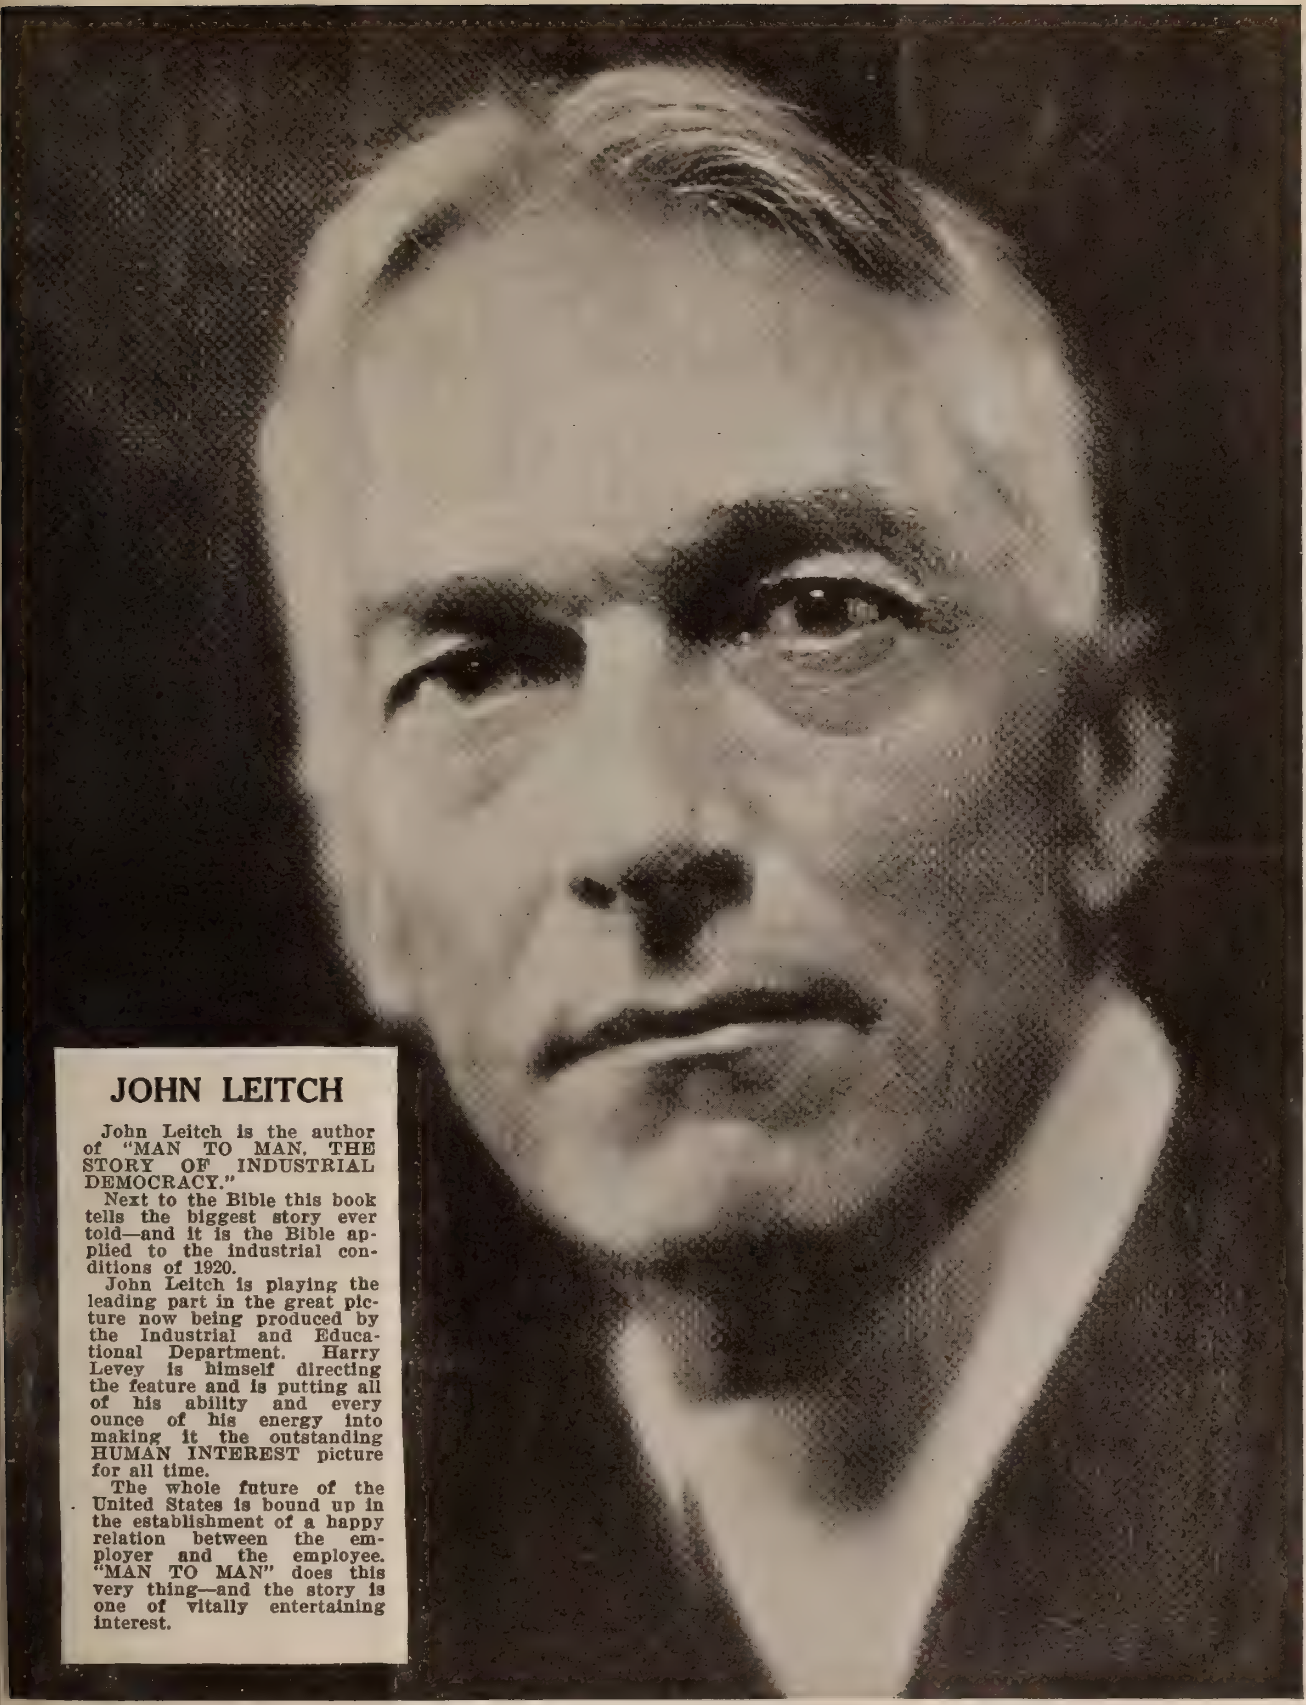
Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy

"This is a top-notch production of its kind"

THIS five-reel Universal production, "Her Five-Foot Highness," will add materially to Edith Roberts' list of admirers. It affords her opportunities for varied acting, which she makes the most of. In the beginning she appears as a boisterous ranch girl, who wears chaps and shoots craps with the cowboys. Later she goes to England to claim her inheritance, when she appears as a more demure miss, invading the baronial halls of her ancestors like a timid "Peg O' My Heart." But her courage reasserts itself when occasion demands, and she wins out on her rights as an unafraid American girl.

This is a top-notch production of its kind. There have been multitudes of similar stories, dealing with Anglo-American relations, and there will doubtless be hundreds more of them, but it has never been the experience of the reviewer to see a better one than this. It has the broad underlying general appeal, the romantic plot material, a splendid contrast of settings and a thoroughly agreeable cast of characters. The pictures of quiet, cultured home life in England, disturbed by the appearance of one real claimant, and a second false one, are admirably done.

While familiar in its general outline, the plot has a number of original situations and keeps the spectator guessing. The humorous touches are also good.



JOHN LEITCH

John Leitch is the author of "MAN TO MAN, THE STORY OF INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY."

Next to the Bible this book tells the biggest story ever told—and it is the Bible applied to the industrial conditions of 1920.

John Leitch is playing the leading part in the great picture now being produced by the Industrial and Educational Department. Harry Levey is himself directing the feature and is putting all of his ability and every ounce of his energy into making it the outstanding HUMAN INTEREST picture for all time.

The whole future of the United States is bound up in the establishment of a happy relation between the employer and the employee. "MAN TO MAN" does this very thing—and the story is one of vitally entertaining interest.

Publicity for Carey in "Bullet Proof'

ADVANCE STORY.

THE virile romance of the west and the vigorous tales of the outdoors will never grow stale so long as Harry Carey remains to depict them on the screen. This bright star of the Universal films has just finished another of his smashing Western stories, entitled "Bullet Proof,' which will have its showing at the......................Theatre on ....

Mr. Carey is a screen favorite whose popularity grows with every new production. He seemed to have reached his greatest height in "Marked Men;" then he topped the record with "Overland Red." Now comes "Bullet Proof," by John Frederick, directed by Lynn Reynolds, and enacted by a company of sterling players, including J. Farrell McDonald, Charles LeMoyne, Kathleen O'Connor, Robert McKim, Beatrice Burnham, Joe Harris, Fred Gamble, Bob McKenzie and Carey's well known rough riders.

"Bullet Proof" is promised as something different in a Carey production. The opening scenes showing him studying for a career as teacher among the lawless folks of the frozen north and perfecting his body as well as his spiritual self. When the call comes to avenge his father's death it finds him a man of vigor and strength, able to more than hold his own under all conditions.

How Pierre leaves the cabin to see his dying father, how he starts on his trail of vengeance, how he is overcome by the avalanche and rescued by a gang of bandits, how he allies himself with this band that he may better trace the criminal and how he finally achieves his object and finds the path to happiness and love—these incidents form the backbone of what has been declared to be an ideal Carey screen production.

REGARDING THE STAR.

NOT because he can ride like a whirlwind, shoot straight as an arrow or make a lariat do everything but talk has Harry Carey wormed his way into the affections of theatregoers throughout the world. His hold on the public goes deeper than that. Not only is it because he is a finished actor, or because of his irresistible smile, Carey's great popularity is due to the fact that he is human and knows human nature.

His ways are unaffected, his acting is real and his smile comes from the heart. Whether Carey plays the role of a hardened criminal or a persecuted hero the audience is in sympathy with him at every turn.

Harry Carey's thousands of "fan" letters daily cover the entire human race. School teachers and convicts, grandmothers and tots who have just mastered the art of writing, debutantes and shop girls—all have fallen victims to the spell of the Carey personality and the Carey grin.

Carey is a New Yorker, the son of a prominent jurist and himself educated to a legal career. But he became an actor instead, and later a playwright, starring in his own melodramas. He came to the screen when it was emerging from an experiment to an art, and he has grown with its evolution.

Harry Carey has been a Universal star for several years, and each production has increased his popularity. His recent releases were "A Gun Fightin' Gentleman," "Marked Men," and "Overland Red," and he is soon to appear here in his latest feature, "Bullet Proof," at the .... Theatre.

DIRECTING AN AVALANCHE.

MAKING the side of a mountain behave and perform before a camera is a man's-size job, according to Lynn Reynolds, who directed "Bullet Proof," Harry Carey's latest Universal starring vehicle now being shown at the........................Theatre.

In "Bullet Proof" a girl is trapped by a landslide. While the hero is trying to extricate her the whole side of the mountain gives way and both of them are buried as the many tons of dirt and rocks move down the slope uprooting giant trees and sweeping away everything in their path.

The difficulty of controlling a landslide and having it start moving at just the right time is obvious. The greatest care had to be taken to see that no one was really trapped by the great mass of earth or struck by the huge boulders that went crashing to the bottom.

When everything was fixed for the big scene cameras were trained on the spot from a number of different points. Then heavy charges of dynamite, set off simultaneously at different places, started the landslide. One cameraman was so anxious for a good "close-up" that he got directly in the path of the avalanche, losing a $3,000 camera and barely escaping injury.

Reynolds is getting the habit of using the elements and the great events of nature in his pictures. In "The Brute Breaker," a recent Universal success, in which Frank Mayo was starred, he staged a real forest fire in the mountains of Southern California. It was a big job to have the fir eappear real and yet not destroy valuable time and property.

ADVANCE NOTES.

Harry Carey can always be depended upon for a strong, virile photodrama of the great outdoors. His last two productions, "Marked Men" and "Overland Red," are still pleasantly remembered, and his newest feature "Bullet Proof," written by John Frederick and directed by Lynn Reynolds, will be shown at the................Theatre.

Harry Carey, the popular film star, has been seen in many unusual character roles of late. In "Marked Men" he appeared as a convict and in "Overland Red" as a tramp. In his newest feature, "Bullet Proof," announced for next .... at the .... Theatre, he will be seen in the role of a young man who turns bandit to avenge his father's death.

Robert McKim, the Beau-Brummel of screen villains and the super-heavy of the films, has an admirable role in support of Harry Carey in that popular star's newest feature, "Bullet Proof," coming to the.............Theatre next...................... McKim is here seen as McGuirk, the invulnerable rider of the plains, whose charm is broken when he is wounded by Pierre—the character portrayed by Harry Carey.

Lynn Reynolds, the screen producer who excels in photodramas of the great outdoors, is the director who is responsible for "Bullet Proof," Harry Carey's latest starring vehicle, which will be seen at the .... Theatre next........................ Mr. Reynolds directed such potent dramas as "The Brute Breaker" and "Overland Red," and he has used the same type of punch in the newest Carey production.

One of the most engaging characters drawn in any photoplay of late is that of Jackie Boone in Harry Carey's latest feature, "Bullet Proof," coming to the ....Theatre on .... Jackie is the daughter of the leader of the Boone gang of bandits, and she has been brought up as a boy from childhood. The role is cleverly played by Beatrice Burnham.

THE STORY

PIERRE leaves the guardianship of Father Victor to go to the bedside of his dying father at Morgantown. He carries a silver cross as a luck charm. Pierre's father has been shot by McGuirk who held the whole region in terror. Pierre promises to avenge his father's death. Trying to save a girl from the storm, both are buried by an avalanche and only by a miracle is he saved by Jim Boone's gang of outlaws, to which Pierre is taken into membership. No trace of Mary Brown is found.

Pierre becomes interested in Jacqueline, or Jackie, Boone's daughter, who is more man than woman. They become great pals. McGuirk, the supergunman warns Pierre to leave the country. The Boone gang quails under the threat, but Pierre follows McGuirk to Gaffney's saloon, calls him from an inner room and wounds him, which breaks McGuirk's charm—and his heart. For a year no more is heard of McGuirk, during which time Red Pierre becomes a great power—and Jackie becomes a woman.

Dick Wilbur, son of a member of the Boone gang, induces Pierre to take Jackie to a dance. There Pierre meets Mary again—and he is desperately in love with her, for he had always treated Jackie as a brother. Dick is in love with Mary, but she still remains true to the memory of Pierre. At the dance love and jealousy are rampant.

Then one by one the Boone gang disappears. McGuirk has come back. Jackie and Pierre prepare for the inevitable conflict. When Dick learns that Mary loves only Pierre, he agrees to lead her to Pierre's hiding place, but McGuirk overtakes him enroute and instead of killing Dick, sends him out into the wilderness.

Meanwhile Mary wanders on and reaches the cabin where Jackie deceives her into thinking Pierre has been deceiving her while living with another. Pierre arrives and learns that Mary has been there, and that McGuirk had followed Mary up the mountain.

Pierre goes galloping up the mountain calling for McGuirk and finally they meet. Pierre draws a flicker faster than McGuirk and Mary and Pierre go east to take up a new life.

THE stray shot had also caused an explosion in the gas filled shaft, so that Edith and Elmo were now easy prey for Horton and his accomplices. But fortunately, Mr. Stilwell escapes them.

Elmo and Edith are taken to Wu Ling Fang's gambling den by the gang, and are securely locked in. The gang plans to put Elmo in the Temple of the Dragon. This is a room in which is stationed the figure of a dragon automatically breathing forth a poison vapor fatal to anyone who inhales it. Wu Ling Fang who would commit any deed for money, had promised to have Elmo meet his death here, provided he were paid one thousand dollars.

Meanwhile, the chinaman had not been leaving Edith entirely alone and was making all sorts of advances to her. Edith realized that it would be futile to resist him, and that her only chance lay in her ability to outwit him.

Twelve o'clock is the hour set for Elmo's doom; the hour is fast approaching and still we see no way in which he is to escape death from the poisoned vapor. Nor do we know what hideous crime is being perpetrated against Edith, for the gang is certainly set on getting her out of the way also.

"A Jazzy Janitor."

Two-Reel Rainbow Comedy

Featuring Zip Monberg and Virginia Warwick
Directed by Wm. H. Watson

THE Hotel Sternbilt was the kind of a hotel where a man would take his mother-in-law with perfect confidence. At this hotel they had an official chauffeur known as Zippy Zeke.

When the yearly train pulled in, Zip handed out the hotel's card reading:

Hotel Sternbilt—Meals if you can afford them. Electric light 3 times a week. We have rooms without bath for Gentlemen, but we give the ladies a bath.

He hands a card to a young lady of the "one-night stands" fame. She accepts his invitation and stops at the hotel.

But Zip had a wife who was hard-boiled and on to all these "city" tricks. She discovers Zip peeping through the keyhole in the actorine's room. She chases him down to their own quarters, starts to throw everything that is movable at him. He ducks a chair; the chair hits the gas and water pipes and breaks them. He fixes them, but when Actorine goes to light the gas to heat her curling irons, water spouts out and when one of the male guests tries to leave the water run for a bath, gas comes out, and so a very funny mixup takes place throughout the hotel.

The Mayor of this town was one of those "clean-up" kids and would not allow a person to even look at water on Sunday, it was a liquid. He discovers that his Chief of Police has been in the habit of gambling and sets spies all around to catch him. But the Chief cannot resist the filthy-nine spots and is caught in a raid.

In the same game, was Zip, his luck was with him and he cleaned up, but the cops came and took it away! After a humorous chase after the cops and Zip's wife after him, the wife catches them all and knocks them over with a sledge hammer. She revives Zip after discovering that he has so much money in his pocket and thanks him for bringing the dough home to her.

THIS number of the magazine opens with a wonderful shot of strange rock formation in the California desert. They range from pillars seventy-five feet high to minarets, pedestals and mounds in the shape of temples and mosques and sometimes of human figures. These strange phenomena can be seen only two hundred miles from Los Angeles.

Margaret Wade Grinager in her fashion studies gives her "Alice Through the Looking Glass" number in that all of her examples are children's frocks.

Cinema Luke under the direction of Leslie Elton has an encounter with a horse of ink and comes near decapitating him.

Charles H. Clark of New York, inventor, whose genuine has been expended on the canoe, has contrived a way to right an overturned canoe when it is capsized in the water. This is a useful thing to know in case you are addicted to canoeing and are not an extremely careful person.

An unusually funny collection of laughographs concludes the magazine.

CAST

Stella	Kathleen O'Connor
Enright	Henry Barrows
Celeste	Gertrude Astor
Westcott	Jack Perrin
Lion Man	Mack Wright
Frederick Cavendish	J. Barney Sherry
Gant	Albert MacQuarrie

STELLA is helpless on the mouth of the canon, but the old canon misfires and for the time being she is saved. The Rattler swears that the canon will not again misfire, adjusts the priming pan, and is about to go for more powder, as Stella, somewhat revived, drops down from the canon and tries to rush out. Enright seizes her, and the Rattler rushes to aid him as a bullet from Celeste in the room above kills him. Enright startled, is momentarily attracted by this, and Stella succeeds in rushing out. Obtaining a horse she rides off and Enright despatches a bandit after her, with orders to kill her at once if he can overtake her.

Westcott, Lion Man and Celeste, cornered in the upstairs room, are trying to hold the bandits out.

The pigeon despatched by the Lion Man in the previous episode arrives at the haunted house. The mysterious hands receive the note from it and then the man of mystery, whose face we do not see, calls the office of the Arizona Border Rangers. A troop of rangers starts out for the stronghold.

Stella is overtaken by the bandit, who is about to deal a fatal thrust with his knife as he drops dead—shot by the rangers who have ridden up. Stella leads the squad on towards the bandits stronghold.

Westcott, the Lion Man and Celeste are just about beaten down as the squad of rangers, led by Stella, ride up, and the bandits are killed and captured. Enright is placed under arrest. And then, to the astonishment of all, a figure rides up, and they recognize Frederick Cavendish.

Frederick Cavendish was supposed to have been murdered, and his body destroyed in the fire that ravished his home the night of the society circus.

But he explains that he left the house, and that it must have been a burglar, who closely resembled him, who had been buried in the burning house. And though none of them really knew it, this was the actual case. A burglar had entered shortly after Frederick Cavendish had left, was working at the safe when he was interrupted by John Cavendish, who was determined to obtain the will that his uncle had just made disinheriting him. John Cavendish had dealt the burglar a blow that had killed him, and thinking that he had murdered his uncle, he fled. Shortly after, the fire broke out, and the deception was never discovered.

Enright, who realizes that all is lost, attempts to escape, but is shot and killed by one of the rangers. Cavendish states that now all the enemies are accounted for but Celeste, and asks that she be placed under arrest. Stella, however, pleads for her, saying that she had saved her life. And the Lion Man, who, while Cavendish remained hidden at the haunted house, has acted as his agent, tells Cavendish that Celeste is his wife, and begs that he forgive her. Cavendish relents, and Celeste is overjoyed to find that she is freely forgiven by all.

Once more back in the city, Westcott calls on Stella and displays a letter from Cavendish. This states that the mine at Topaz has been sold, and that the sum of five hundred thousand dollars has been placed in the bank to the credit of James Westcott and his partner, Stella Donovan. The Lion Man and Celeste, deciding to start life anew together, have settled down happily on a small farm. Westcott asks Stella if she has forgotten the promise that when all their troubles wereover she would then consider marrying him. She tells him that she has not, and that she has really expected to marry him all the time.

Lee's Fiancee	Charlotte Merriam
Eddie's Fiancee	Alma Bennett

IT is Eddie's wedding day and he has been out celebrating with Lee the night before. His girl sends him a letter accusing him of flirting and calls off the marriage. Eddie consults Lee and implores him to square things.

Lee sets about it and lies—proficiently.

Eddie tells a different story and they are in slang parlance—bawled up. The girls discover the discrepancy in their stories and arouse suspicion by their action. The boys question them sharply and find that they too were "stepping out" the night before. A policeman happens in and arrests them all for speeding and there are no innocents in the party.

Everybody is forgiven and each has an exalted opinion of the other's ability to juggle the truth.

CAST

"Snake" Royce, leader of a band of gun runners	Charles Wheelock
Tina McGowan, daughter of a homesteader	Josephine Hill
The Stranger	Jack Perrin
Tim McGowan	"Tote" Ducrow

In some way which was a mystery to him, old Mr. McGowan had become implicated with a scheme of "Snake" Royce's. "Snake" was the leader of a band of gun runners but his main object with the old man was to run off his daughter Tina. His love making was of that rough sort, however, that defeated its own object and when he saw that diplomacy was hopeless, he decided on stern measures. These, however, were interrupted by a stranger who was familiar with every hill and canyon of the country but unknown in his official capacity to the citizens of Snake Head. He unceremoniously dumped Royce out of the cabin.

Tina was immensely impressed with the stranger's appearance and domineering manner and when her father appeared upon the scene, she introduced him probably as her rescuer, but old man McGowan was terror stricken when he heard of the encounter with Royce. He made a confession to his daughter and the Stranger and as a result the new arrival in Snake Head started out single handed to run up the gang.

In the meantime, Royce instructed his men to go into town and capture McGown dead or alive and when McGowan appeared in the village he was shot in the back and had only time to inform the sheriff that it was Royce's gang who got him, before he died.

The Stranger was dumbfounded on arriving at the cabin to discover that Royce had taken advantage of the unprotected condition of the cabin to carry off Tina and when the sheriff's posse drove up to surround the cabin, they were greatly mystified to see three bandits roped and hog-tied filing glumly out of the cabin, lead by the stranger.

"I don't know what's your name or business, stranger, but I am saying you are 'One he Man'," exclaimed the sheriff.

"My name is just plain Jones and my business at present is proposin'." And from Tina's expression it looked as though he were going to be successful again.

Edith and Elmo make a miraculous escape from the jaws of the dragon and reaching the roof of the house, they have to pick their way from roof to roof in a dangerous fashion. Edith, in fact, loses heart and wants to give up, and Elmo encourages her to go on.

The gang, however, soon gets wind of the attempted getaway and starts in pursuit and a mad fight ensues on the roof. In the midst of it all, the precious piece of photograph drops to the street below and is picked up by "Blind Toney" a beggar of the streets who pretends blindness.

Elmo gets away with Edith in a wagon owned by the Chink followed by part of the gangsters in an auto, while Horton tries to extract the piece of photograph from the beggar.

New Screen Magazine.

No. 62.

New Screen Magazine No. 62, opens with an interesting exposition of the Sperry searchlight, the newest invention of Elmer A. Sperry. This searchlight is operated by an electrical controller, and displaces the old hand method. It has a candle power of 1,280,000,000 and can in its intensity melt lead. There is a final flash of the New York sky-line at night under the gaze of the Sperry searchlight.

Next the magazine treats of the Castor Bean, showing how it was a factor in winning the war, and telling a bit of its history; how it was known as early as 259 B. C. and being lost subsequently for centuries, finally came to light again in 1764.

Cinema Luke under the direction of Leslie Elton provides an entertaining few moments. Luke emerges from an ink bottle to quarrel with Elton over a misfit coat and Elton providing a dog, a fight starts between Luke and the dog.

We are next taken to Japan where we watch the Japanese family at a meal and where the solemnity of the meal is compared with the jollity of that of the average American family, and we see the children at play and an evening scene of the whole family.

The Magazine closes with some mirth-provoking laughographs.

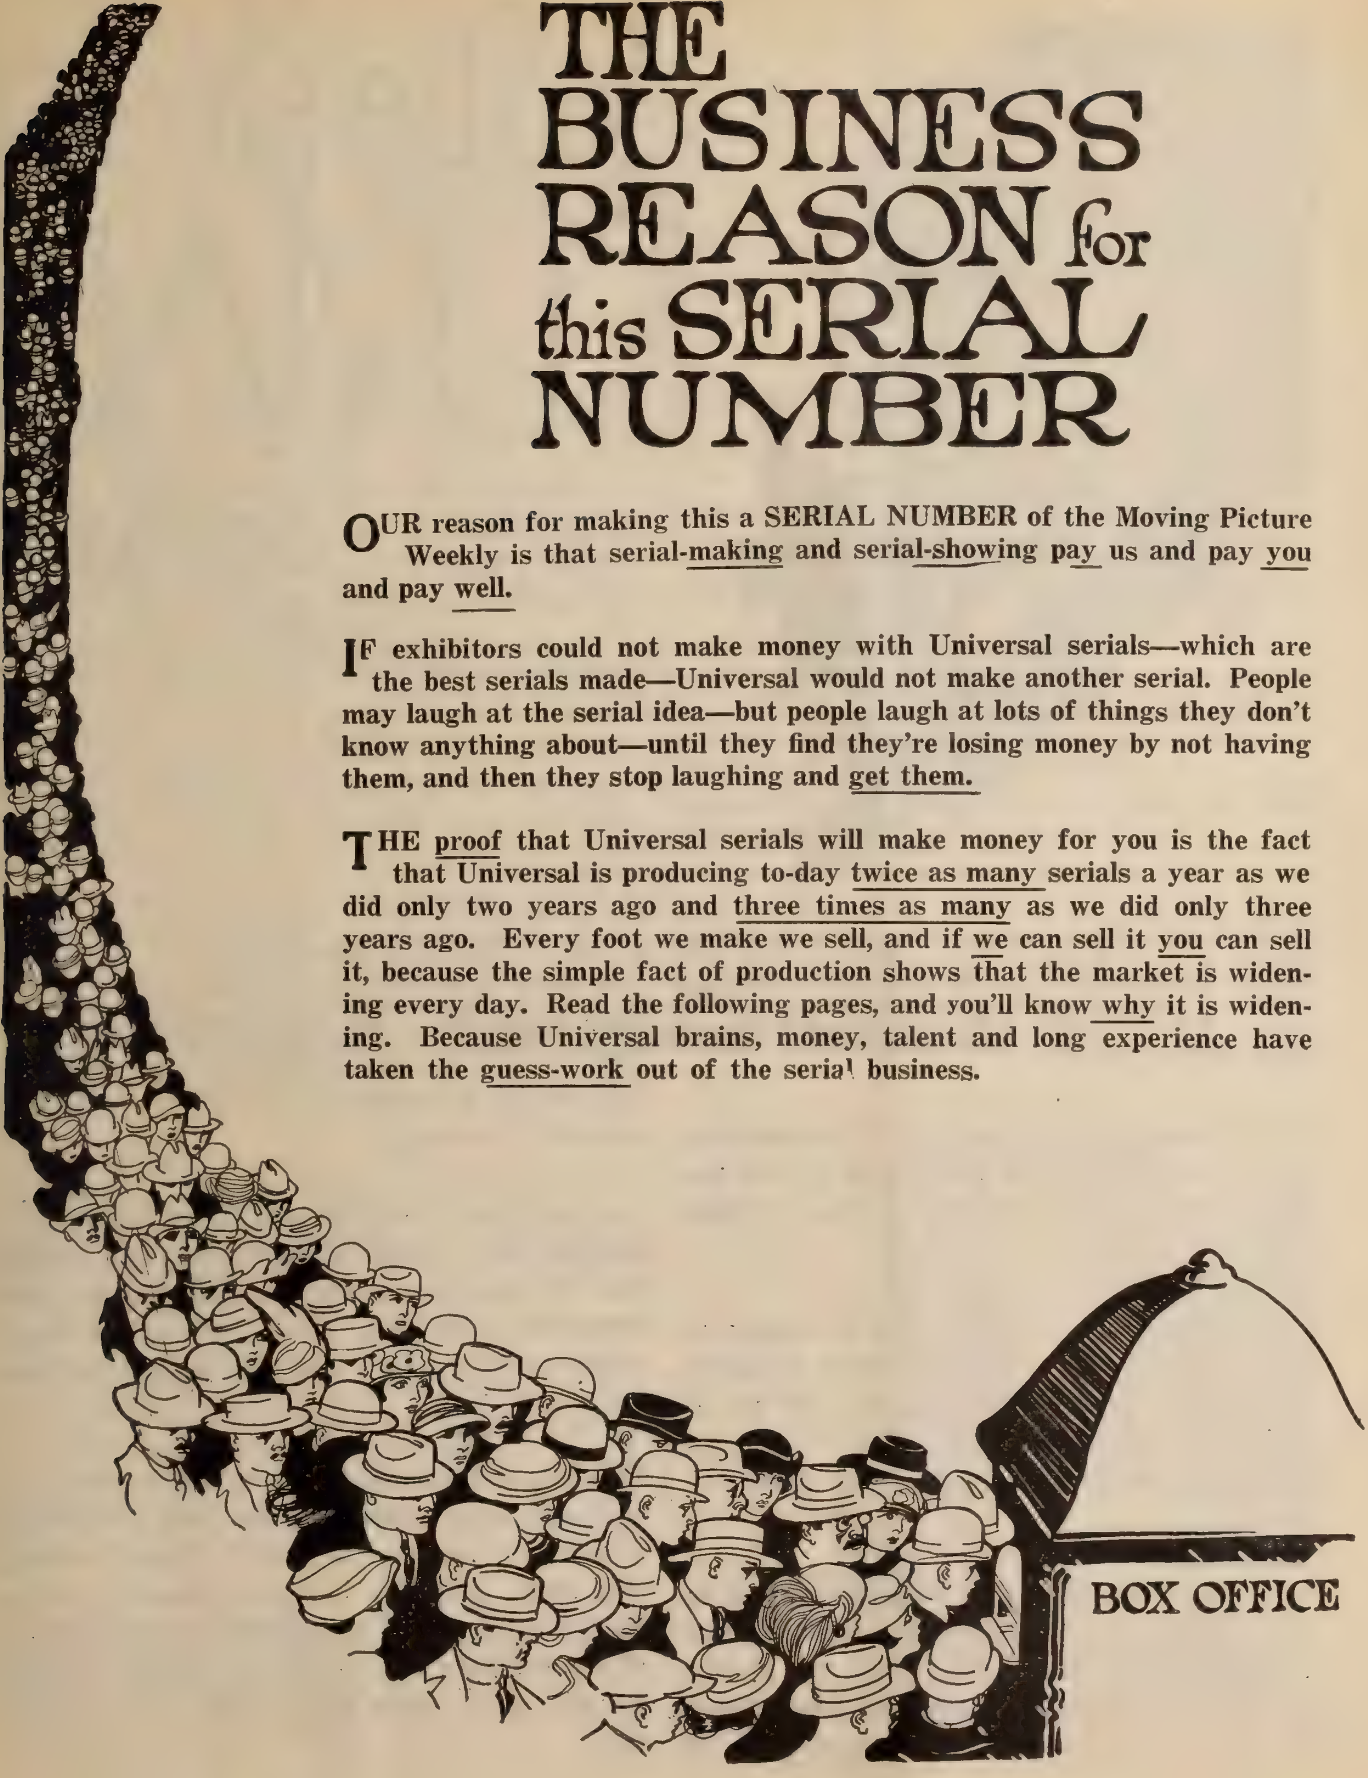
NUMBER FOUR OF YOUR FULL-HOUSE FIVE

THE BUSINESS REASON for this SERIAL NUMBER

OUR reason for making this a SERIAL NUMBER of the Moving Picture Weekly is that serial-making and serial-showing pay us and pay you and pay well.

IF exhibitors could not make money with Universal serials—which are the best serials made—Universal would not make another serial. People may laugh at the serial idea—but people laugh at lots of things they don't know anything about—until they find they're losing money by not having them, and then they stop laughing and get them.

THE proof that Universal serials will make money for you is the fact that Universal is producing to-day twice as many serials a year as we did only two years ago and three times as many as we did only three years ago. Every foot we make we sell, and if we can sell it you can sell it, because the simple fact of production shows that the market is widening every day. Read the following pages, and you'll know why it is widening. Because Universal brains, money, talent and long experience have taken the guess-work out of the serial business.



A Straight-from

by
Carl Laemmle
President
Universal Film Manufacturing Company

THERE is one curious fact connected with the business of making and showing serials—that some people persist in thinking it a gamble.

Serial-making is not a gamble. Serial-making, on the contrary, is the safest side of the picture industry—when you know how to make it safe.

The Universal has reduced serial-making to an exact science. We make only what we know will please. In that way you are able to sell everything we make—and sell it at a bigger profit than the profit you get from other producers.

Some exhibitors there are who do not run serials. They are making a big mistake. Their first mistake is in thinking that the grown-ups may not like them. But—the opinion of the grown-ups depends on the quality of the serial. If you give them the kind of serial that Universal was the first to produce and stands first in to-day—the Star-and-Story Chapter Play of Quality—you'll not find one who can take his or her eyes off the screen while the episode is running.

The exhibitor who does not run serials makes another big mistake when he does not realize that children love serials and that it is the children who make fans of their parents—who get them started going to features as well as chapter-plays.

What does this exhibitor think of the man who not only runs serials but also runs a different serial every day in the week? Does he think this other exhibitor is losing money? If he does I suggest that he call on the serial-every-day man and try to verify his belief. I think he will learn some things that will surprise him.

-the-Shoulder Talk on

Because this exhibitor who runs a different serial every day in the week went into the serial line only because he found that it paid. Because whenever he added another serial day to the week he found that week's receipts higher than the last. Because he found he had the trade—and he took advantage of it.

Now, of course, not every house can run a serial every day, but every house in the land can run one every week and a great many can run two and three a week. If you are running only one Universal serial a week, suppose you try another on my personal recommendation—the overlapping releases of the Full-House Five will permit you to do that—and see how you come out. If it doesn't pay you I'll cheerfully buy you a new hat—and hats "has riz."

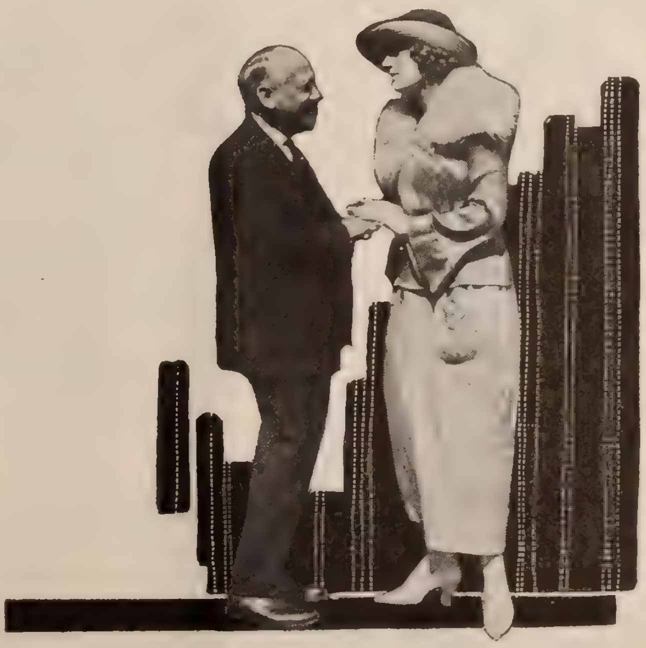
On the next few pages you will find some of the reasons why Universal has been the most successful of all the concerns producing serials. You'll see that it's because we have the knowledge and the equipment and the stars.

Building a serial is exactly like building a building. You've got to know how to do it—and you've got to have the machinery—and you've got to have the expert help. Lacking these three things, your serial—and your building—will probably fall down.

In pages 6 to 11, inclusive, you'll see that we have the equipment—on pages 14 and 15 you'll find the brains—on subsequent pages you'll see our Stars and their Chapter-Plays, now running or to come.

Below this Straight-from-the-shoulder Talk on a mighty important feature of your business and mine you'll see a snapshot of my farewell to Miss Walcamp, just before she sailed for the Orient to make her great Overseas Serial, "THE DRAGON'S NET." She said to me then: "Mr. Laemmle, you have given me everything to work with that any human being could possibly want in order to make a successful serial. I thank you and I think every exhibitor will thank you for putting this feature of the business on a businesslike footing—and I'm going to make a picture for you that the biggest theatre in the land will book on sight."

Carl Laemmle

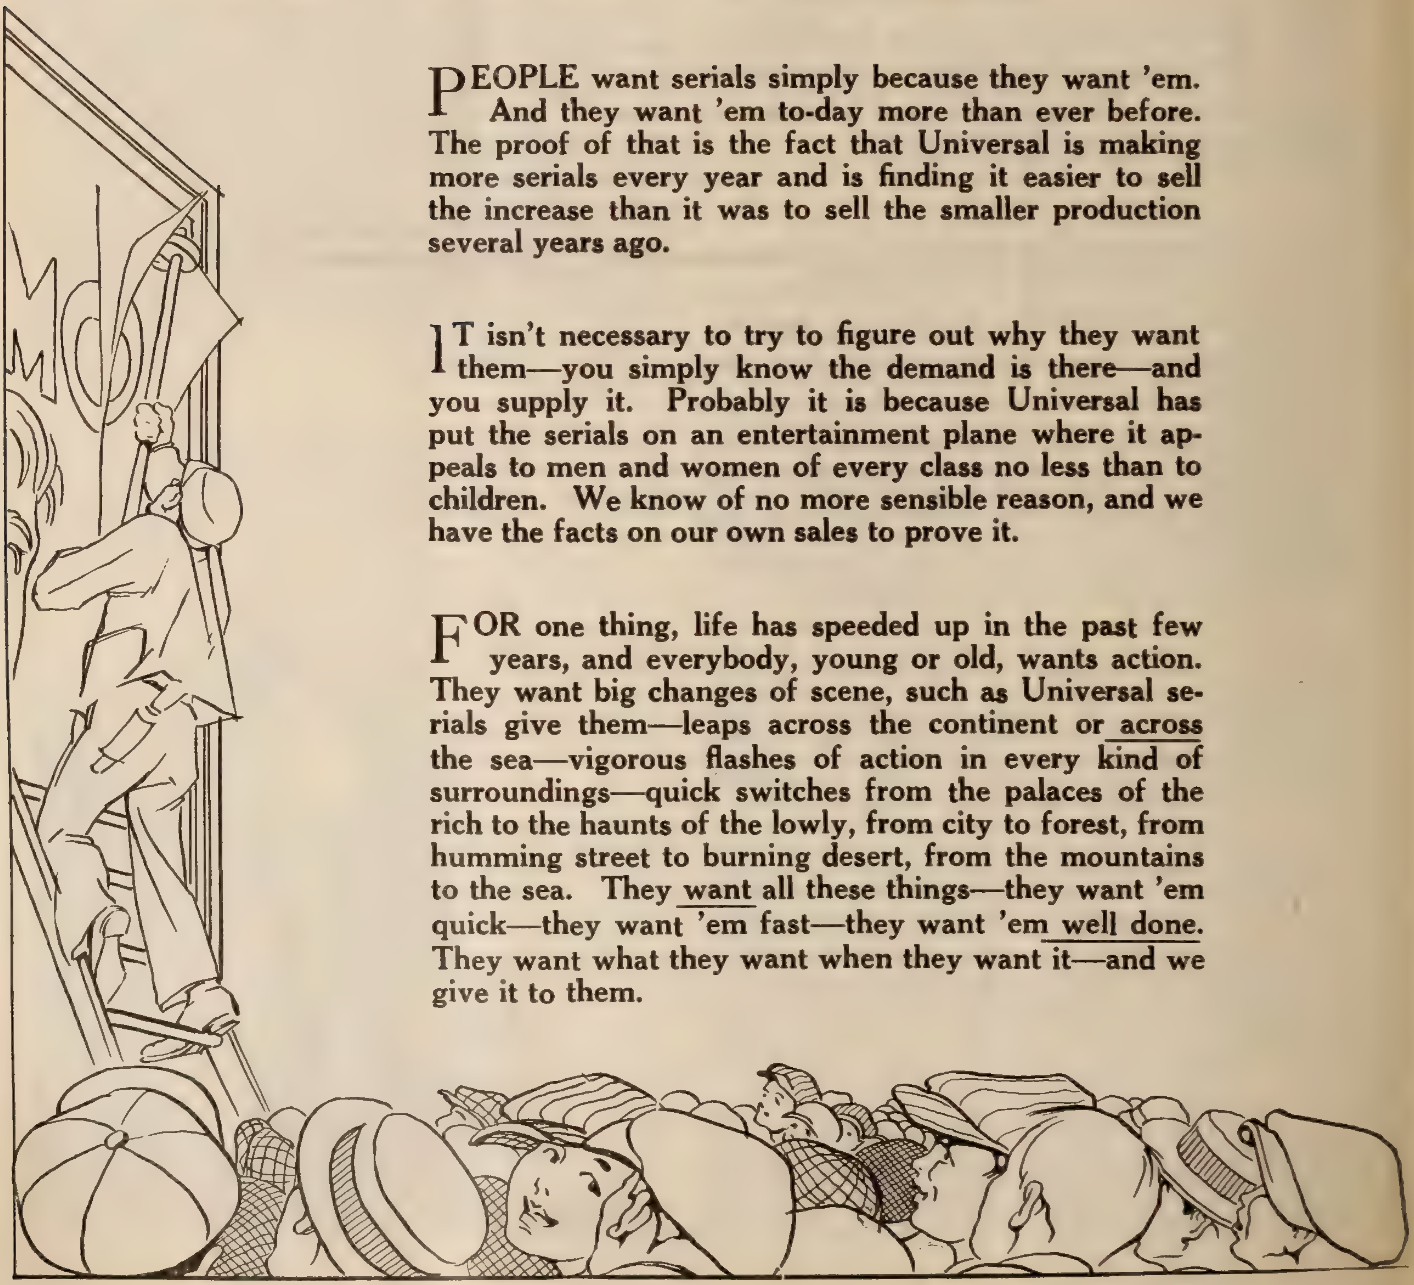


They want what they want when they want it!

PEOPLE want serials simply because they want 'em. And they want 'em to-day more than ever before. The proof of that is the fact that Universal is making more serials every year and is finding it easier to sell the increase than it was to sell the smaller production several years ago.

IT isn't necessary to try to figure out why they want them—you simply know the demand is there—and you supply it. Probably it is because Universal has put the serials on an entertainment plane where it appeals to men and women of every class no less than to children. We know of no more sensible reason, and we have the facts on our own sales to prove it.

FOR one thing, life has speeded up in the past few years, and everybody, young or old, wants action. They want big changes of scene, such as Universal serials give them—leaps across the continent or across the sea—vigorous flashes of action in every kind of surroundings—quick switches from the palaces of the rich to the haunts of the lowly, from city to forest, from humming street to burning desert, from the mountains to the sea. They want all these things—they want 'em quick—they want 'em fast—they want 'em well done. They want what they want when they want it—and we give it to them.

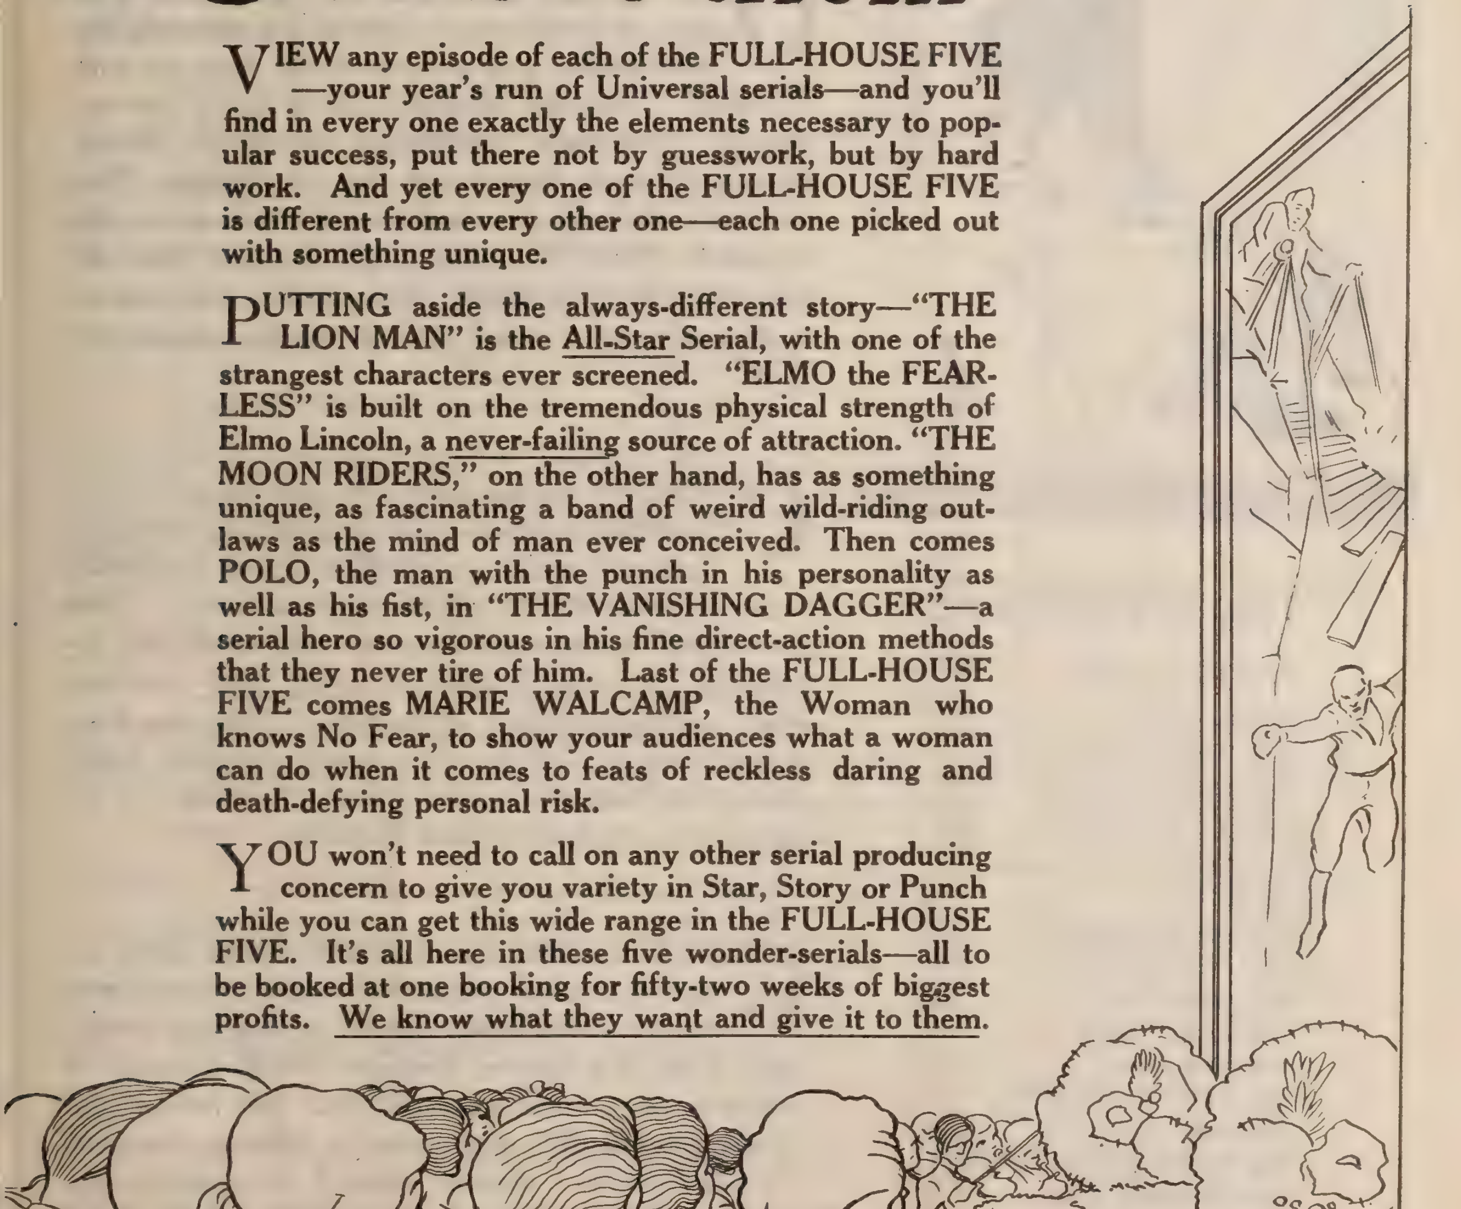


We know what they want and we give it to them

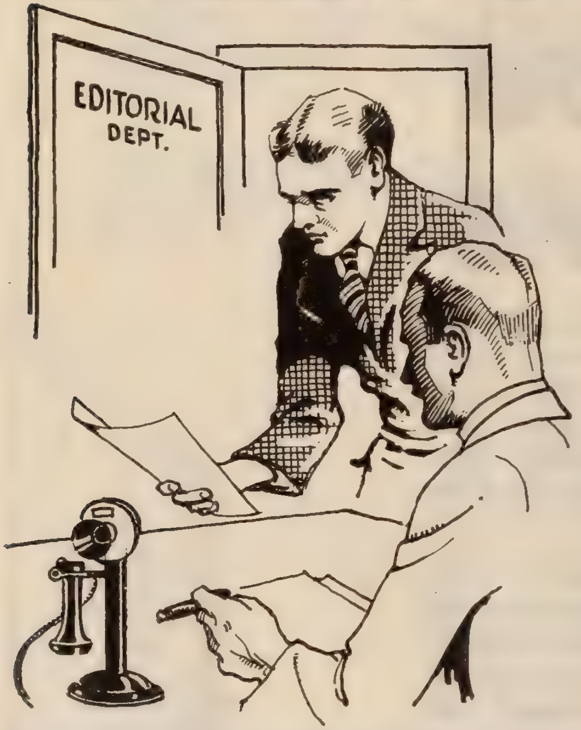
VIEW any episode of each of the FULL-HOUSE FIVE —your year's run of Universal serials—and you'll find in every one exactly the elements necessary to popular success, put there not by guesswork, but by hard work. And yet every one of the FULL-HOUSE FIVE is different from every other one—each one picked out with something unique.

PUTTING aside the always-different story—"THE LION MAN" is the All-Star Serial, with one of the strangest characters ever screened. "ELMO the FEARLESS" is built on the tremendous physical strength of Elmo Lincoln, a never-failing source of attraction. "THE MOON RIDERS," on the other hand, has as something unique, as fascinating a band of weird wild-riding outlaws as the mind of man ever conceived. Then comes POLO, the man with the punch in his personality as well as his fist, in "THE VANISHING DAGGER"—a serial hero so vigorous in his fine direct-action methods that they never tire of him. Last of the FULL-HOUSE FIVE comes MARIE WALCAMP, the Woman who knows No Fear, to show your audiences what a woman can do when it comes to feats of reckless daring and death-defying personal risk.

YOU won't need to call on any other serial producing concern to give you variety in Star, Story or Punch while you can get this wide range in the FULL-HOUSE FIVE. It's all here in these five wonder-serials—all to be booked at one booking for fifty-two weeks of biggest profits. We know what they want and give it to them.



Universal Star-



Built on Success

ONLY Success counts, and the organization with years of Serial success behind it is naturally the organization you are out to do business with TO-DAY. No other company, you'll agree, can approach Universal's established record in Serials. Glance through this partial list of Chapter Play triumphs. Instantly it reminds you of weeks and weeks of steady PROFITS. And why? Because those serials STOOD THE TEST. They made money for us in the only way a serial can—by making money for YOU.

COMMON business sense tells you that unless the EXHIBITOR found Universal serials profitable Universal could not afford to go on producing them, let alone INCREASING its serial output. And we are still in the serial business and, mark this, increasing our serial production every year—making more and better serials all the time. This year Universal gives you FIVE serials in one complete group alone—the best serials it ever made, planned and designed to meet the increased demand.

COULD we afford to invest the huge sums required to make even that single group unless we were absolutely sure of getting our investment back plus interest through YOUR success? It stands to reason that we could not. But we are sure of our ground. We need make no fulsome promises. We point you to Universal's record—a record we are out to sustain—to better—a record BUILT ON SUCCESS.

BUILT for Success—YOUR success, because nothing short of that satisfies us—nothing less can pay us.

ask yourself why Universal goes on investing millions of dollars every year in Serials. It is because with us serial making is not a gamble, but an exact science—a skilled business—made so by years of experience and the "know-how" proficiency that comes of long success. Universal leaves nothing to chance. Every factor for success must be provided—story, direction, thrills, suspense, heart-interest—every element that experience has taught us goes to the making of profitable serials. Universal BUILDS FOR SUCCESS.

THIS year has already proved that once more. The FULL-HOUSE FIVE is a proven success—the greatest in Universal's serial history, with two of the biggest releases yet to come! Exhibitor after exhibitor is telling us here is the best proposition Universal ever gave him, for it is built on the plan that insures your Solid Year of uninterrupted patronage. Have you been playing serials in the old haphazard, hand-to-mouth way, because you knew no other? Investigate to-day—don't take chances on the year—make it a sure success.

Universal City--The Seri

Where Serial Problems Are Solved on Paper--The Executive Building

This is the headquarters of the Serial Capital of the World and contains the administrative offices. Directors, leading players and writers assemble here to confer before and during the filming of a serial.

UNIVERSAL CAFETERIA

Where Serial Stars Get and Enjoy their Fan Letters--Post Office and Cafeteria

Thousands upon thousands of letters from admirers reach Universal's serial stars during the course of a year. The post-office here shown is one of the most popular buildings in Universal City. Stars congregate to get their "fan letters," and enjoy them with their meals in the adjoining cafeteria.

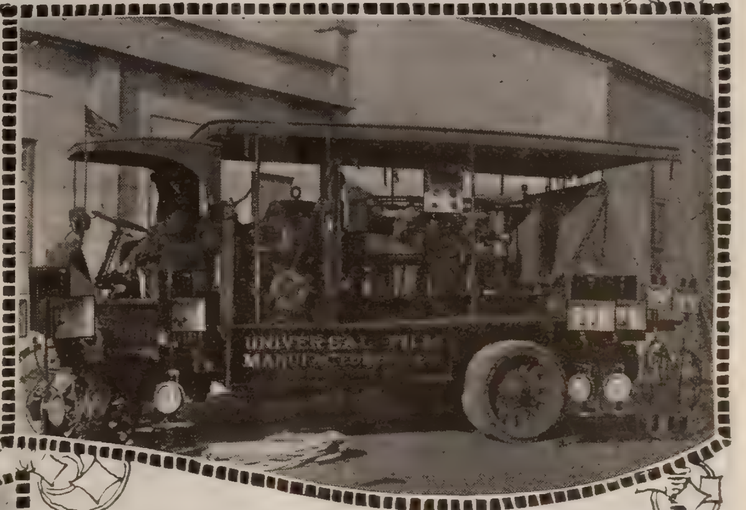
The Serious Side of Serials--The Hospital

Accidents are unavoidable during the making of thrilling serials. Any player who meets with a mishap that looks serious is hurried to Universal City's thoroughly equipped hospital, where he is given the best of attention. It is an extremely necessary though hardly popular place with the serial companies.

al Capital of the World

The Serial Company Takes Its Power Along

Here is one of the wonders of serial making—a portable power plant, designed expressly to be taken on location. It is a great achivement in picture making, and is one of the reasons why Universal can support its claim of being the best equipped serial producer in the world.

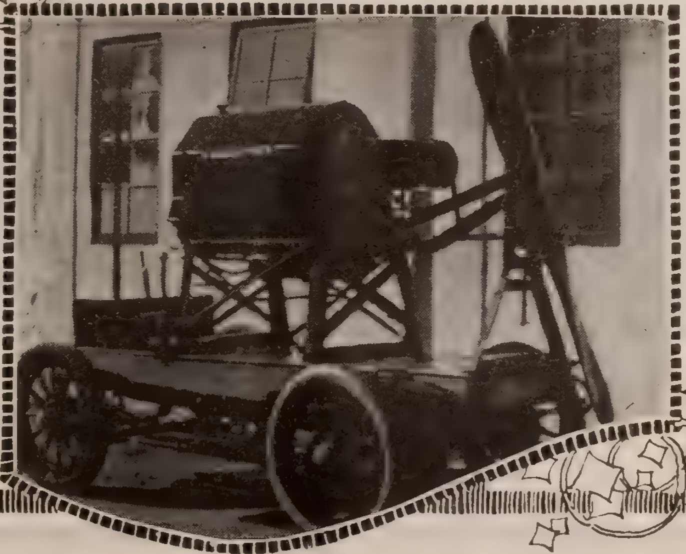


Serial Players Lining Up for Guns

Every sort of fire-arm under the sun, from a bell-mouthed blunderbuss to a modern cannon, is available at the armory at Universal City. Here shown is a long line of serial players receiving guns and side arms before starting on location.

A Portable "Cyclone" Ready To Go on Serial Location

This is the machine that makes the wind that blows a gale that thrills the crowds in the hurricane and cyclone scenes in Universal serials. A mighty ingenious contrivance, isn't it? On the next page you will see how it works on location.



THE FOUR-FOOTED SUPPORT AWAITING ACTION

NO outdoor serial is complete without the services of the players shown above. These faithful, four-footed members of the support never fail to enter into the spirit of the picture and put the gallop into the action. Universal's vast herd of horses would supply a Cavalry troop.

A HIGHWAY OF SERIAL FAME

ONE of the principal thoroughfares at Universal City, used by serial companies going to and coming from location. Oftentimes parts of the street itself are employed for exciting scenes. It's a main-traveled highway to serial stardom.

THE HOME OF THE FULL HOUSE FIVE

A TREE-TOP view of the main section of Universal City. Here are housed hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of equipment. Its skilled artisans are ready to reproduce on short notice anything from the Alps Mountains to an Eiffel Tower. Endless equipment plus superior skill. There is the secret of Universal's serial success.

READY FOR A NEW EPISODE

WHEN a Universal serial company starts on location every player is keen for the work of a new day—right on his toes for anything to come. If by some daring piece of work he covers himself with glory he comes back well pleased. If he receives a bruised head he accepts it with good grace, but his ardor and love of the work never flag for an instant.

MILES OF SERIAL THRILLS

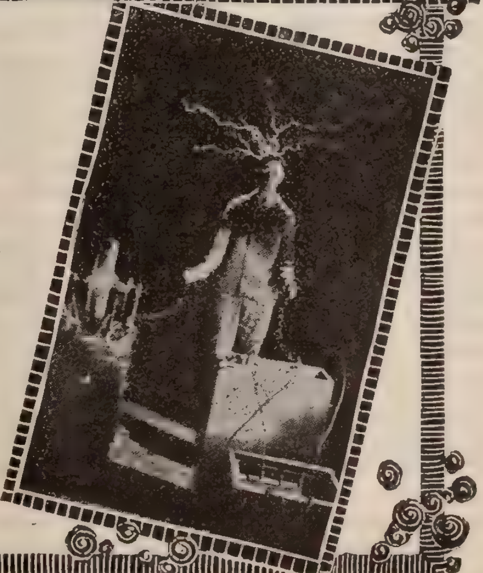
HERE is one of the mammoth film drying machines, accommodating thousands of feet of celluloid, which Universal sets aside for serials. Just imagine the myriads of thrills that are wrapped around one of these huge cylinders when the combined work of all the serial cameramen is hung up to dry!

PUTTING CYCLONE ATMOSPHERE INTO A SERIAL

THIS picture shows the baby cyclone-on-wheels hard at work during the filming of a desert sandstorm. This is the sort of thing that puts realism into every Universal serial. It represents a small part of our wonderful array of equipment of which you exhibitors get the benefit when you book our serials.

WHY WE CALL 'EM "LIGHTNING" SERIALS

HERE'S a Universal City Jove hurling his home-made thunderbolt for a terrific electric storm. Our electrical equipment is the most complete in the world and makes it possible for us to give you such realistic effects in serials.



THE MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY
A MAGAZINE FOR MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS

Published Weekly by the MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY PUB. CO.
1600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY

PAUL GULICK, Editor.
(Copyright, 1920, Universal Film Mfg. Co. All Rights Reserved.)
Vol. 10. MAY 8, 1920. No. 12.

THE NEWS OF THE WEEK

WE promised you a serial number of the Moving Picture Weekly, and here it is. If you opened the book at this page, turn back to page one, after reading this page and the next one, and go right through the book from cover to cover. Every page is important, and it is most advisable to read the pages in their proper order. This magazine was planned carefully to give you, Mr. Exhibitor, in logical, easily read and straightforward language the low down on the Universal's success and what it means to you in dollars and sense. The careful reading of this book may mean the success for the first time of a hot summer season. But even if you have booked The Full-House Five, read the book anyway. You'll plan your vacation with a lighter, more confident heart.

A WHOLE lot of exhibitors have come to that happy date when they are starting "The Moon Riders." In a few weeks we expect a flood of letters telling us what a whale of a serial this is. It is starting at the right time to carry your people just through the summer, and if any serial ever made will give you an unusually big summer business, "The Moon Riders" will do it. The star is Art Acord, the handsome, daring giant cowboy who broke into the movies as Buck Parvin. A million people know him as Buck because they know about the late Charlie Van Loan's interesting character. Art's leading lady is Mildred Moore, a Ziegfeld Follies beauty, who has made the transition from silk hip socks to spurred hip boots without dropping a stitch. Reeves Eason, a whirlwind of a director, has put a wonderful amount of pep and punch into this serial dish, which is seasoned with a dash of devilmen. The action got so fast and furious that Art Acord, radio champ and circus rider that he is, broke his leg and was in the hospital at Universal City and the serial held up for four weeks. But Art saved Miss Moore at the expense of his leg, and the Full-House Five plan of production and release gives us a leeway of more than four weeks in production. They were still able to let the exchanges have their first few episodes in advance to show to you. If you saw them, you booked them, if you were lucky enough to get a date. If you did not see them, get right down to your Universal exchange and take a peek. Then you can look forward to your trip to Havana.

EDDIE POLO has been pretty busy of late making a serial for you called "The Vanishing Dagger." He took a trip to England and France to get the scenes that were needed. But that didn't bother the Universal. They are willing to spend the money to get results, and "The Vanishing Dagger" is a resultful serial. The Universal starts it in the summer just for you. They could have started it in the fall and you would have cheerfully paid twice the money you are going to pay for the Polo serial. You know a whole lot of producers who would have held back this serial, if they had been so fortunate as to have a Polo to offer you. But the Universal thinks of the exhibitor too. The Universal is in the business to stay just the same as you are. And you are the people they want to stay in business with. So there you are, and if there is any mystery about the reciprocal way in which you are treated by Universal exchanges this statement will clear it up.

THE Vanishing Dagger" was written by Hope Loring, and Polo himself directed it. He's a careful and mighty enthusiastic director too. After he finishes this serial, and he is almost through now, he is going to produce another for Universal which he declares will top them all. Have to go some, Eddie, say we.

A NEW serial is being prepared for Elmo Lincoln, the rope busting strong man star of "Elmo the Mighty" and "Elmo the Fearless," the two Universal serials which followed his work in "Tarzan of the Apes." The new chaptered screen drama will be called "The Lightning's Eye." The story and scenario are by Phillip Hubbard and A. H. Gooden, who wrote "Elmo the Fearless." The first episode, "The Radium Ray," already is in production. He will be supported by Louise Lorraine, who was his leading lady in "Elmo the Fearless." Louise had a dual rôle in that picture, and just to get even with her Elmo plays both the hero and the villain in "The Lightning's Eye."

ERICH VON STROHEIM, Universal's meteoric director, whose "Blind Husbands" created a stir in the film world several months ago, has come to New York to supervise the final cutting and editing of his latest creation, "The Devil's Pass Key," a Universal-Jewel production of Parisian life, loves and intrigues.

Chicago Convention Endorses Universals Direct Payment Plan

Chicago, Ill., April 28, 1920
(Special to the Moving Picture Weekly)

R. H. Cochrane:

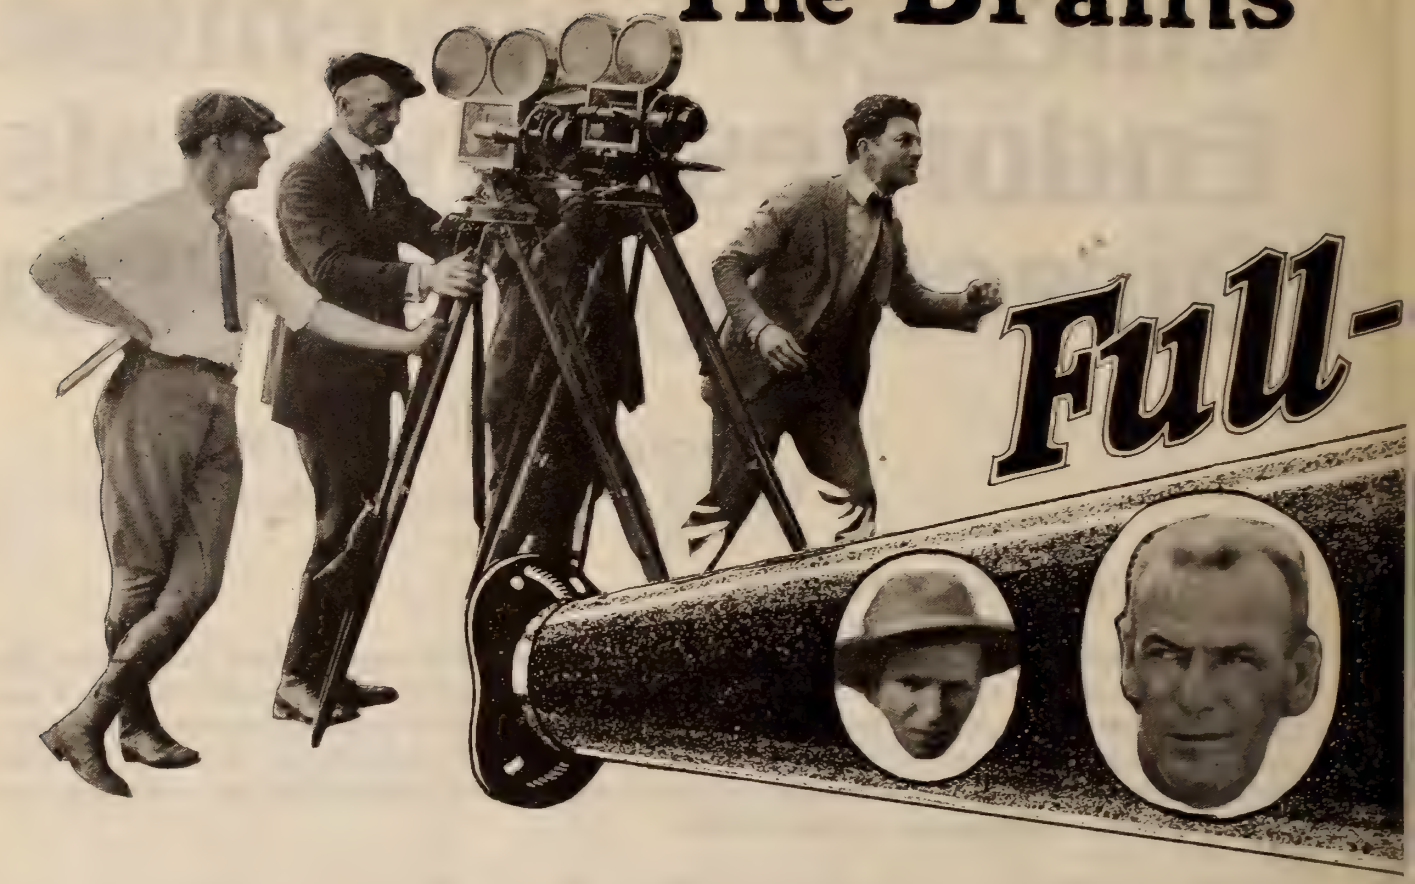
The convention of independent exhibitors in session at Congress Hotel to-day formed a permanent national association and greatly appreciate the offer of Universal Film Mfg. Company for their clear cut and straight forward statement made by your representatives, Berman and Levey on the floor of the Convention Hall this afternoon, in which they declared Universal being heart and soul with the independent exhibitors in their fight against the producing companies who are building and buying theatres.

It was further voted and will so be enforced that the independent exhibitors shall cancel and refrain from buying service from any producer who has not declared himself to the effect that he will not buy or operate theatres in competition to the independent exhibitors. Your handsome offer of support backed by Mr. Laemmle's offer of financial aid to put our association on its feet is deeply appreciated. The names of the men selected to-day is an evidence of the calibre of our newly organized association.

The exhibitors of this convention have been asked and have given us their promise that they will cancel and refrain from purchasing any further film service from any producer who is operating theatres in competition with us. We are sincere and propose to fight it out on these lines until the issue is decided. The following names compose our executive committee Mr. H. C. Farley, Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala.; Mr. M. Vanpraag, Central Garden, Kansas City, Kansas; Mr. D. W. Chamberlain American Amusement Co., 527 First Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.; Mr. Sig Samuels, Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.; Mr. Louis F. Blumenthal, 1600 Broadway, New York City, New York; Mr. L. T. Lester, Rivoli Theatre, Columbus, S. C.; Carl Kettler, West Palm Beach, Fla.; Mr. John Manheimer, Attornev at Law, 215 Montague Street, Brooklyn, New York; Mr. W. C. Patterson, Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.; Mr. A. F. Brentlinger, Bankers and Merchants Theatre Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.; Mr. Harry W. Kress, Piqua Amusement Co., Piqua, Ohio; Mr. H. M. E. Pasmezoglu, 302 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo.; Mr. C. E. Whitehurst, Baltimore, Md.; Mr. M. A. Choynski, Allied Amusement Association, 1313 Consumers Bldg., Chicago, Ill.; Mr. F. Rembusch, 40 Ohio Street, Indianapolis, Ind.; Mr. E. T. Peter, Box 212, Dallas, Texas; Mr. Lawrence E. Lund, 1125 Broadway, Oakland, California. Thanks again and again from every exhibitor present.

FRANK REMBUSCH,
Chairman Independent Exhibitors Ass'n. of America.

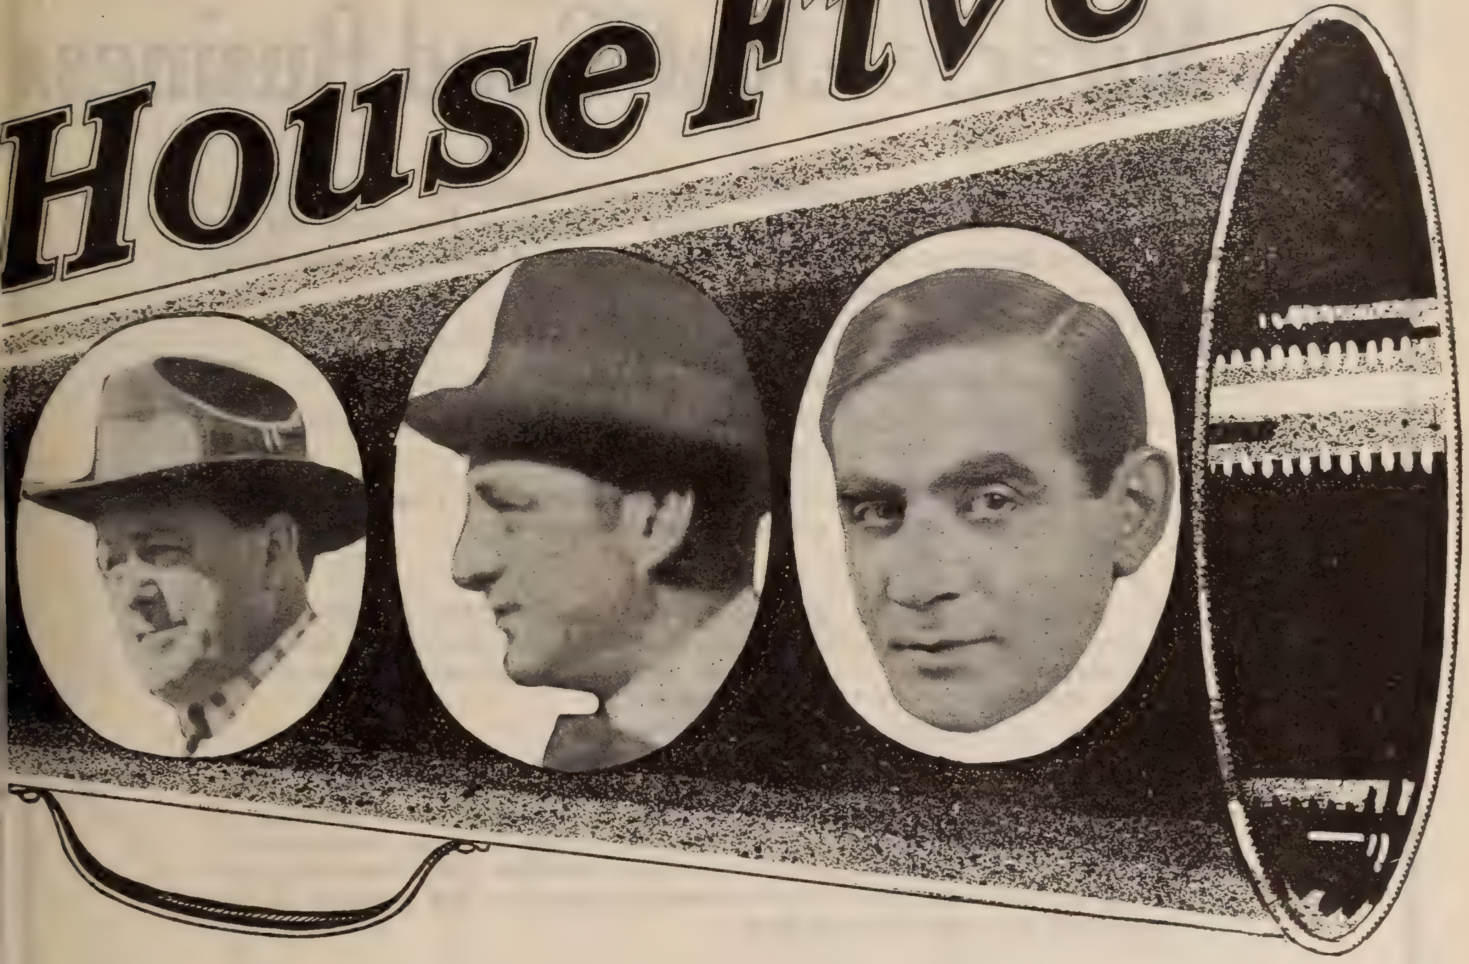
The Brains



REEVES EASON	It's a mighty fine director who turns out a humdinger like "The Moon Riders" with its strange Devilmen. Just another instance of the novelty, the unusualness you get in a Universal serial.
J. P. McGOWAN	"The Lure of the Circus?" Yes, it's the same J. P. McGowan, and he's gone himself one better in The Full-House Five, for he directed "Elmo the Fearless."
HENRY McRAE	The veteran. He knows the Orient like a book. He's put it all into the magnificent Overseas Serial, "The Dragon's Net." It's Marie Walcamp's newest triumph.
AL RUSSELL	The expert whose direction of the All-Star Serial, "The Lion Man," started the Full-House Five with a roaring success.
POLO	Yes, Eddie himself! For what is there Eddie can't do? Athlete, star, and some director you'll agree when you play "The Vanishing Dagger."

Universal Serials are Directed

behind Your House Five



YOU know as well as we do the vital importance of talented direction. You associate best pictures with best directors. But do you realize that Serials demand not merely best directors, but specialists? Select the finest director of any other kind of photoplay and he might very easily ruin a serial. Specialization in serial production has given Universal the cream of the serial directors, and the magnitude of our output enables us to retain them—the most talented the industry can boast—the men with the brains and the experience and expert skill to ensure success. That is why the Full House Five is the huge success we meant it to be—best stars, best stories, best direction.

Exclusively by Serial Specialists

No Miracle--Just Good Business

By the application of a well-founded business principle—quantity production and distribution—Universal's Full-House Five plan has put the serial business on a common sense basis at last. The underlying ideas of our plan are—

(a) To make more money for exhibitors and for ourselves.

(b) To insure exhibitors a full year of uninterrupted profits—with only one booking.

(c) To arrive at some good, workable, dependable plan for making and handling serials in years to come.

Has the Full-House plan succeeded? It has—TREMENDOUSLY! The figures of our sales department show that the entire proposition has taken exhibitors by storm. Showmen say the idea has given them an insight into a brand-new world of showmanship.

WHY? Because they saw that this was the first opportunity ever offered to free themselves from slip-shod, take-a-long-chance methods of buying serials, and to rid themselves of the worry of doing business with unknown, unproven, unequipped fly-by-night concerns. They know that with one sledge-hammer blow of real business tactics we had knocked all the worry out of serials for all time.

They knew that Universal, a concern putting hundreds of thousands of dollars in money, brains, equipment, reliability and reputation, could not afford to take the remotest chance of making a "dud" serial. They knew that every serial of the Full-House Five was made according to every rule of "know-how" and "know why" that seven long prosperous years of serial making had taught us. They knew we had selected five world-famous stars of repeated proven ability to draw crowds.

The Full-House Five plan has proven to be so tremendously good that we intend to repeat it next year—and the next—just the same as you would cling to any successful business method. You exhibitors have shown us that the principle of the plan was sound and sane. We purpose that you shall receive a lion's share of its profits.

If you have not yet booked the Full House Five, go or write this very minute to the nearest Universal Exchange. You'll find out something that will be a revelation in your business. You'll have to do it lightning quick if you expect to beat your competitor. Remember, he's reading this page too!

LOOK at this galaxy of stars—each a headliner—idols and pets of the serial fans every one. "Forget the expense," we said when we secured the wonderful story of "The Lion Man"—the strangest character that ever the imagination conceived. "Nothing short of an all-star cast can do such a story justice." Never in our experience has there been a serial with such a wealth of big star parts, and that is why you get The Lion Man with such star names as Kathleen O'Connor, Jack Perrin, J. Barney Sherry, Henry Barrows, Leonard Clapham and others of the calibre that pulls money into your box-office. Exhibitor after exhibitor tells us of the roaring success of The Lion Man. It justifies every promise we made for it—every penny of the big sum we spent in its making. It's the first of the FULL HOUSE FIVE, the greatest super-serials Universal ever produced. Big-Money Serial ALREADY our sales department is reporting amazing figures on this serial, signifying more strongly than words that Elmo Lincoln, the Fighting Colossus of the Screen, is repeating on a bigger scale than ever before all his tremendous previous success. He is the man who smashed his way into popularity in "The Birth of a Nation" and kept it at fever heat with "Intolerance," "Tarzan of the Apes," "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and packed the leading theatres of every State in the Union with his former chapter-thriller, "Elmo the Mighty." His last serial was built expressly to display Lincoln's enormous strength and acting ability. No exhibitor who wants to make money will overlook "Elmo the Fearless."

ELMO LINCOLN

hicago's Biggest Serial Users

WE regard this letter as a mighty fine tribute from the men who operate the biggest chain of motion picture theatres in Chicago. These men are serial experts from the exhibitor's standpoint. They are buyers for a great amusement organization as wide in its scope as a chain of big business concerns. They have to buy closely and buy right. They can not afford to buy anything but the very best serials the market affords. Moreover they can not afford to recommend a serial unless they have proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that it comes up to their rigid requirements. So when showmen of the enviable recognition that Ascher Brothers enjoy in the exhibitors' field declare in emphatic terms that "Elmo the Fearless" is one of the best serials they ever used—so good that they are running it in all their houses, every other exhibitor in the country who is playing to human nature can bet his bottom dollar that he can't go wrong with it. Don't fail to cash in heavy on the latest fighting, two-fisted serial thriller of Elmo Lincoln, the fighting Colossus of the Screen. He never fails to make money for exhibitors—anywhere.

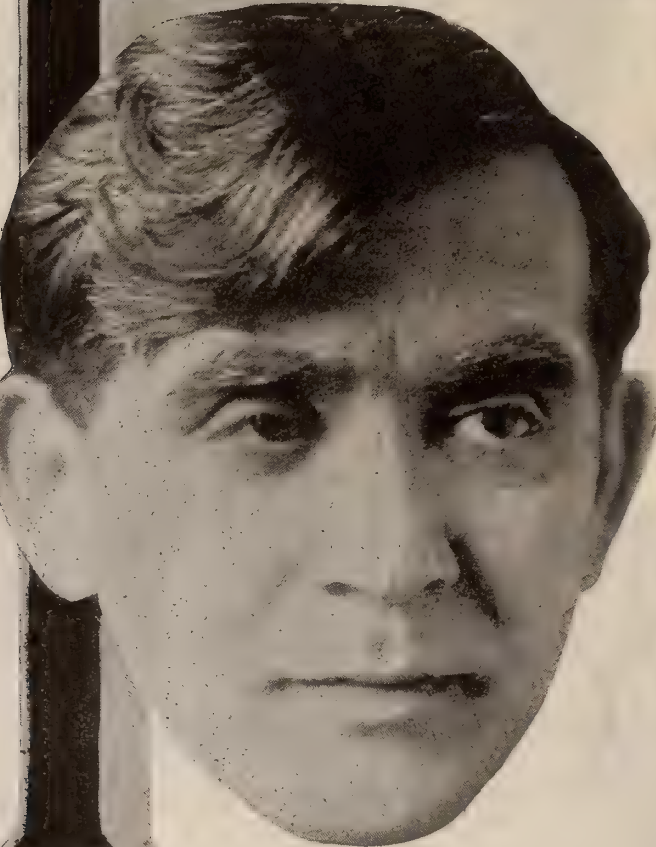
Herculean Idol of the Serial Fan



THE plain logical reason why Eddie Polo has become the Herculean idol of the screen is because he has every quality that goes to the making of a great serial star. He proved it in "The Broken Chain," "The Gray Ghost," "The Bullseye," for instance. Greatest proof of all is the wonderful hold Polo has on millions of fans throughout the country. That is the reason why the easiest thing we know is to sell a Polo serial and why the surest thing the fan knows is that he is going to see Polo every time he plays, and that is the common sense business reason why you will want to show him in his new, big, astounding serial, "The Vanishing Dagger."

CHARLES DOREMUS and two honeymooners, Mr. and Mrs. Bud Spring, had dared the exclusiveness of the Turk, and the Springs were spending the first weeks of their married life in the most fertile cigarette country in the world. Of course the Sultan's palace was one of the objects that was pointed out to them, and they were fortunate enough to witness a most touching ceremony at the Sultan's "family entrance." But unfortunately the Sultan saw the bride and conceived the idea that with a little fattening she would be an acceptable addition to his war-worn harem. The orders were issued and the task undertaken by the Sultan's understudy, a willing worker. Bud and his happiness were in a bad way until Bud thought of a moth-eaten menagerie that he had passed in his search. Lions in the harem brought the bride back in a hurry.

Rosa	Beatrice Dominguez

BUCK RAVELLE, ranger, while riding to the rescue of Anna Baldwin, his employer's daughter, is thrown off and his horse falls upon him. He manages to extricate himself and dashes on on foot.

Rosa, daughter of the housekeeper for Egbert, a rancher, is about to plunge a dagger into Anna's heart when Egbert comes in and prevents it.

Baldwin, the girl's father, heads an association of cattlemen who fight a faction that claims their ranches by virtue of an old Spanish land grant. Egbert, while pretending sympathy, in reality backs the opposition and also secretly heads a band of marauding outlaws.

Baldwin, having missed his daughter, is also seeking her and meets her as she makes her way home, alone. Not satisfied, they turn about and go to Egbert's. In the meantime Buck arrives and is overpowered by Egbert.

There is a frame-up and it is made to appear, in front of Baldwin and Anna, that Rosa is in love with Buck, that he has made wild love to her. Baldwin is disappointed, and Anna, who had begun to care for him, is heartbroken. Neither will listen to explanations.

On the following day Buck leaves the ranch. Later he is able to save Baldwin from the outlaws, only to be captured himself.

Egbert, who has never been seen by his outlaws without his disguise, is mistaken by them and captured for Baldwin.

Buck, blindfolded, is led to a cliff by a lariat. He walks over into space. The free end of the lariat becomes entangled with the legs of an outlaw and he is drawn perilously near the edge. As an outlaw slashes the lariat with a knife Buck drops into the abyss below.

We are taken to Dayton, Ohio, to view the first house ever erected there. This was in the year 1796, and the structure was known as Newcombe's Tavern. Built by pioneers, it was the scene of many an Indian attack. It was famed for its sun dial, which, unfortunately, was lost in the flood of 1913, so that the magazine exposes to our view a reproduction only.

Grand Central Station in New York, a labyrinth of tracks and levels, is, notwithstanding, a remarkably controlled and systematized place. In addition to the thousands of incoming and outgoing travelers there are several hundred "commuting" trains, carrying 250,000 workers in and out of New York each day to suburban homes. The dispatcher reigns supreme and with chart and telephone he and his assistants ably perform their intricate duties.

Another instance of progressive New York is found in its outdoor vocational scheme of education whereby children in poor health are taught such useful arts as shoe repairing, knitting, etc., out in the open, and are thereby physically as well as mentally benefitted.

Cinema Luke, as always, does his share to provide humor, this time appearing in an animated skit in which apartments, rents and fleas play an important part.

JACK MORGAN, a happy-go-lucky ranger, is disappointed when his father fails to send him a money gift sufficient to enable him to marry Ruth Machin. Worse yet, Ruth tells him she will not marry him unless he has earned $5,000 of his own. Jack, therefore, decides to carry out a fake hold-up on his father, demand $5,000 ransome and marry Ruth, but unfortunately for him his plans are overheard by a band of outlaws.

Richard, the father, planning a pleasant surprise for his son, rigs himself out in a western outfit, and being a parson, feels thoroughly uncomfortable. John, Ruth's father, having attended a political convention in Richard's town that day, boards the same stage as Richard, just as uncomfortable as he is in a frock coat. They get into a heated political argument, being of opposite convictions, and are interrupted by the real outlaws, who take Machin in a frock coat for Morgan, the minister, and kidnap him. They discover their mistake, but write Ruth for the $5,000 ransom for her father.

In the meantime Jack, scenting real danger, has found his father, left him in Ruth's care and proceeded to the cave of the bandits, where Machin had been taken. After a fearful fight, abetted by his pals, he overcomes them. Ruth arrives with Morgan, who has kindly loaned her the ransom money. Jack, seeing them coming, gets his men to dress up as bandits. Disguised as one himself, he demands the ransom money of Richard for Machin, and then orders his father, as a parson, to marry him to Ruth. Ruth, who in the meantime had seen through the ruse, says, "Anything to save my father," and thus Jack wins his girl and has earned the $5,000 in addition.

To Sum up

ONE last word. You know as well as we that when a business is in a state of constant and steady expansion through a term of years it must necessarily be selling the goods. And if it is selling the goods in ever increasing quantity those goods must be of a high quality.

Now—no serial producing concern in the whole world has grown as fast in serial-making during the past few years as Universal—nor is any other company today producing an equal number of serials.

In these two statements, therefore, you have the whole argument for the booking of Universal serials in preference to those made by concerns not having the resources of Universal and totally without the expert knowledge which, of itself, guarantees you a money-getting Chapter Play.

If you are a man who likes to figure things out in a logical way and get results that are right, being based on simple business facts that are open to investigation any time of day or night, we think that most of your serial business from now on will be done with the most successful serial producers in the world today—Universal.

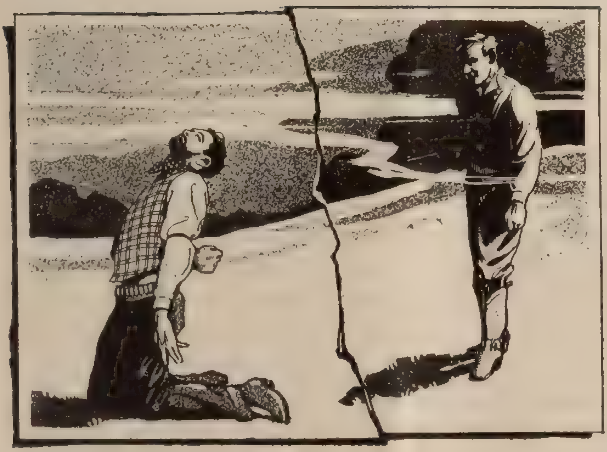
the tell-tale Photograph



THE furious struggle in Elmo Lincoln's powerful picture, "Elmo the Fearless" centers upon two factions in the picture trying to get possession of a torn photograph which not only incriminates one of the crooks as a murderer, but reveals the location of an immensely valuable platinum deposit in the North. As the mighty conflict rages on it brings in villainous derelicts from California's Barbary Coast, uncouth giants of the Timberlands and denizens of the underworld. Throughout the whirlwind action towers the mighty figure of Elmo, whom nothing can swerve from his determination to rescue a victimized girl and her father from the clutches of designing monsters. It is not too late to get "Elmo the Fearless" for your theatre. See about it to-day and get in on the huge profits other exhibitors are already reaping with this tremendous serial.

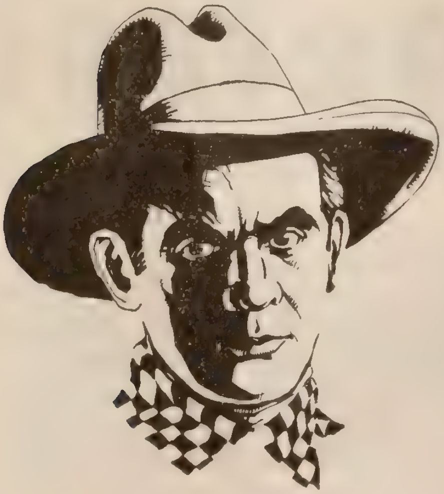
the master of the serial thrill



EDDIE POLO himself is the one big best reason why nothing should prevent you from booking his latest and biggest thriller, "The Vanishing Dagger." Polo produced it himself and in it he has displayed the handiwork of a Master Director as well as a star whose work is approached by no other serial star of his type in the world. Polo is devoting his life to giving people thrills. He began it back in his old circus days and so great was his success that pictures claimed him as their own. Remembering such serials as "The Lure of the Circus," "The Broken Coin," "The Bull's Eye" and others, no wise exhibitor will forego an opportunity to book Polo. He is called the King of the Serial, for no serial needs more than the presence of this wonderful actor-athlete-daredevil to be a tremendous money maker. Don't pass up Polo.

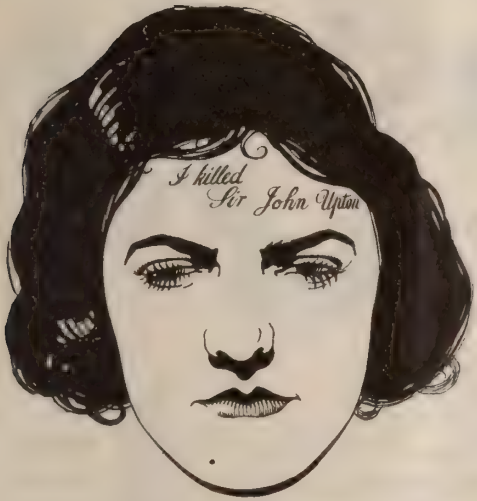
the terrible confession



I killed Sir John Upton

ADDED to the unparalleled popularity of Eddie Polo as the star in "The Vanishing Dagger," this picture has a wealth of other features that make it absolutely sure fire. The action takes your audience on a tour of the world. The departure last summer of Polo's big company on an extended trip to many parts of the world was one of the events in the picture industry. Polo is seen as John Grant, an American, seeking a charmed dagger with the power to remove from the brow of Beth Latimer, his fiancee, a confession of murder written under the hynotic influence of a villainous Hindu potentate. Don't let this serial slip through your fingers. Make sure of it to-day. It's a marvel of intense interest and masterful construction. Above all the world-wide popularity of Polo, the serial idol of thousands, will insure its success.

THE weird clan of Devilmen against whom Cowboy Art Acord battles in "The Moon Riders" gallop into the action like mounted whirlwinds right in the first episode and help to maintain a suspense that puts this serial into the first rank of successful chapter pictures. The mask of the dread Moon Riders was a symbol of terror throughout the countryside. They lived in the catacombed hills and engaged in every crime on the calendar, from cattle rustling to murder, communicating with their leader and one another by wireless telephony. Their cave was a labyrinth of murderous devices and chambers of horror. Don't fail to book "The Moon Riders" if you want something brand new in the serial line. News Reel Policy Wins

EXHIBITORS all over the country are recognizing more and more the growing importance of the news reel and its relations to the newspaper stories of the day, it was pointed out recently by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, upon his return from a tour of the middle west for the purpose of investigating the news reel situation.

"I found that the live wire exhibitors," said Mr. Berman, "are realizing more and more the importance of having up-to-date news reels in their houses, news reels that flash pictorial gists of important events almost as soon as the events are chronicled in the daily papers.

"Exhibitor after exhibitor told me that patrons now have the habit of asking, 'When are you going to show pictures of the Mexican Revolution?' or 'Are you going to show picture of that big train wreck in the East?' and similar inquiries proving that they anticipate news pictures of the day's events.

"International News Sevrice is one of the first news reel publishers to take cognizance of this awakening interest in day to day news reels. By its recent change in policy affecting the release of news reels, the I. N. S. has taken the first great step towards putting news reels on a live news basis.

"On my trip through the middle west I was accompanied by R. V. Anderson of the International News Service. We made Chicago, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. We found that the news twice-a-week release of the International News reels, has won for this reel a place on the programs of first class houses which scorned the older weekly releases. It is a satisfying commentary on the trend of screen news that the more frequent release of news reels is meeting with such popular favor."

Big Stunt in Small Town

A. BANNON, manager of the New Plaza Theatre, West New Brighton, Staten Island, New York, has a small theatre in a small town, but he is a firm believer in going the limit in exploitation.

When he booked "The Great Air Robbery" the big Universal picture starring Lieutenant O. L. Locklear, Bannon set his mind on having Locklear himself for a personal appearance. He would have succeeded, if the daring aviator had not at that time been three thousand miles away—in California.

Bannon was undaunted, however, and went around looking for the next best aviator he could find. He finally met P. F. Collins, one of the crack airmen of the Curtiss Aeroplane Company, and arranged for Collins to take him upon the opening day of his run of "The Great Air Robbery.. and fly over West New Brighton and the nearby towns.

Bannon figured on pulling an additional stunt. He advertised for a man willing to make a parachute leap from an aeroplane soaring over his town. He was deluged with applications. Complications with the local police authorities and the Curtiss company. put an end to this plan however.

Instead, Bannon arranged a large canvas sign, which he exhibited in West New Brighton. It read aas follows:

LOOK OUT STATEN ISLAND!
The Aerial Mail Bandits in
THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY
Will Bomb You From the Sky,
——APRIL 23——
If you hear a Curtiss Aeroplane
DON'T LOOK UP!

On the specified date, Bannon, piloted by Collins, in a big Curtiss scout bi-plane, flew from the Long Island aviation field, across New York Bay and circled over his theatre, dropping dodgers advertising the picture, and a certain number of free tickets.

The stunt got much local newspaper publicity and filled Bannon's theatre to capacity.

Motion Pictures Not Guilty

THIS is the verdict based on reports from chief probation officers of juvenile courts throughout the United States on the relation of motion pictures to juvenile delinquency. Last year the National Board of Review with the cooperation of the American Probation Association asked these officers for a frank statement of their opinion and experience in this connection.

Forty-two of the officers so addressed replied. Of these, twenty-seven held that the movies are not directly responsible for cases of juvenile delinquency. Ten were non-committal and five pronounced the movies guilty.

The replies of those who exonerated the motion picture were far more convincing than the replies of relatively few which were unfavorable. Take for instance this; "I have been in this work for fourteen years and have had occasion to deal with thousands of delinquents. . . . Of the thousands of boys and girls arraigned in our court, there have been very few who testified, or of whom our investigators could learn that they committed the wrong in question because of the so-called baleful effects of the pictures they had seen."

Again another officer says: "Parents always have excuses in court when confronted by the judge and charged with lack of responsibility, and the movies are so popular it is natural they should rest the blame there rather than on the real cause.

It is interesting to note that two of the five officers who indicted motion pictures as in their opinion an important direct cause of juvenile delinquency are in states having legal boards of censorship, namely, Ohio and Pennsylvania. This bears out the contention of the National Board of Review that motion pictures intended for adults cannot be made fit for young people by any amount of censoring and that therefore the only way of meeting the problem of young people with respect to the films, is by means of special performances.

Films Permanent in Advertising

Harry Levey, manager of Universal-Industrial Films.

MERCHANTS from the Drapers' Chamber of Trade of the United Kingdom, who are touring the United States under the auspices of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, were presented last Tuesday evening with a motion picture "close-up" of themselves.

The presentation was made at the Capitol Theatre, "the world's largest theatre," where more than forty members from the Drapers' Chamber of Trade were entertained by Harry Levey, manager of Universal Industrial Films. Mr. Levey filmed the merchants upon their arrival in New York on Friday of last week. This film was shown on the screen of the Capitol Theatre on Tuesday evening, in conjunction with the regular performance there, and extra bits of the film, showing a miniature likeness of each merchant, were distributed among the merchants.

There was also shown on the screen a composite film of portions of industrial and educational pictures made by the Industrial Department of the Universal Film Company, in connection with the educational work being done by stores throughout the country to train their employees to a better knowledge of their work and its requirements. The Universal Industrial Department has made a great number and variety of such films, and these pictures have done much to promote efficient work among the employees of the shops. As the Merchants from the Drapers Chamber of Trade of the United Kingdom are touring the United States for the purpose of observing American methods of shop management and salesmanship training, the composite film shown them Tuesday night was chosen as the best method of acquainting them with American ideals along that line. Steps in the making of silk, silverware, stockings, hooks and eyes, corsets, pins, shoes, and leather soles were shown. These are only small parts of films showing the complete mechanism of these processes. The complete pictures, the only ones of their kind made, are distributed through the Department Store Circuit of the National Retail Dry Goods Association.

Lewis Hahn, National Director of the National Retail Dry Goods Association, New York; Homer Curtis, Secretary of the same Association; Donal Dey of Syracuse; P. A. Bergner, Peoria, Ill.; S. F. Izard, Elmira, N. Y.; Z. Himelhoch, Detroit, Mich.; Mrs. Lucinda W. Prince, Boston, Mass.; Roger W. Allen, Nugent's Bulletin, New York City; Mrs. Roger W. Drapers from London See Universal Industrials

THAT the motion picture has come to be not only a spectacular success in the advertising world. but that it has come to stay was the keynote of an address delivered by Harry Levey, manager of the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacting Co., to a prominent body of advertising writers last Tuesday night.

Mr. Levey was specially invited to open the weekly meeting of the League of Advertising Women. Emphasizing the place that the motion picture has attained in the advertising of the day, the program at this meeting was devoted exclusively to motion pictures.

In asking Mr. Levey to address those present, the Program Committee said: "We feel that there should be this short preliminary talk, and we know of no one better qualified than you to give it." Mr. Levey spoke on "The Role the Motion Picture Plays in the Advertising of To-day." "The Silken Web," a new motion picture made by him to exploit a certain brand of silk stockings, was shown.

"The motion picture has achieved a permanent place in the advertising of to-day," Mr. Levey said. "It has established its position by reason of the fact that the Universal Film Company has built up a concrete policy of weaving entertaining and interesting films that include a certain amount of advertising message that is beneficial to exhibitor, audience, and advertiser. In these films are used stories purchased in the same manner as those for photoplays. Only recently the Industrial Department paid $2,500.00 for a story written by a prominent author and sold in book form.

"The pictures are released regularly by the Universal Exchanges under a direct payment policy, whereby the exhibitor gets a fair return for the use of his screen and for booking with Universal."

"We are in receipt of many letters from Exhibitors all over the country, telling us that Universal Industrial and Educational Films released in this manner are very well received by their patrons, and they are constantly being asked for more of such pictures.

"I believe that the future will bring forth much greater growth in the industrial advertising motion picture, and that such films will be internationally important factors in advertising."

"Thrills Unnumbered"

"Thrills unnumbered are furnished in 'The Great Air Robbery,' with the daredevil Locklear in the role of the chief thriller. He performs his mid-air sensation of leaping from one airplane to another and crawls out on the tail of a plane thousands of feet above the earth. The picture is an excellent example of the nth degree of thrill feature, well produced and well photographed."

Universal Film Co.,

Gentlemen:—

I feel sure it will interest you to know that the previous house record of the Loew-Garrick theatre was COMPLETELY OBLITERATED this week on the engagement of "THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY."

Prior to the run of "THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY" the largest attendance on any attraction was that achieved by June Caprice when she made a PERSONAL APPEARANCE during the run of her picture. A close second to this was FRANK MAYO in "THE BRUTE BREAKER."

LOCKLEAR, however, EXCEEDED THE MARK REGISTERED by Miss Caprice by several hundred dollars. I will admit that the TREMENDOUS RECEIPTS on "THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY" were a BIG SURPRISE to me.

I would add also that MORE THAN A THOUSAND PEOPLE were UNABLE TO GAIN ADMISSION at the first matinee.

'THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY"

Everything-- ! and then some

LIEUTENANT LOCKLEAR excels himeslf in this wondrous production. "The Great Air Robberty" is all that one could imagine, and then some.

INTERWOVEN in a subtle plot of strong dramatic force, it carries the acutest thrills of intrepid, death-defying daredevilism. One can almost hear the whirring of the machines in skyland. The view of the U. S. aerial mail field at night, with its scores of planes is a masterpiece in itself. The rescue is a stirring scene. The pretty love plot has all the charm of true romance. It is a drama that must be visualized to realize.

in the Chicago Evening Post: --

"Go see 'The Great Air Robbery' and you get all the thrills of an airplane trip without its discomforts. This production is literally "staged in the clouds." The picture is very clever, the exploits of Locklear of course being the big feature, but the camera man who dared the dangers, and the director, too, deserve great credit.

A Great Performance

"Locklear's performance in changing from one plane to another thousands of feet above the earth and climbing out on to the wings of his plane are clearly shown and are sure to give you many moments of excitement.

You Will Enjoy It

"The story, too, is out of the ordinary with the great merit, of course, in its thrills. The picture is six reels in length, but for once six reels did not seem too long. I should not have minded watching another reel or two of Locklear's stunts."

ARE you one of the exhibitors who is just tumbling over himself to book the very latest picture on the market or are you one of the exhibitors who is looking for pictures to please his audience? If you are one of the former, you are going to have a hard time this summer; if you are one of the latter, you will be able to profit very materially by a plan which the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has developed and which will be unfolded in a short time. It is the biggest boon for exhibitors, who can see further than the next week, which any film company has ever devised. On this page are shown several displays of Jewel pictures which have been among the biggest money makers the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has put out. In connection with the display of the White House Theatre, Milwaukee, take a glance at page 35 and note the enthusiasm which this house discloses toward Universal productions.

If you haven't played a feature, it is as new as though it were first run.

Mr. George Levine, Manager,

Dear Sir:

Photoplays have come, and photoplays have gone, but I still have to meet an equal to Harry Carey in MARKED MEN, the Universal production shown at the WhiteHouse Theatre, on Feb. 5, 6, and 7. I was kept busy at my office during its entire run, by people who enjoyed these performances, congratulating me and expressing their great satisfaction, urging me to continue booking pictures imbued with that unusual attraction as displayed in MARKED MEN. I am writing you this letter, for I feel that these words of praise, belong only to the UNIVERSAL, for having produced such a picture.

The unique lobby display created a great sensation, and practically every person who stopped to look at it, went in to see the performance.

Having shown a picture of this nature at my Theatre, it will be difficult for me to please my patrons from now on, unless you can furnish me with more and more pictures like it. THE MOTION PICTURE WORLD IS IN URGENT NEED OF THEM.

May we count on the Universal in this respect?

Very truly yours,
O. L. Meister
Manager,
Whitehouse Theatre.

Lee promises to take his wife on a trip within the next few days.

Lee goes over to Eddie's house and while he is gone the broker calls up and gets Lee's wife on the phone. He tells her that Florence is sinking rapidly and that the boys must come to her aid at once. Lee's wife is suspicious and thinks the broker is referring to a girl. She rusnes over to Eddie's house and asks who Florence is. Lee explains that Florence is the name of his stenographer and the two boys rush out and go over to Lee's house. They call the broker and he tells them the stock is flopping fast and that they must raise more money to protect their margin.

While the boys are still trying to figure out how to raise the money, the broker calls up Eddie's house where the two wives are in conference. He tells Eddie's wife that Florence must be covered at once, starting the suspicion all over again with the two wives.

The boys come back and Eddie takes his wife's fur and Lee takes his wife's ring, both telling their wives they are taking the stuff down to be cleaned. They go to broker's office and get stenographer to go out and pawn stuff. Wives follow the boys. They meet stenographer and recognize stuff. They have the stenographer arrested and taken to the station. The stenographer calls the office and tells the broker. The broker sends the boys to rescue her. The boys arrive and find their wives at the police station. They try to explain but with no luck. The police sergeant orders them arrested. A telegram arrives from the broker telling them Florence has gone up and they are millionaires. They are forgiven by their wives and everything is Jake.

Rescuing Anna, they proceed to the horse cave, mount two of the horses and start out, pursued by three bandits.

In the meantime Egbert and the foreman arrive at Baldwin's, and Baldwin forces them to accompany him back. They view the chase from a ledge, and the bandits, espying reinforcements, flee, so that Buck and the party return to the ranch, where they find Warpee awaiting them ready to arrange the terms of the compromise. He refuses them an extension, and Baldwin, accepting the offer of a loan from Buck, the latter starts out immediately to Los Angeles to arrange details, so that he can make it in time to hold the option. Egbert, fearing the homestead is slipping from him, insists on accompanying Buck, suggesting that they go around to his place so that he can collect some of his things. There Buck is attacked by three bandits and rendered unconscious by Egbert, who, believing him dead, takes his papers and sets out for Los Angeles. But Buck, coming to life later, seizes a horse in a frenzied effort to make the train, and as it passes him springs on to it. But the three bandits, who had pursued him, anticipated his action, and jumping on also, knocked him off before he had time to recover from his jump. Buck falls senseless on the track directly in front of an approaching switch engine.

"An Artist's Muddle"

Rainbow Comedy

TWO artists are both in love with the same girl who is married to a sailor, which fact they do not know. The husband, returning from the war, meets one of the artists (the heavy), and finds out that he knows the girl. The heavy gets the girl in the other artist's studio in order to get him in bad and tells the husband, who is hiding outside, to come in when he sneezes. The girl poses but the artist displeased with the pose, tells the heavy to sit down and asks him how he likes the pose. The artist walks to the door and when the fatal sneeze occurs, the sailor rushes in to find his wife with the heavy. The heavy gets even with the artist by getting the girl and the sailor in another room and telling the artist that the girl is in there with a strange man. When the artist sees the couple he begins a battle, but realizing his mistake a chase ensues. There follows a lively time in which a hot tamale stand plays an important part and the chasing is continued until the very end.

Vincennes, quaintest of French towns, situated on the Seine, is renowned for its market place. Here may be seen merchandise of all kinds and vendors of all kinds, but the market place serves other purposes as well, for during the war it was the common meeting place of the townsfolk to talk over the newest happenings.

That the ancients were as adept at artisanship as the moderns is proven by the fact that they too practiced the delicate art of making thin gold membranes used in gilding domes, gold lettering etc., and they practiced it well. It is a most exacting process and requires a thorough concentration.

Took Care of Itself

Universal Film Mfg. Co., New York

In answer to your letter with reference to playing "The Virgin of Stamboul," I must admit that we did nothing remarkable in exploiting this picture. We figured the picture would take care of itself and it did. As you will note, we used a special stage setting, dressing our oboe player up as a Turk, used incense and everything that goes with a Turkish harem, except the girls. We used the newspapers freely and kept continually harping on the fact that it has taken Universal eleven months to make the picture and that it cost $500,000. In one ad we left the last ought off, which looked terrible, but sounded reasonable. Your local Exchange invited about 150 exhibitors from over the state to our theatre, in order that they might see how we put it over. Our music was highly effective and made the last reel, especially, very realistic. Our business was highly satisfactory and we congratulate you upon having made a most excellent production.

I wish to compliment the Universal Film Company on their wonderful production the "Virgin of Stamboul." As you know, my house is not a two-day house, but never-the-less when you sold me the idea of running this picture two days, I was doubtful as to whether it would go over, but I am pleased to advise that I made fifty per cent more with "The Virgin of Stamboul" than with any other large production I have run so far.

THE TALK OF THE TOWN

The Universal Film Co.,
1600 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
Gentlemen:

As the official Press Agent of the Lynn Olympia Theatre, which has a seating capacity of 3,500 I take pleasure of writing you these few lines to inform you of the great success of your production, Priscilla Dean had in "The Virgin of Stamboul," which was shown here the first three days of this week.

It was the opinion of the several thousand people who saw the picture that Miss Dean was at her best, in fact, the production was the talk of the town. I thought myself that Miss Dean did some wonderful acting. I deemed it best to drop you a line just to inform you that it made a deep impression upon the minds of Greater-Lynn Theatre goers.

Trusting that I will hear from you from time to time, I remain,

Very truly yours,
Francis P. ("Tip") O'Neill,
The Lynn, Mass., Telegram-News.

WHAT THEY DID

at the Lincoln Theatre, Union Hill, to put over "The Virgin of Stamboul."

The Lincoln Theatre is one of the best bets in the chain of theatres owned by the Haring and Blumenthal Enterprises. They will play the picture in their other houses

YOU may be interested to know how we put "The Virgin of Stamboul" over at the big Lincoln Theatre at Union Hill, N. J., so that it played to standing room only for three days.

For a week in advance of the showing we exhibited large paintings in the lobby, arranged with electric drop lights shaded above them, in much the same manner as paintings are shown in an art gallery. Slides were also shown at each performance for many days in advance of the first play date and the Saturday preceding the Monday opening we used a half page smash advertisement in the two daily newspapers of largest circulation in Hudson county, at the same time carrying readers and two inch ads on several different pages announcing a special Harem dance feature.

From Saturday until the following Wednesday, the last day of showing, we saw to it that each newspaper carried a good amount of reading matter. Most of this was of the regulation amusement type but they also carried a re-written story of the Sheik in search of his lost fiancée unders a news head.

The girl ushers were costumed in Turkish outfits and set the whole town talking. The theatre was well perfumed with Garden of Allah incense and it was burning on the stage throughout the showing of the picture.

A nature dancer was engaged to "go on with the picture." We ran the film up until that portion of the second reel which shows the dance in the Harem, when the picture was stopped, screen raised disclosing a Harem set with the costumed girl ushers laying about in the background and the spot light on the dancing girl who then performed her dance. When she was finished the picture was immediately flashed back on the screen and went through to the finish.

This presentation made a great hit. It can be worked in with this feature to perfection, enhancing it's value and providing a real novelty. We called our dancing girl "Resha," after the Sheik's favorite as shown in the film and we billed her heavily as the girl who did the Harem dance in the feature, using such lines as "Personal appearance of Resha," performing on the stage the dance she does in the feature picture."

The dancing girl stunt, the unusual billing, the costuming of the ushers, etc., etc., backed up by a remarkably fine motion picture such as "The Virgin of Stamboul" is, packed the Lincoln at every performance, we "Stood 'em up," and they were satisfied to stand and see our show.

(Signed) R. W. Baremore,
Publicity Mgr. Lincoln Theatre.

THE SHRINE BOOKED IT.

HERMAN STERN, Universal's Pittsburgh exchange manager, established a precedent in that territory recently when he sold the big Priscilla Dean picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul," to the Pittsburgh Mystic Shrine.

Joe Mackerel, Potentate of the Shrine of Pittsburgh, was persuaded to visit the Universal projection rooms one Sunday afternoon. He saw "The Virgin of Stamboul." Before leaving the Universal office he had contracted for a regular booking of the big oriental picture for a showing in the Mystic Shrine Mosque, one of the largest buildings of its kind in America.

He notified every Mason in the Pittsburgh territory to be on hand. The crowd that poured into the Mosque on May 7 and the enthusiasm with which they greeted the picture, was ample verification of his belief that the Universal picture had a particular appeal to Shriners.

It was the first time a feature production ever had been shown in the Shriner's temple.

WANTS MORE LIKE IT.

Herman Stern, Manager, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., 1018 Forbes Street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Mr. Stern:

Give us more pictures like "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" in Canonsburg. As you are aware, this is a very small town and I have a very small house, but nevertheless, there is no picture of the caliber of "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" too big for me to play. I am more than satisfied with the business I did on this picture and may ask for a return engagement.

With best wishes, I remain,

Very truly yours,
(Signed) Earle W. Forsythe,
Mgr., Star Theatre.

You have left out nothing in this monster production that would mar its supreme achievement, 'tis truly a beautiful picture and Miss Dean is simply grand in her portrayal of the part of the Virgin.

With very best wishes to you and the continued success of the Universal films I beg to remain,

POLO SERIAL STARTS

"The Vanishing Dagger," International in its filming, released in June.

UNIVERSAL'S long-heralded policy of making serials that are high-class adventure and travel pictures, will have its initial exemplification in the next few days, when Eddie Polo's international serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," will be released throughout the country.

Pool and his party crossed the Atlantic last summer in order to film scenes in England, Scotland and Wales, and the continent of Europe. Three months were passed abroad. Many thousand feet of film were taken showing the actors in the serial enacting incidents of the plot in the actual settings called for in the scenario. This is expected to eliminate much criticism on the part of foreign patrons who usually are amused at screen attempts to duplicate foreign places and scenes with which they are familiar.

Supporting Polo in the new serial are Thelma Percy and Peggy O'Dare, two screen favorites. Others in the cast are Ray Ripley as the heavy, Ruth Royce, Thomas Lingham, C. Norman Hammond, Laura Oakley, Arthur Jarvis and Karl DeSylva.

Polo and Edward Kull, working together, directed the chaptered screen story. It was written by Jacques Jaccard, Milton Moore and Hope Loring in collaboration. Miss Loring put it into scenario form.

The first episode opens at the fashionable house-party on the estate of an English nobleman. The serial quickly shifts to London and other parts of the British Isles. The action later takes the characters half way around the world to Western America, then jumps to other parts of the American continent, and finally back to Europe.

It is full of thrills and dare-devil stunts by Polo, an unusually fearless screen star. Included among these are a dive of 25 feet from a cliff into a heavy surf, a leap from the deck of an ocean-liner in mid-ocean, a bare-handed struggle with a wild leopard, and similar stunts. This issue also contains a short press sheet for use by first-run exhibitors of "The Vanishing Dagger."

CENTURIES ONLY

BEGINNING early next fall, Universal will release only one brand of two-reel comedies, it was announced upon Mr. Carl Laemmle's return from the Coast. With the projected concentration on one brand, Universal will strive to turn out a series of comedy releases better even than the Century Brand. They will all be called Century Comedies, and the Century bathing girls will figure largely and pleasingly in most of them. A certain number will have lions, and some will have both.

Heretofore Universal has released several brands of comedies, including some straight Universal comedies, and the Century and Rainbow brands, produced by the L-Ko Company. The Rainbow Comedy now in production, called "An Awful Skate," featuring Zip Monberg and Edna Gregory, will be the last Rainbow to be made. Including this one, there still are four Rainbow comedies yet to be released.

Fred Fishback, the leading director for the L-Ko comedies, recently arrived in New York and sold the Universal on the idea of a new style of clever comedy. He brought one print with him to prove his point. It is called "A Movie Hero" and is a laughable satire on screen idols. It will be one of the first pictures released under the new one-brand schedule.

With Lillian Byron, Edna Gregory, Emily Gardez and Fay Holderness as the nucleus, a bevy of beauties is being picked for the new Century Comedies that will open the eyes of the most sophisticated film-fan. This change in comedy policy is one of the many steps Universal is taking to assure a first-class and elaborate schedule of releases for next fall.

"THE GIRL IN THE RAIN" A SPECIAL CORNWALL

ROLLIN STURGEON, Universal director, has just announced the completion at Universal City of a new picture starring Anne Cornwall, Universal's most recent stellar find. The picture, "The Girl In the Rain," is an adaptation of Varick Vanardy's popular novel, "The Girl By the Roadside." It will be a special release coming between the S R O 12 and the newly-established Star Series plan of Universal bookings.

"The Girl In the Rain" is Miss Cornwall's third picture for Universal. Her first was "Everything But the Truth," in which she played a supporting rôle to Lyons and Moran. She then was starred in a picturization of Ida M. Evan's magazine story, "Virginia," which was released as a picture under the title "The Path She Chose." "The Girl In the Rain" is a story of a pretty girl who is marooned by a tempest in a deserted shack with a socially prominent young man. The two fall in love, but the girl is the innocent associate of a pair of lawbreakers. The complications that result from her attempts to break from the crooks and to keep her story from her new-found love, form a spirited plot full of action and mystery.

Supporting Miss Cornwall in this picture are James Liddy, Lloyd Bacon, Jossalyn Von Trump, James Farley, George Runkel and Neal Hardin. Both Miss Cornwall and Liddy, who plays opposite her, are newcomers in the films. Both are former musical comedy favorites. Miss Cornwall formerly was one of the prettiest chorus girls who played in the series of intimate musical shows presented at the Princess Theatre, New York. Her principal screen portrayal before joining Universal was that of the ingenue rôle in "The Copperhead," with Lionel Barrymore. Liddy was a star football half-back before he went on the stage. He was a University of Arizona favorite and made the All-Western team.

A Shoulder to Shoulder Talk

IN all this talk—and proof—of big producing organizations buying up key theatres and driving the small owner and non-monopoly producer to the wall there is one fact that sticks out like a sore finger—you can corner anything in this world except brains.

Just so long as brains will continue to make better pictures than merely money, you—be you big owner or small owner—need not be afraid that you can't pull the crowds and do the business. If you have the best pictures in town, people can't stay away from your theatre—and all the advertising of the monopoly outfit can't alter the fact—it simply isn't human nature.

Read Universal's latest Announcement on the following seven pages. These forty-eight pictures were made by a non-monopolizing organization for any-and-every theatre in the land—made with the brains and the experience that mere money can't buy—made to be your pictures with which successfully to fight monopoly—made to be the best pictures in town.

ALL ABOUT EDDIE POLO

Star of “The Vanishing Dagger,” the New Around-the-World Serial Has Had Interesting Career

EDDIE POLO, star of the new Universal serial, “The Vanishing Dagger,” the opening episode of which will be shown next .... at the .... Theatre, was born in the circus, trained in the circus, has lived the circus man’s life of hardship and narrow escapes and has transferred many of his actual experiences to the screen, blending them into the plots and themes of the various serials which he directs and which, by the very reason of their realism, win praise even from those who ordinarily are not devotees of the spectacular and hazardous in moving pictures.

To see Eddie Polo one would never dream that his sturdy, well-built frame, of merely average size, concealed such iron muscles, steady nerve and lion-like strength as that which his deeds of prowess evidence he possesses. More than that, he is an acrobat of such skill that daring feats which many actors in moving pictures are obliged to have performed by substitutes, Polo, is, himself, able to accomplish.

Every one of the many terrifying, death-defying performances with which the new serial teems, he enacts. It is his pride that in all his experience before the screen, no “double” has ever been called upon to take any risks for him. If that should ever become necessary it is doubtful if any “extra” could easily be found who would be able or willing to do the things which Eddie Polo, himself, devises, directs and enacts for the entertainment of those who are fond of thrills, circus stunts, heroism and moving pictures blended into clean, bright, entertaining and instructive plots.

He is an American and proud of it, but he was born in Italy and received his education in Vienna. He has toured every nook and corner of the globe and delighted millions of people. His eyes are large, brown and expressive. His hair is thick, black and curling, and his complexion dark. His weight is about 175 pounds and he is just five feet, eight and one-half inches in height. He prefers moving pictures to the stage or circus because it enables him to use his talents to better advantage. He enjoys character parts best, has a hobby for athletics, especially swimming, and has a record of swimming 325 feet under water, without coming to the surface. He always names Victor Hugo as his favorite author and declares that his circus and dramatic ability is inherited as well as cultivated, because his family were all professional people in those lines.

At various times he has been described as “The Hercules of the Films,” “The Screen Idol of Millions,” and “The Daredevil of the Screen.” It is his ambition to put the real history of his life into picture form, especially that portion dealing with his childhood and the almost tragic features which, of necessity, went with the training of children for such work as his, at a time when Gerry societies and other welfare organizations were unknown.

ing Dagger" Universal Serial

SERIAL STAR MUST RISK HIS LIFE

If You Want To Be A Serial Star You Must Reckon the Cost

EDDIE POLO is the man who, in rôle of an athletic young rancher tours the earth and risks his life, not only pictorially but actually, in some fifty-seven varieties of ways for the sake of the heroine of the production, pretty Thelma Percy, in the character of Elizabeth Latimer.

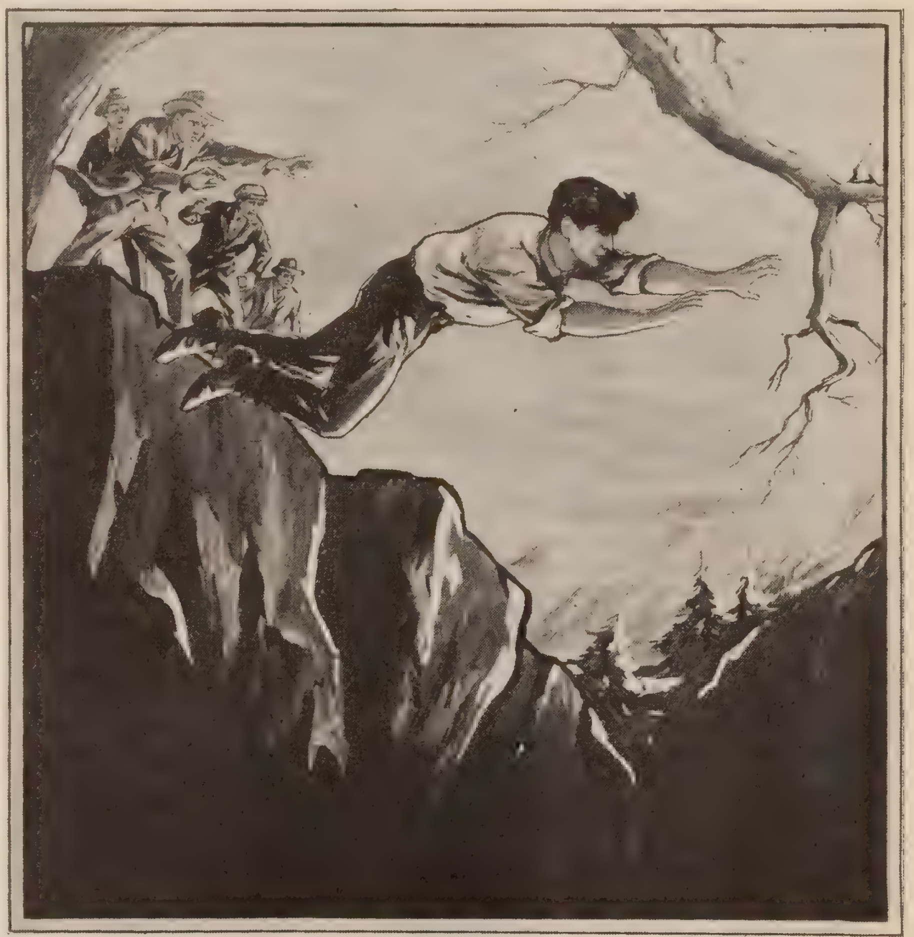
The Vanishing Dagger vanishes so many times and in such mysterious manner that it requires eighteen reels of thrills and breathless suspense before the hero is able to accomplish the object upon which he sets forth in the very first episode of the serial, now running every .... at the .... Theatre.

No less than sixteen principals are included in the cast, which is probably the most important company ever engaged for a serial production. The story is the combined work of Jacques Jaccard, Hope Loring and others well known in the picture realm. Eddie Polo, himself, directed the filming of the serial, with the assistance of Edward Kull. The scenes depicted include such a wide scope of panoramic views of many lands as to place this new Universal production in the front rank of educational films. The fact that a thrilling plot is used as a vehicle for instruction pleases the average young and even mature person who likes going to the moving picture theatre for diversion and who does not enjoy having dry "learning" forced upon him at the expense of his evening's recreation.

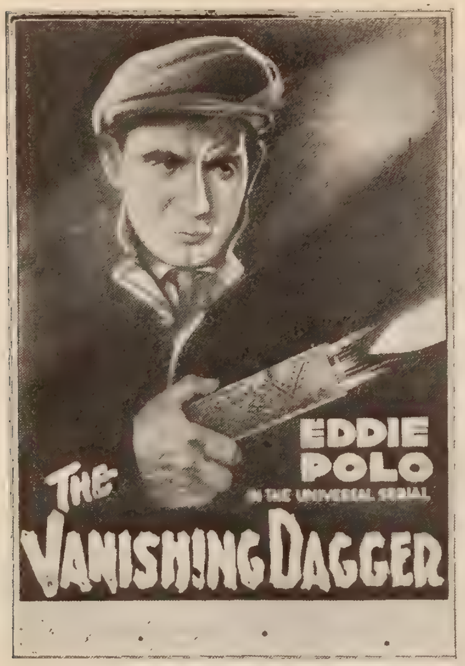
Every one of the many thrilling situations in "The Vanishing Dagger" is not only probable, possible, but actually experienced by the star and his supporting company. No double has ever been required to act for Eddie Polo. His long experience in circus work and his herculean strength enable him to perform every strenuous feat required. His record as a swimmer and deep sea diver also stand him in good stead.

In the filming of any important serial unexpected events are bound to occur. Sometimes they are serious. In "The Vanishing Dagger" several such near-catastrophes occurred once on the ledge of a high building and again when a sailor on board the U. S. S. Lapland cut a rope and unconsciously dropped the daring film star into mid-Atlantic. A tidal wave on the English coast furnishes the background for the first episode of the serial, an actual encounter with wild beasts is another, and a tour of the Orient is the basis for other realistic events. Every fight scene is an actuality and demonstrates Polo's ability as a boxer, acrobat, strong man and trapeze performer. It is a fine example of how a man, trained for the circus, can, under necessity, utilize his knowledge in a practical way in every day life.

The Illustrations on this page, the two pages preceding and the page following are the poster designs for "The Vanishing Dagger." The twenty-four sheet is unusual in that it shows three scenes from the Serial.



Six-sheet for "The Vanishing Dagger"



One-sheet and window card of "The Vanishing Dagger"

HOISTING 266 pounds of lightweight boxers above his head seems all in a day's work for Eddie Polo, Hercules of the screen, who is starring in the new Universal serial, "The Vanishing Dagger."

Recently Benny Leonard, present lightweight champion of the world, and Leach Cross, formerly one of the best 133 pound fighters in the ring, visited Polo at Universal City, where the film star is working on his new screen thriller.

During a prankish moment Eddy seized them both and lifted them above his head, to show the boxers that a picture favorite has to be as much of a he-man as a professional athlete.

The Universal actor performs similar feats of strength with the greatest ease. His strenuous career before the camera has kept him in the same superb physical condition that was necessary when he was traveling with Barnum and Bailey's circus as a featured and versatile athlete.

Polo and Leonard have had several friendly boxing bouts since the champion arrived in Southern California. The screen star has a big advantage, however, as he would be rated in the ring as a light-heavyweight, while Leonard defends his title at 133 pounds.

A Slim Blue-Eyed Villainess

THE Universal casting director shattered screen traditions when he engaged Ruth Royce for the rôle of the "bad woman" in Eddie Polo's current serial production, "The Vanishing Dagger." Feminine "heavies" in motion pictures have always been tall, dark and world-wise women. Miss Royce does not entirely answer this description. She is rather small and is able, on occasion, to assume an air of unsophistication characteristic of a Brookline debutante. And although her hair is dark, her complexion is fair and her eyes are blue.

But Miss Royce has one quality—she can act. An ingenue in stock companies in Kansas City and Denver, she learned the rudiments of the player's art, and she gave great promise in the half dozen photodramas in which she appeared since coming to California a little over a year ago. She played minor rôles in two Universal special productions, "The Great Air Robbery" and "The Beach Comber," and then directors began bidding for her services. At a masquerade ball given by the film players on Thanksgiving eve Miss Royce was attired in an Oriental costume and attracted the attention of Eddie Polo, who was looking for a player to take the part of the sinister Hindu girl in his forthcoming serial. She is now playing this rôle and making good.

Ruth Royce made her earthly début in the little town of Versailles, Missouri. She received her portion of knowledge at the Longfellow and Bancroft Schools, finishing off with several years at the Lorette Academy, Kansas City. Miss Royce showed dramatic talent while at school and had no difficulty securing an engagement with the Woodward Stock Company in Kansas City, becoming the ingenue of the organization the second season. She came to Los Angeles two years ago with the view of acting for the screen, and played with the American, Goldwyn, Brunton and Fox companies before coming to Universal City.

"The Vanishing Dagger" Means a Pearl Necklace to Thelma Percy

THE hours that Thelma Percy has spent at Universal City are as a string of pearls to her. That is, a beautiful string of pearls she has just bought represent many hours' work at Universal City, where Miss Percy is now appearing with Eddie Polo in that Universal star's thrilling new serial, "The Vanishing Dagger."

The beautiful rope of gems is one of the pretty actress' proudest possessions. She frequently counts them over every one apart to see that there are none missing. If they were to be stolen it would take a good deal to still her heart in absence wrung.

The thing that grieves her most is that she can't wear them in the picture. They would have to be strung on a steel cable to stand the wear and tear, for an Eddie Polo serial is full of action from start to finish.

To play in a picture with the Universal thrill artist, a person must have the durability of "Bat" Nelson, the former lightweight champion, who won his fights by hitting opponents on the glove with his jaw until they were exhausted; the agility of Jim Thorpe, the famous Indian athlete, who ran and jumped himself into fame at the last Olympic games in Stockholm, and the faculty of surviving death as many times as Theda Bara or "Pancho" Villa.

Miss Percy seems to thrive on the life, and there is never a stunt too dangerous or a day too strenuous. But she regrets that she can't wear her new pearls before the camera. Thelma Percy has been on the stage ever since she was four years old and has been appearing on the screen for almost a year. She is a sister of Eileen Percy, well known in Universal and other productions.

"Anti-gambling Section"

The more you book the less

IN one way, the small exhibitor has it all over his big competitor. The big house often has the idea that it has to play new stuff all the time—and, as a result, it sometimes picks a lemon But the little fellow hasn't got this mistaken idea. He knows, of course, that he has to show new pictures, but the new ones that he can show can be pictures that have been proven. Just so long as their costuming isn't out of date and his people haven't seen them, these proven pictures—no matter how old—are, to his audiences, just as good as new and, what's more to the point, they're sure of making a profit for him. While the small exhibitor knows all this he doesn't act on it often enough—and neither does the big exhibitor—which is exactly the reason why Universal offers you this Special Anti-gambling Section—the more you book, the less you pay.

LOOK at the portraits of these eighteen national stars and you'll see at least a dozen from whose recent releases you can pick two or three times that number of crackajack pictures to repeat or to show for the first time, even though some of them are a year old. These stars are all young—all still coming—all well advertised. You can't go wrong on any of them—and as far as the stories are concerned, you have our assurance that we have culled out and dropped out every picture that has not a huge package of exhibitor testimonials behind it. For this summer season we offer you only the cream of the last two winters—and, in spite of the fact that "cream" is on the rise—the more you book, the less you pay.

Dorothy

Directed by Rollin Sturgeon

A BIG and very successful picture which tells the story of a simple family whose members chose their own roads, or thought they chose them, to success. Dramatic, splendidly staged and directed and one of the best things Dorothy Phillips ever did. A very wholesome picture that appeals to everyone. That fine actor, William Stowell, has a big part in this most satisfying play. You can not go wrong on "Destiny."

"PAID IN ADVANCE"

Directed by Allen Holubar

UNDOUBTEDLY, the finest picture of Alaska and its riotous gold camps that has ever been made. Wondrous in its winter scenes and the surging life of the gold-crazed men and women who even today struggle against Nature and their own mad passions in these same surroundings. This picture was a tremendous success at The Capitol, New York's greatest theatre. It's virtually impossible for this picture ever to look old—and its story will be forever new.

Every One a Proven Universal-Jewe

Phillips

"THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS"

Directed by Allen Holubar

THE marvelous Labor-and-Capital drama which ran for many weeks at the Park Theatre, New York, and in which Dorothy Phillips plays a dual role which, for sheer ability, has seldom been equalled. A great big, clean, absorbing, dramatic production which holds every soul in its audience to the very last moment. The kind of picture that will play in every part of the civilized and uncivilized world and be thoroly understood, appreciated and popular.

"PAY ME"

Directed by Joseph De Grasse

WESTERN dramas may come and go but good old "Pay Me" still stands at the top of the list as the one great, big, whirling, blazing triumph of human passions amid the wild surroundings of the Sierras. A story of revenge that has never had an equal for the way it grips the viewer's heart and mind. Altho released three years ago "Pay Me" is absolutely sure to clean up in your town wherever you are and whatever your audience.

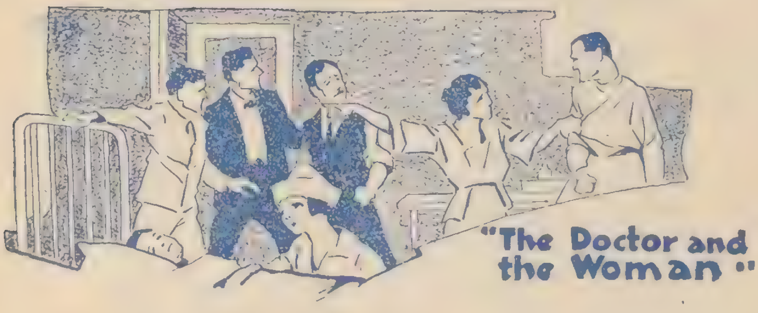
"The Price of a Good Time



"The Doctor and the Woman"

"For Husbands Only"

THE picture that will never grow old. The drama in which an unknown young actress became, overnight, one of the stars of the screen. A story which people never get tired of seeing because it has here been told by Lois Weber and Mildred Harris with an artistry which few pictures—even so-called masterpieces—have ever equalled.

MADE from the famous novel "K" by Mary Roberts Rinehart, which was one of the most widely read romances ever published, "THE DOCTOR AND THE WOMAN" is a straight-heart-appeal picture of the most wholesome type. And it bears the impress of Lois Weber in every foot of its admirable detail, and the talent of the Flower of the Screen.

AS tantalizing as a wink—a "society" picture in which the gentlemen will never be mistaken for the waiters just because they wear dress suits. A picture with a gasp at the end—and then a great big wholesome laugh of relief—all, after seeing the handsomest interiors and some of the best acting of many years. Mildred Harris supported by Lew Cody.

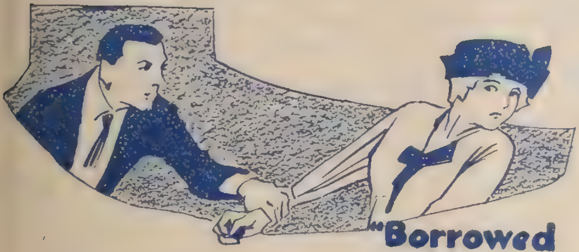
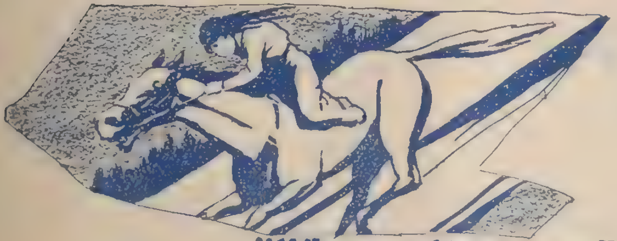
the Belasco of the Screen



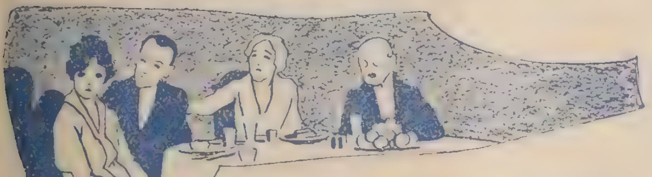
"Borrowed Clothes"

A STORY somewhat like "THE PRICE OF A GOOD TIME" but a picture with a flavor all its own—in which Mildred Harris and Lew Cody give you a slice of life involving an innocent little person's passion for clothes complicated by other passions not quite so innocent, all done with that wondrous restraint of which Lois Weber is complete master.



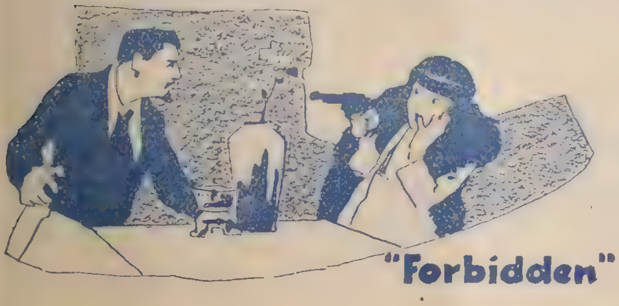
"When a Girl Loves"

A DIFFERENT kind of a Western—a Lois Weber Western—in which Mildred Harris does everything that nobody ever expected her to do and does it superlatively well. And you get in this whirling drama the best fight ever staged between two men. We'll let that bet go "as it lays."



"Home"

A PICTURE for every girl about to be married and most of those who are married. Designed throughout by Lois Weber—who knows more about what women like in a screen drama than any other woman director you can name. That's why she put a real husband in the story.



"Forbidden"

A BRILLIANT drama that swings from small-town to big city and carries a young person into affluence, only to discover that she isn't satisfied at all—but must go out adventuring—so she promptly has—some adventure! And comes meekly home to hubby—and a big surprise. Another Lois Weber-Mildred Harris triumph.

Buck Ravelle	Art Acord
Anna	Mildred Moore
Baldwin	Charles Newton
Egbert	George Field
Warpee	Tote Du Crow
Rosa	Beatrice Dominguez

BUCK RAVELLE is made prisoner and left hanging to a rope attached to a freight elevator in an old warehouse. Egbert and his men leave, having started the elevator down. Buck is drawn slowly into the air. Regaining consciousness, he manages to free himself, and reaches the window of the warehouse in time to see Egbert escaping. Buck follows. At the Baldwin ranch, Anna's father is in danger of being lynched by the infuriated ranchers, who are stirred to action by insinuations against Baldwin by one of Egbert's secret agents. Anna returns with the Sheriff in time to save her father. In the city, Buck overtakes Egbert's car, and Egbert, to escape discovery, leaps from the car to a street car. His men leave the car and wait in ambush in an alley for Buck, who is following them. In the fight in the alley, Buck is the victor, and regains the money from Egbert's men. Egbert and his paramour, Rosa, reach the station in time to catch the last train for the east. Buck misses the train, and knowing the importance of reaching the ranch with the money in time to take up the option from Warpee, hires a gasoline speeder on which he leaves in an endeavor to overtake the train on which Egbert and Rosa are traveling.

At the ranch, Baldwin tells the men that Buck should arrive at any moment with the money. Still dissatisfied, the men rather unwilling to trust him, until Baldwin tells them he is willing to submit to arrest and be held by the sheriff as hostage until Buck arrives. This they agree to do. Baldwin gives the option papers to Anna, telling her to go to Warpee's cabin, get Warpee, and meet Buck and close the deal. Anna leaves for the cabin, not knowing that she is followed by Marston, a moon rider secretely working among the ranchers. Baldwin is placed in jail. Egbert's men recover and follow Buck to the station, where Buck is seen to leave on the gasoline car. They wire Egbert on the train, telling him that Buck is trying to overtake the train. Egbert leaves the train at a small station near a river. The ranchers decide that in order to be safe, they should have the option which Baldwin holds, and he is asked for it. He tells them that he hasn't the papers, having given them to Anna. This the ranchers will not believe, and storm the jail where Baldwin is held. Anna reaches the cabin, followed by Marston, who now dons the disguise of a moon rider.

The ranchers, in an effort to overcome the Sheriff and obtain the papers from Baldwin, set fire to the jail. As the flames gain headway, the Sheriff tries to free Baldwin, but a falling timber prevents him, and Baldwin is left to the mercy of the flames. At Warpee's cabin, Anna is attacked by the moon rider, as Warpee has left the cabin in an endeavor to see Egbert. Egbert, after leaving the train, goes to the drawbridge spanning the river. As Buck approaches the bridge, Egbert raises the bridge, having knocked out the operator, and Buck, unable to stop, reaches the bridge, and clinging to the car, speeds over the uplifted end of the bridge and topples with the car to the water below.

"The Scarlet Confession"

CAST

John Grant	Eddie Polo
Sir George Latimer	C. Norman Hammond
Lady Mary Latimer	Laura Oakley
Elizabeth Latimer	Thelma Percy
Prince Narr	Ray Ripley
Sir Richard Upton	Arthur Jervis

JOHN GRANT, a wealthy young American, Prince Narr of Numidia, and Sir Richard Upton, are being entertained by Sir Geo. Latimer, his wife and daughter Beth at their home on the south coast of England. Narr is jealous of Grant, whose suit for Beth appears to be making progress, whereas he, Narr, has been rejected.

Narr is possessed of hypnotic powers, and he uses these in his trial to gain Beth. He has his men kill Upton as he is about to depart, then hypnotizes Latimer, and convinces him that he killed Upton with the jewelled dagger which he, Narr, had placed in his hand. He promises secrecy if Latimer will consent to his marriage with Beth. Latimer begs for time to consider.

Beth enters, after a walk with Grant, during which they had become engaged, and Narr invites her to join them in a good-night drink, whereupon he puts "dope" in her glass. She loses consciousness and Narr compels Latimer by hypnotic influence to write with a strange liquid the following confession across Beth's forehead: "I killed Sir Richard Upton—(signed) Sir Geo. Latimer." This writing fades at once, but Narr says it will reappear in six months, to be removed only by a liquid carried in a small vial in the hilt of the jewelled dagger. Narr departs, saying he will return in six months to claim his bride.

Grant gets in a fight with Narr's henchman in the interim, killing two, and is starting toward the house, when he sees the now frenzied Latimer hurling himself over the cliffs into the sea. Grant makes a spectacular dive after him, and is engulfed helpless in the great surging waves at the foot of the cliff.

"Three Pairs of Stockings"

(Star Comedy)

Featuring Harry Keaton.

CAST

Smith	Harry Keaton
His Wife	Ida Tenbrook
The Burglar	Ralph McComas

SMITH was a frisky fellow who was "hitched" for fair. He and friend wife didn't get along remarkably well and one day when three show girls from the nearby burlesque came into Smith's store and he measured them for stockings, Ida plainly showed her rage. The girls didn't pay for the stockings but promised to make good for them if Smith would come around to the theatre so Smith began wrapping them up, preparatory to following the "queens" over there. Friend Wife was irate, however, and locked poor hubby up.

In the meantime, Ralph the terrible terror enters to rob the place and in the mix-up that follows Smith gets away leaving Ida to face the burglar gun in hand. She corners him and phones for the "cops."

Smith is having a lovely time at the theatre. The three girls kiss him for his kindness and in the excitement Smith exits for home leaving his hat behind, and bearing the imprint of three pair of lips on his face.

He gets home to find friend wife still facing the burglar and when she views his tell-tale face, fury ensues. And to make matters worse, one of the queens, in a real queen rig-out, rushes in with the hat.

The "cops" appear on the scene, and irate Ida hands over Smith, leaving Ralph to a clean getaway, with merchandise and all. Smith is landed in jail, where sobbingly he beats his head against the bars. Ida is, in the meantime, beginning to relent and comes to the jail to get Smith out, but when she begins to quarrel with poor hubby again, and slaps him in her old vigorous manner. Smith turns on his heel, enters his cell again, and decides to bide awhile there in peace.

Sir George Latimer	C. Norman Hammond

Sir Richard Upton	Arthur Jervis
King Claypool	Thomas Lingham
Nell	Peggy ODare

IT is only after a terrific battle with the waves at the foot of the cliffs overlooking the English Channel that Grant succeeds in rescuing Latimer and carries him unconscious back to the Latimer home. His arrival arouses the household, including Beth, who had regained consciousness and retired.

Meanwhile Narr, afraid that Latimer may reveal he has been the victim of hypnotic influence, decides to leave immediately. He phones Sonia, his native wife in London, to have their servants pack up, as they will depart for Numidia next morning.

King Claypool and his partner, Nell, a pair of international crooks, determined to gain possession of the Narr jewels, and particularly the jeweled dagger, have planted a confederate in Narr's London house. Learning he is about to return, they arrange to rob Narr's London house that night.

Meantime Latimer, aided by a physician, recovers consciousness, and asks to be left alone with Beth and Grant. He tells them all that has happened, stating he doesn't really know whether he killed Upton or not, but feels sure he is innocent, and narrating how Narr forced him to write the confession on Beth's forehead as a guarantee that he would see that she married Narr. Standing outside the windows, Narr and his servant overhear Latimer's story. Narr hurls a knife through the window, but it misses Grant. Narr and his man then race for their waiting car on the driveway, pursued by Grant, whom they knock down. They speed off in their car and Grant, getting a motorcycle from the Latimer garage, gives chase. Latimer has requested one of his guests, Captain Carter, to take a car and follow Grant in order to help him. Beth changes to a riding habit and starts for the stables to get a horse. Grant overtakes Narr's car and leaps to the top of it. With his foot caught under the railing on top of the limousine, Grant hangs down at the side and succeeds in throwing both Narr and his hireling from the car. The driver jumps to the road. The car speeds ahead without control, crashing into another car in which the driver had been half asleep. There is an explosion and Grant is buried beneath the flaming wreckage.

The Saucy Smile that spells Comedienne

IT'S the way this delightful little star has of stepping right down from the screen into the midst of your audience that adds fifty percent to the solid enjoyment your patrons get out of an Edith Roberts picture. It's the happy knack she has of putting her roguishly captivating personality across that lands her right into the hearts of the people. As the delicious little romp in "Her Five-Foot Highness" you'll find her a positive delight; as the little calico girl with a georgette appetite in "The Triflers" you'll say with the Motion Picture World, "She's simply top-notch," while she'll prove to you she's just as convincing when it comes to portraying pathos or tragedy—the gripping, compelling kind you get in that most beautiful of pictures, "Lasca." Here's a trio of triumphs you need in your business—and a star it will pay you to play.

EDITH ROBERTS

TO ALL EXHIBITORS

assembled in Convention at Cleveland

It is the sincere hope of The Moving Picture Weekly that out of this present convention of exhibitors in Cleveland will come a new sense of exhibitor unity, a courageaus and jealous regard for their own legitimate place in the Industry and a sincere conviction that exhibitors should confine themselves to their own branch of the industry just as producers should confine themselves to theirs.

"TIME TO DEMAND SHOW-DOWN"

Says Carl Laemmle

UNIVERSAL PRESIDENT SAYS THAT UNLESS INDEPENDENT EXHIBITORS MAKE PRODUCERS LAY THEIR CARDS ON THE TABLE, THE CONVENTION WILL BE A HARMLESS, USELESS AFFAIR; IF THEY DO, HE PREDICTS A WHOLESOME AND PROGRESSIVE RE-ADJUSTMENT OF THE FILM INDUSTRY.

"WHEN will the independent exhibitor wake up to the fact that the flowery phrases and promissory pap being fed him by certain producers is bunk—and nothing but bunk?" This question was asked by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, during an interview last Saturday afternoon, on the eve of his departure for Cleveland and a few days before the big show at Cleveland began.

His question was put to the interviewer, who wanted to know what Mr. Laemmle thought of certain statements which have apppeared in the trade journals. Continuing, the Universal head said:

"There has been much polishing up of golden harps and haloes lately by certain groups of producers. Hymns of happiness and producer-exhibitor harmony have been directed at Cleveland from all sides. Where does all this buncombe get the exhibitor? How long is he going to turn a delighted ear to gilded promises, and close his eyes to the chance of demanding sane and substantial business agreements?

"The time is ripe for the independent exhibitors to make the producers lay their cards on the table. If the exhibitor takes this opportunity of demanding a show-down, of demanding facts and figures instead of vague promises, I predict the most wholesome and progressive readjustment the film industry has ever known.

"Various producers have been coming out with voluminous and wordy statements in the last few weeks of what they have done and of what they are doing for the independent exhibitor. It is not what they have done that counts so much, although a great deal of their activities in the past have been no more tangible or concrete accomplishments in behalf of the exhibitor than mere words.

"What really amounts to anything from the exhibitor's point of view is—what will they do in the future to help the independent exhibitor? Why don't they come out flat-footed and say what they will do to help the exhibitor?

"Universal is not ashamed to say what it has done for the exhibitor in the past. Neither am I afraid of putting myself on record as to what Universal means to do for the exhibitor in the future. I have said it before, and I will repeat it. Universal, among other things, stands ready to give financial support to the independent exhibitor in his fight to tear from his throat the fingers of monopoly that seek to throttle him.

"It makes me laugh to read some of the statements in

Independent Exhibitors; Where Remarkable Editorial appearing in the Motion Picture Journal, the official organ of the Texas Exhibitors Circuit, and a trade paper covering the states of Arkansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Texas

FOR more than five years there has been a steady encroachment by entrenched interests upon the preserves of the independent exhibitors of America.

Such encroachment is not peculiar to the Southland, but has found expression in the overpowering chains of theatres that have grown up in all of the major regions. Such chains of theatres are the first point of entrance of monopolistic effort since they afford at once the key to regional distribution and provide a powerful means of barter for further closing the market.

As these chains become strong and as they pass into the control of powerful predatory interests, the whole industry suffers—producers, distributors, and exhibitors alike, which brings us to our major premise: The Independent Exhibitor's Moral Obligation. We comprehend in this title the sound business proposition that it is immoral for a man so to act as to bring troubles upon himself and his kind, and that it is moral for him to use that degree of individual judgment which will best conserve his independence.

The above principles can find application in a practical way by placing one's trade thru channels which are historically co-operative and non-competitive, and which hold a promise of continuing that status for the future. Among the many distributing and producing companies which offer this protection to the exhibitor, we do not know of any one company more meriting of exhibitor consideration than the Universal Company.

For the information of that great flood of new exhibitors who are not fully cognizant of the developments of this industry, and to refresh the memory of the old-timers, it is in order to recapitulate part of the record.

At one time there was a greater monopoly actually in control of the business than the monopoly which now menaces it.

Motion Picture Patents Company was an organization which claimed control over all pictures to be projected thru its patents on projection machines, which machines were subject to a license for use, and such use was attempted to be withheld from exhibitors using films other than from the General Film Co.

It was Carl Laemmle and the Universal Company (independent distributors) who fought this condition by manufacturing better films and by fighting the matter during many years thru expensive and laborious court action, ultimately winning and thus opening up the whole field of motion pictures to the development that makes possible the present multitude of exhibitors. There is here another form of moral obligation resting upon exhibitors—the obligation of appreciation and reciprocation.

HERE is truly a great picture, in which there is just enough of the strange exotic beauty of Japan and just enough of the pathos and drama of a little cherryblossom's love for a European to give American audiences a delightful dramatic treat and pleasant memories that will linger in their minds for years.

PLAYED by TSURU AOKI with the rarest intelligence, "THE BREATH OF THE GODS" is one of those infrequent pictures which advertises itself by word-of-mouth—a "go-to-day-don't-miss-it" production. Give this picture more than your ordinary run—it will more than repay you in money and appreciations.

THE STORY

DR. JOHN NIBLOCK, wandering through Japan in an effort to forget an unhappy love affair, meets little Asuti, mischievous daughter of the noble Hishura, whom he rescues from the path of a runaway horse. Asuti flirtatiously gives him her fan and drives on.

Learning that Asuti is to be married that evening, Niblock thinks it would be interesting to watch a Japanese wedding. He calls at the house, ostensibly to return the valuable fan. He is invited to the ceremony and is is surprised to learn that Asuti is averse to the bridgroom, who is fat and ugly. Niblock is powerless to help her. She feigns a faint just before the sacred saki passes her lips. A native physician fails to revive her and she furtively winks at the American, to apprise him of the trick.

Encouraged by his protection, Asuti disguises herself as a gardener's boy and makes a clever escape from her father's house. She persuades Niblock to take her to America. To do so it is necessary for him to make her his wife in name.

In America Niblock takes up the threads of his former existence. He looks upon Asuti in the light of a guardian. Asuti flirts with Ito, a young Japanese student who is studying under Dr. Niblock and who acts as his assistant. Ito explains to her that his devotion to the doctor prevents him from returning her advances. He also convinces her that her husband loves her and that her marriage is binding.

Meanwhile, Dr. Niblock's former sweetheart discovers that she really loves the man she discarded. Her heart is broken when she learns that he has brought back a Japanese wife.

Asuti comes upon her husband one day sighing over the photograph of his ex-fiancee. The little Japanese goes direct to the girl, and explains. She proposes a scheme. As a result the doctor claims the girl he has never ceased to love and Asuti becomes free to marry Ito.

ADVERTISING DISPLAY LINES

Tsuru Aoki, the Japanese Bernhardt, is the star of "A Tokio Siren."

Another little Madame Butterfly whose American husband loves someone else, is Tsuru Aoki in "A Tokio Siren." But this play doesn't end in a tragedy.

Returning with a Japanese bride from the Orient where he had gone to forget a shattered romance, he finds the American girl still loves him. One heart must be broken it seems, in "A Tokio Siren."

Tsuru Aoki in "A Tokio Siren" is not exactly a "Picture Bride," but as a bride she certainly makes a beautiful picture. No wonder the Japanese send home for 'em.

She had the heart of a child, the instincts of a coquette and the face of an Oriental Cherub—Tsuru Aoki in "A Tokio Siren."

How To Put Over "A Tokio Siren"

To The Exhibitor: The suggestions on this page are presented with the idea of supplying the Exhibitor with a few novel ideas in the exploitation of "A Tokio Siren." Efficient exploitation is the surest way of catching the public's eye, of arousing the public's curiosity and of drawing the public into your theatre.

Who Is the Bride?

That would be the question everyone would ask if they saw an automobile, closely curtained, but festooned on the outside with white ribbons, flowers and old shoes, pass swiftly through the street bearing a large, lettered placard, while every few seconds a white-gloved woman's hand and arm was extended from between the curtains and scattered dodgers along the thoroughfare. They would stare after the automobile to read the placard:

Exploitation Suggestions

Japanese gardeners' hats, rice, flowers, parasols, lanterns, tea and curios can all be utilized in the exploitation of "A Tokio Siren."

In the story, the little bride-elect disguises herself as a gardener's boy and runs away.

At the wedding feast there is much serving of tea and rice. The guests all remove their shoes before entering the house and the kimona-clad orchestra sits on cushions on the floor.

There is a busy street scene in which lanterns, parasols and gay kimonas predominate.

From these facts it may be possible to work out ideas for theatre decoration, window display and local advertising, according to circumstances and opportunities.

Lawn Social

Some charitable or patriotic object might be furthered and the exhibitor's popularity increased by staging a Japanese lawn fete at or as near the theatre as possible and offering prizes in the way of free admission to the prettiest girl, to the wearer of the best Japanese costume, to the handsomest man and to the boy or girl who secures the greatest number of tea and rice orders for the grocer and tea merchant with whom the tie-up is made.

Window Display

Tea, hot or cold, with cream, sugar or lemon, set forth daintily with flowers and Japanese china would invite attention to a store window. If a pretty girl in Japanese attire served samples of tea in tiny cups to those who entered and handled to each a little announcement of the photoplay, it would add to the effectiveness of the display.

Advance Publicity

Interest in Japan might be stimulated if a popular speaker were prevailed upon to give a talk, sermon or lecture at some local gathering, dealing with Japan, its people, customs, art, religion, education, commerce or scenic beauty.

The exhibitor might even offer a prize for the best essay, or composition on the subject, the judges to be a local editor and school teacher, and the winners to be announced on the last night of the showing of the picture. This would be an inducement for most of the contestants to view the picture on the opening night in order to be accurate in their descriptions. (In one of the scenes a real "Shintu" priest officiates at a marriage. This fact should be well advertised because of its correctness of detail.) They would, of course, be present again on the closing night.

Theatre and Lobby

Anything that will suggest the Orient can be used to advantage in the way of decoration. Japanese lanterns are always effective. Fans, distributed by attractive little girls in Japanese kimonas, would give a pleasing touch of atmosphere.

Summer Sandals

A sale of sandals advertised in a store window as "the kind that Tsuru Aoki wears in "A Tokio Siren" would be a novelty. The gardener's hat in which she disguises herself when she runs away from her own wedding has already been pictured in a New York paper as a forecast of summer styles in sun hats.

Two New Jewels Announced

UNIVERSAL has a two-Jeweled solution of the hot-weather problem that will soon be upon us. Of course, it really is not any different in the summer for the great majority of exhibitors than it is in the winter; they only think it is different. The summer complaint is only a mental disease. But even admitting that many exhibitors have hypnotized themselves into a bad case of it, the Universal has the antidote in the shape of two bright new Jewels.

They are Elmo Lincoln in "Under Crimson Skies" and Tsuru Aoki in "The Breath of the Gods."

"Under Crimson Skies" is from the pen of J. G. Hawks, one of the foremost screen writers. In the multi-colored Central American story, Hawks has woven all of the romance, love and adventure, life on the high seas and political intrigue of which he is capable. "It is an ideal story of the picturesque turmoil that periodically upset our Southern neighboring republics," is the way brother authors have characterized the story. Compounded of a virile mixture of Jack London, Rex Beach, Richard Harding Davis and Robert Louis Stevenson, Hawks' latest screen story is based on the adventures of a hard-fisted but upright sea captain who is tricked into taking a cargo of contraband rifles to a Central American port, under the assumption that he is carrying pianos. His ire at discovering the trick, the mutiny that follows, the exciting events precipitated by the surreptitious landing of the rifles into the hands of the revolutionists form high lights in the spirited plot.

The star is Elmo Lincoln, the strong man of a series of Universal serials, including "Elmo the Mighty" and "Elmo the Fearless." Lincoln also will be remembered as the huge half-savage in "Tarzan of the Apes," the original Tarzan picture.

An exceptionally strong cast was assembled to support Lincoln in "Under Crimson Skies." Harry Van Meter plays the part of the treacherous gun-runner. Mabel Ballin of his wife. Their little daughter is played by Nancy Caswell, a child actress of exceptional beauty and talent. Paul Weigle, Frank Brownlee, Noble Johnson as the burly chief of the beach combers, Beatrice Dominquez as the langorous "favorite," and Dick La Reno as second mate of the vessel, all have surpassed their previous screen portrayals. "Under Crimson Skies" is in six reels. It was directed by Rex Ingram, the scenario being written by Harvey Thew.

"THE BREATH OF THE GODS," the other Jewel photodrama released during the month of July, stars Tsuru Aoki, the Japanese Bernhardt of the screen. The story was originally written as a novel by Sydney McCall and was filmed by Universal-Jewel under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon.

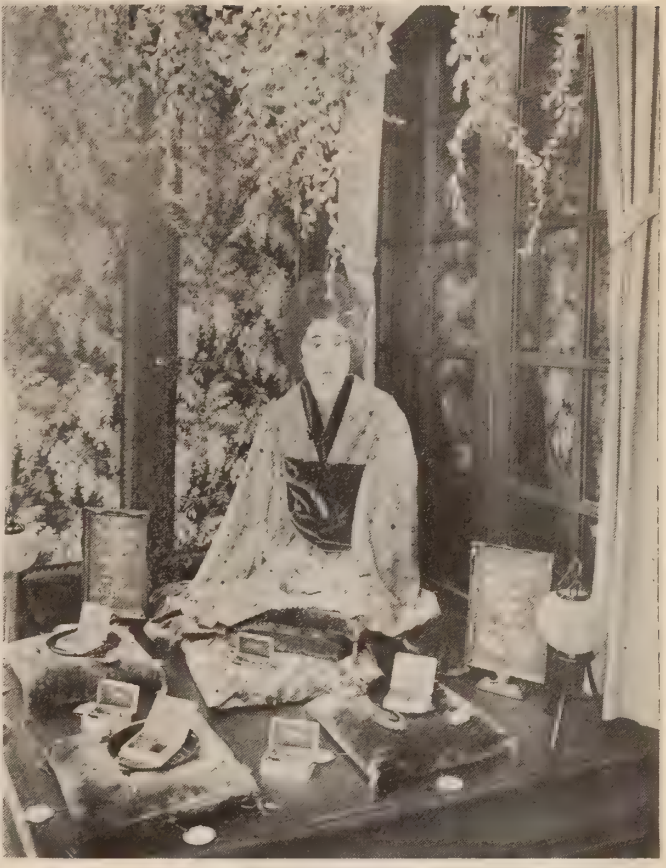
Among the players supporting the star is Misao Seki, a Japanese character player, who depicts the rôle of the star's aged father. Seki was born near Yokohama, the son of a merchant and a Japanese actress. Tsuru Aoki's remarkable dramatic work is given emphasis by the appearance of other widely known players. The supporting cast is comprised of J. Barney Sherry, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Arthur Carewe, Marion Skinner, Ethel Shannon, Mai Wells and Paul Weigel.

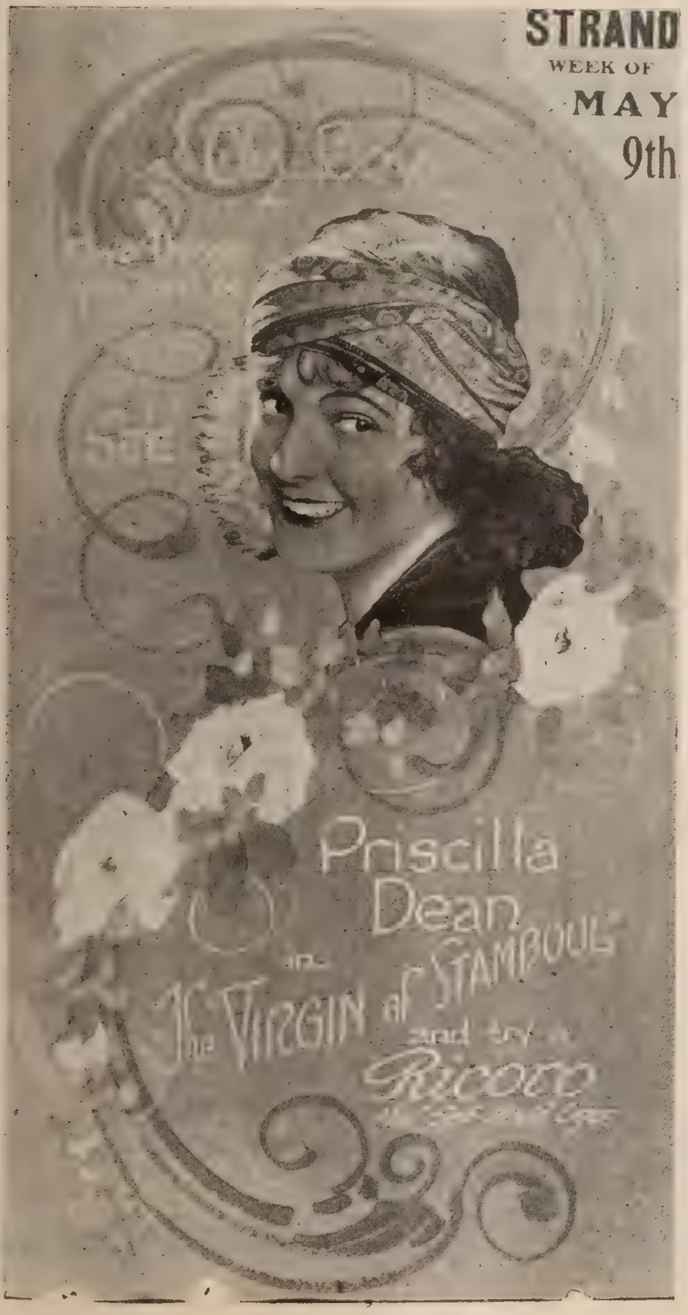
Intimate glimpses of the social whirl of Washington's diplomatic set, colorful studies of Japanese life and the appealing presence of Miss Aoki, make "The Breath of the Gods" a remarkable offering even among Jewels.

SEVERAL weeks ago the Moving Picture Weekly announced that the Massachusetts Censorship bill had been killed in committee. That was because we did not know the devious forces that were at work in Boston and in the legislature. In spite of the alarming condition which the Boston newspapers disclosed and the manifest defects in the bill itself and the violent opposition to it, the bill was passed by both branches of the legislature. But Governor Coolidge was not swayed by the considerations that prompted the legislature to pass the bill. He vetoed it. So it is dead. The hardest censorship fight of the year is won. Our announcement was slightly premature, but it must be regarded in the light of a prophesy.

TWO UNIVERSAL TIE-UPS

THE Tie-Up is the latest and most interesting development of the publicity game as it relates to the moving-picture publicity agent. Sometimes a national tie-up can be arranged by the publicity office of the producing company, but the more effective tie-ups are arranged by the exchange publicity man and the theatre publicity man. This page contains two examples of tie-ups arranged by Ben Westland, publicity manager for the San Francisco Universal Exchange. One of them was with "Locked Lips" during the run of that Tsuru Aoki picture at the Frolic Theatre in San Francisco. This was for one individual store, but was for a two weeks showing on one of the busiest blocks in the Golden Gate City. The other was wider in its scope and embraced nineteen different cities, tying up the United Cigar Stores' display windows with the "Virgin of Stamboul" production, which was playing in a great many theatres in the nineteen different cities.





ABOVE

Tie-up arranged by Mr. Westland, with the Gillette Safety Razor Company, on "Locked Lips," during the run of that picture at the Frolic Theatre in San Francisco. A whole window in the Gillette store was used for this display one week previous to the showing of the picture and the week of the run, giving the picture two weeks advertising in the busiest block on Market Street.

AT LEFT

Card displayed in United Cigar Stores in nineteen Western cities. In San Francisco two cards were displayed in each of the twenty-six stores during the run of "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the Strand Theatre. One card was placed in the window and one inside the store. This is the biggest tie-up ever put on in the West.

"Virgin of Stamboul" Tie-Ups

MADE RECRUITING APPEAL

Manager of Strand of Cleveland, O., tied up his campaign with appeal for Army and Navy.

THE theatre manager who seizes upon some angle of the pictures he plays that can be exploited along local lines, is the exhibitor that gets the best results from his exploitation efforts. When the manager of the Strand Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, booked "The Virgin of Stamboul" recently, he realized that the oriental, foreign atmosphere of the picture was his best bet for exploitation.

Then he remembered the well known Army and Navy posters with their inviting captions "See the World!" He decided that "The Virgin of Stamboul" would give prospective seamen and soldiers what they might expect to see on a world tour. Therefore he arranged a tie-up with the local U. S. Naval recruiting service.

He was assisted by Captain Stanley H. Lewis of Post 92, Veteran of Foreign Wars of the United States, author, and special volunteer recruiter for the Navy. Captain Lewis superintended the distribution of thousands of recruiting cards announcing the production of "The Virgin of Stamboul" and tying up with the Navy by the following captions:

"If you think you possess the requisites of courage, physique, resourcefulness, coolness in the hour of danger, as exemplified by 'Captain Pemberton' in this production, you are of the caliber required in the United States Navy.

"If the United States assumes the mandatory over Armenia, it means that American battleships will be sent to Turkey to protect the unfortunate Armenians from further massacres by the Turks. Don't you want to go? Think it over.

"Do you wish to meet and talk with the strange folk of foreign lands? To hear the call of the muezzin at dusk from the minaret of the mosque? The temple bells of Mandalay —the soft surges washing the tropic beach—the lure of far lands and of spicy isles of the sea—the tang of the salt spray as the spindrift sprinkles the fo'c'soe—and the jolly, roistering liberty parties where Jack, ashore, exchanges gay repartee in 'pidgin' English with the silk-clad, turbaned, bearded merchants, or the laughing-eyed girls of the mysterious Orient—it's a Man's life, 'round the world and back again! "The Virgin of Stamboul" will show you a few of the wondrous sights you will see as a member of Uncle Sam's Navy."

3,750 WORDS FROM TITLE

Des Moines Evening Tribune conducts novel contest for Rialto Theatre on "Stamboul."

AN unusual amount of publicity and a keen interest on the part of every school child in Des Moines, was obtained in that city recently in connection with the showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the Rialto Theatre.

A prize contest was announced in which the school children sending in the longest list of words made from the letters in "The Virgin of Stamboul," were promised cash and other prizes, including season passes to the theatre.

The contest was arranged through the Des Moines Evening Tribune, which gave it much attention, carrying daily stories of the progress of the contest.

The winner, Mary Matosoff, 10 years old, turned in a list of 3,750 words arranged from the letters in the four words of the Priscilla Dean picture's title. An 11 year old boy won second prize with 3,371 words.

As a result of the novel exploitation scheme, the picture played to filled houses during its entire run at the Rialto.

MATHEMATICAL CONTEST

FOR the first time during his career as a theatre manager, J. C. Duncan of the Plaza Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, broke into the front pages of the Sioux City newspapers recently when he started a Priscilla Dean Mathematical Contest, to exploit "The Virgin of Stamboul."

Duncan arranged several knotty problems for the school children and arranged with the Sioux City Tribune for a notice. Cash and other prizes, including season passes to the Plaza, were offered for correct and neat solutions. So much interest was aroused in the contest that the Tribune carried first page stories about it.

OLD HOME WEEK FOR VAN LOAN

ALL this bunk about a prophet not being honored in his home country went flooey recently in Hudson, N. Y., which used to boast that it was the home of Evans Ale, but which now points with pride to the house where H. H. Van Loan, noted screen author, first saw the light. Star, director, producer et al, took a back seat when A. A. Elliott, manager of the Playhouse, Hudson, booked Van Loan's latest picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul," the big oriental photoplay starring Priscilla Dean. He paid more for it than anything he ever booked before, too. In folders, ads and publicity, Elliott featured the author, and he got the money.

Van Loan, in a personal letter to Elliott, sent his greetings to his fellow Hudsonians. It was published in the paper, (why not? Van's brother owns the paper, and Van started as a printers devil). To cap the climax, the author was induced to run up to Hudson from New York City, and make a personal appearance at the showing of the picture. It was like old home week in Hudson, with the Playhouse the center of interest. Van Loan met a lot of the fellows he used to "lick" in school. For three days he posed as a matinee idol and strange to say he came back to the Astor wearing the same hat, which was fortunate for him because he found friend wife and baby there from Los Angeles.

During its three days in Hudson, "The Virgin of Stamboul" almost eclipsed the political campaign and other standard subjects of interest. Many columns of copy concerning Van Loan and the picture appeared in the local papers.

THERE'S a "difference" about the finished work of Lyons and Moran and the way in which, as one exhibitor puts it, "they rock their audiences with joy," as you have profitable opportunity to prove by playing these two in-a-class-by-themselves funmakers in the eight new comedy-dramas they give you in "The Great Forty-Eight." Don't miss the first of these. It's "La La Lucile" from the sparkling operetta of the same name with all the "ginger" of the original there and a liberal addition of native Lyons-and-Moran artistry to take the place of the music—and don't forget, it's directed by THEMSELVES.

Clean-cut, masculine leading men are none too plenty—that's why Frank Mayo made an instant hit when he let out with his right in "The Brute Breaker" and when he supported Mary MacLaren in "The Amazing Wife" and starred in "A Little Brother of the Rich." As we've said before—a new star means new money. Show Frank Mayo—and get it.

"The Red Lane"

Directed by Lynn Reynolds. From the story by Holman Day.

IN this big drama of the smugglers of the Canada Border, Lynn Reynolds has given you another "Brute Breaker." Again virile FRANK MAYO has a rousing part as the man on the side of right who fights for it, tooth and nail and every soul in your audience will be with him every minute. You'll remember what "The Brute Breaker" did and "The Red Lane" will do even better—for Frank Mayo is just your patron's kind of leading man.

THE scenery of "The Red Lane" is a delight to the eye—great mountain vistas, quaint French-Canadian villages, odd types of people and through it all the inspiring atmosphere of the Big Outdoors with which Lynn Reynolds fills his red-blooded productions. It's a great love story, too, "The Red Lane"—the women will all sympathize with little Evangeline, whom the clean-fighting Revenue Man saves in his great struggle for the law.

THERE is something very appealing in the personality of ANN CORNWALL, particularly when she plays the part of a young girl in dire distress and in her newest Special Attraction the part gives this appealing personality full scope—for it is the story of a girl who has, unwittingly, cast her lot with some fugitives from justice, and of a romantic adventure which results not only in her own rescue, but also in the salvation of her companions. Varick Vanardy is the author of this vigorous, modern drama staged amid the beautiful scenery of Virginia and the storied Potomac River and the outdoor scenes have rarely been equalled for their beauty, for Rollin Sturgeon, the director, and Alfred Gosden, the photographer, have combined their talents admirably in staging the very human action of this dramatic slice of life. In addition, is the fact that "THE GIRL IN THE RAIN" is one of the day's prettiest love-stories, well cast, and well acted—entertainment of which any showman may be proud.

the trade papers—statements by so-called 'pioneers' in the film business, who affect to point with modest pride to how they espoused the cause of the exhibitor from the start. As a matter of fact, every exhibitor knows that Universal was organized solely to fight against monopoly in the film business, and to free the independents from the strangel-hold of the Patents Company octopus.

"Where were all these 'friends' of the exhibitor who are now beaming forth with philanthropic generalities, when the exhibitor had to pay the trust-like combination $2 a week just for the privilege of running picture machines, for instance?

"As I remember, Universal was the only outspoken champion of the independents at that time, just as it always has been. The rights of the independents in the film business had inception by the formation of the Universal organization—the banding together of certain independent producers who took the initial step to help the exhibitor free himself.

"That is why it makes me tired to see this or that producer posing as the patron saint of the exxhibitor. When the latter was struggling for his very life against the ever-reaching tentacles of the combination that threatened to choke the industry, these producers were not on the side of the independent.

"The independent exhibitor to-day faces a struggle just as threatening as that which menaced him ten years ago. If the film business is not to become eventually a regulated, subsidized industry, bending its knee at the beck and call of 'big interests,' the independent exhibitor must organize for a long and desperate fight.

"And the exhibitor needs assistance. He needs friends. He needs allies. The time has come for him to turn a deaf ear to honeyed words. What he must have is concrete help. He must know exactly where he stands with respect to producing and distributing organizations, and nothing short of exact and definite offers of moral and material support will do him any good.

"That is why Universal is taking its present stand—on both feet—beside the exhibitor. It is no time for equivocation. When I place myself in the ranks of the independents, I mean for it to be understood clearly that Universal will go to any extent to lend confidence and material aid to the exhibitor.

"Who else will come out whole-heartedly and unqualifiedly for the exhibitor? What other producer will make an offer of financial assistance? Now is the time for the exhibitor to remove the blinders from his eyes and call for his true friends to stand by.

"Universal stands ready to make sacrifices in order to prove its good faith to its allies, the independent exhibitors. I am willing, if it is thought necessary, to give up the control of the few houses Universal now holds in certain key cities. I do not believe in running with the hare and riding with the hounds, and I am holding these houses because the self-same threatre-owning producers, who are now at the throats of the independent exhibitors, tried to bar my pictures from the key cities.

"That is not all for which the exhibitor can count on Universal. Among other things, he can count on me for a just and fair booking policy. He will not have blocks of mediocre pictures forced upon him. He can pick what he chooses, and choose what he buys. It is with that idea in mind that I have inaugurated a new series of forty-eight pictures for the coming year—eight pictures by each of six different stars. The exhibitor will have the option of buying pictures made by the stars his patrons like the best.

"Just as the exhibitor in the old days who had red blood in his veins and refused to be dictated to by the Patents Company, had at least one source of supply—Universal—so he now knows that he can get any kind of service he wants from me.

"Universal can supply the exhibitor with a high class star picture every week, with comedies, Westerns, serials, news weeklies, and big special pictures of super-merit. No other single producing concern has made more big pictures during the past twelve months than Universal. No other company can point to more successes. 'The Right To Happiness,' 'Blind Husbands,' 'Marked Men,' 'Overland Red' and many others will be remembered when present screen events are history.

"As an earnest of what we will offer to the exhibitors in the near future—pictures that will help him in his fight against his enemies—Universal is about to release four super-productions, 'The Devil's Pass Key,' Erich von Stroheim's latest masterpiece, 'Under Crimson Skies,' 'The Breath of the Gods,' which will be a revelation in setting and artistic atmosphere, and 'Ambition,' an elaborate Dorothy Phillips-Allen Holubar picture.

"These and probably six more of even greater merit will be some of the weapons Universal will supply to the exhibitor for the combat against monopoly. This is in addition to the forty-eight star pictures, each exceptional, and each a composite of excellence in author, director and star.

"A number of exhibitors throughout the country have 100 per cent Universal houses. They use nothing but Universal pictures. This is not because we follow the policy of some producers and make them buy the Universal output en masse. They buy only what they want, but they want Universal pictures because they make money on them.

"Every exhibitor knows that he can get plenty of good Universal pictures with which to fill his programme if he takes the first step in the fight against monopoly and bars monopoly-made pictures from his screen. He is confident that when he 'outlaws' this product of the theatre-owning producers, he still will draw his patrons by first-class pictures."

"EVOLUTION of TRAVEL"

Filmed by Universal Educational Department collecting shots of all the old passenger carriers extant as well as the odd conveyances of foreign lands

NOT long ago it was proved by actual statistics that about 80 per cent. of the people are "eye-minded" rather than "ear-minded." As a result of this, motion pictures are fast taking the place of oral dictation as a means of educating children in the schools.

Based upon this theory, a motion picture depicting the entire "Evolution of Travel" is now being filmed by the Educational Department of the Universal Film Company, under the direction of Harry Levey, general manager, in conjunction with the Cole Motor Car Company, and will be preserved and used for school work together with other educational pictures.

It is the aim of the picture to show the development of passenger transportation, from the time when primitive man had only his two legs to carry him, to the present-day wonders of transportation.

Permission was secured to film the carts and vehicles on exhibition in Smithsonian Institute, and which were used as the mode of travel up to the advent of the automobile. Directors, camera-men and a company of players left on Thursday for Washington to film these. The production is to be a gigantic undertaking, and special attention is being paid to the details of authenticity of costumes and modes of each period.

In addition to this, camera men are being dispatched all over the world to film the modes of travel in vogue—to Japan, where scenes will be made of travel in the jinriksha; to the frozen North, where the dog-sleds furnish means of transportation; to Venice, to "shoot" the gondolas—to all countries of the world where interesting means of travel prevail.

Where it is impossible to secure authentic scenes of the growth and evolution of travel, models of the various vehicles of different ages are being made with the greatest care for correct details by a special staff of the Educational Department, and these will be filmed. In other cases animated technical drawings will be used.

In addition to the modes of travel in foreign lands will be shown the most primitive means for carrying adults—a pole beneath which is slung a hammock carrying the passenger. This is superseded by two poles, upon which is mounted a chair; which later develops into a sedan chair. Scenes are being made in Algiers, showing a passenger sled transporting passengers down steep hills and over cobble-stones. The first brake, the wheelbarrow, the first baby carriage, and the stage coach, are interesting stages of the development of travel that will be shot.

"The De Witt Clinton," the first train that was ever run in the State of New York, has already been filmed for this picture. Governor Smith made a special trip to New York at the invitation of Mr. Levey, and was "movied" as he sat in this locomotive, occupying the same seat that was once occupied by De Witt Clinton, seventh Governor of the Empire State. The Governor is also shown in a new model locomotive, such as that which is to carry him out to San Francisco to attend the National Democratic Convention.

The bicycle, the motorcycle and "the horseless carriage" are shown; the newest model aeroplane, the automobile, the Cole Aero-Eight, and last, the aeroplane—completing the evolution of travel to the present day.

CAST

The Fightin' Terror	Hoot Gibson
Jack Denton	Corey
John Burrows, Professor	Mark Fenton
Alice	Yvette Mitchell
Dick LaRue	George Rand
Slug Martin	Harry Tenbrook

JOHN BURROWS, Professor of entomology, is on a visit to Arizona with his daughter Alice, for their annual vacation. On their way they are chased by a fearless character known in the vicinity as "The Fightin' Terror," who wanted to let them know that a tire had dropped from the rear of the auto. They are overcome with fear and ride wildly to town to inform the sheriff, who, himself, is not overly anxious to meet this demon fighter. After the "Terror" makes known his reason for this wild chase, they are all relieved and the Professor introduces himself and his daughter, emphasizing the fact that he is in Arizona to study the life of the "Fairy Queens." The Terror misunderstands his mission and takes him to one of the dance halls inhabited by many of the dancing girls. Alice is shocked and upbraids the "Terror" for his seemingly funny actions. They leave in disgust and start to look for a place to stay while in Arizona. Dick LaRue offers his house for their convenience and they accept. Dick makes hay while the sun shines and the "Terror" is rebuffed by Alice when he offers her a bunch of fish for the dinner, which he caught himself, in order to make amends for the seeming joke which he played unknowingly.

The Professor tells the "Terror" about a certain species of butterfly which he desires and the "Terror" starts on a hunt for butterflies. He finally gets the desired one and makes a present of it to the Professor, thereby winning back the good graces of Alice.

The "Terror" goes back to town and is informed by the Sheriff that the Professor is wanted for leaving with the college funds. The "Terror" goes back to secure the butterfly from the Professor but it has disappeared.

Dick LaRue has told Alice about a fight which has been arranged between the "Terror" and Slug Martin, his opponent, and Alice has secured the "Terror's" promise not to go through with this fight. But when the "Terror" finds that only one thousand dollars can save the Professor, he takes on his opponent and knocks him out, thereby winning the one thousand dollars and saving the Professor from arrest. After Alice finds out the circumstances which prompted the "Terror" to forget his promise, she forgives him.

Dick LaRue, who has attempted to make an attack upon Alice, is beaten by the "Terror" who also finds upon him the butterfly which was lost. Dick is turned over to the sheriff, as the "Terror" sweeps Alice into his arms.

CAST

John Grant	Eddie Polo
Sir Geo. Latimer	C. Norman Hammond
Beth	Thelma Percy
Prince Narr	Ray Ripley
King Claypool	Thomas Lingham
Nell	Peggy O'Dare
Sonia	Ruth Royce

GRANT, with the help of one of the Latimers' guests, Carter, frees himself from the wreckage and starts back, failing to observe Beth in a passing car. She had in the interim been made prisoner by Narr.

King Claypool and Nell, posing as his niece, are famous crooks planning to rob Narr's London home. Their accomplice, Wade, is employed there as butler. When Wade informs them that Narr is on his way home, they go with Smith, another accomplice, to the house, but hide when they see Narr, the servants and Beth arrive. Narr ties Beth to a chair and leads Sonia, his favorite wife, to the library, where he explains to her about the murder and the writing on Beth's forehead. The crooks, overhearing all, plan to kidnap Beth and get possession of the dagger as means of blackmail.

In the meantime, Beth has managed to get to the 'phone and tells Grant of her whereabouts. He jumps in a car and races for London.

Narr and the crooks engage in a fight, in which Narr and Wade are killed. Sonia gets the dagger and as Grant, who has arrived, goes after her, she operates a lever on the stairs which hurls him through a trap to the sewers underneath London. Smith gets the dagger from Sonia, however, and giving it to Claypool, they take the now unconscious Beth to Narr's hydroplane outside, just as Grant emerges from the sewer. A fight ensues and as the scabbard of the dagger comes off into Grant's hands, he is caught in the rope of the now ascending hydroplane and is seen hanging head downward from the rope as the plane continues its ascent.

SMITH didn't approve of prohibition at all, so that when "the town went dry" he laid in a stock of rye which he kept on consuming until, as he thought, he had one bottle left and only one. Friend wife is ignorant of the drinking joys in which her husband indulges, and when she departs for a visit, one fine day, Smith goes to the hiding place of his priceless treasure and begins to enjoy the joy of joys.

He is foolish enough, however, to throw the cork outside and it is picked up by Billy, member of a solemn party downstairs, solemn because lemonade is the strongest they can get. Billy traces the cork to Smith's apartment and tries to get away with the bottle, but to no avail.

Poor Smith tries ever so hard to get his drink, but is interrupted again by his neighbor with her squealing infant whom Smith endeavors to pacify. And then finally, the whole party downstairs, not being able to get the bottle, decide to get the bottle themselves, and up they come. They start to dance with poor Smith and as there are a lot of pretty girls he of course falls for the lure of the shimmy. Then, horror of horrors, friend wife returns home during the course of the evening and Smith is in for it. He manages however, to retreat to the rear with the final bottle under his arm, and goes below to the garden. But when he starts to drink he finds it is only—tea, and so he has to satisfy himself with the "moonshine" which a particularly beautiful moon is spilling over the night.

Mutiny on the High Seas!

ONE of the big, gripping scenes in this picture of big scenes is when Captain Yank Barstow quells the mutineers who have struck down his mate. Elmo Lincoln—strong, silent, watchful, quick as a cat—gives this situation wonderful realism. One jump, one blow, one pistol shot and the peril to the ship's company is past—only the low mutterings of the mutineers are heard—precursors of the terrible typhoon soon to sweep the vessel's decks and add yet another tremendous thrill.

THE STORY

CAPTAIN YANK BARSTOW was under no illusions as to the temper of his crew and he knew well that in iron fisted control lay the only safety for his passengers. The Southern Cross was a staunch schooner-rigged vessel which was consigned to a Central American port loaded with a cargo of pianos. The pianos were loaded, too, but Captain Barstow did not know anything about that when he shipped Vance Clayton, his wife Helen and their six-year old child, Peg, for the voyage. Clayton was convoying the precious contraband cargo, for the pianos were filled with muskets and ammunition consigned to Ramon, the would-be president of a South American republic. Clayton was the agent of the consignees of the rifles and it was necessary that he land them undetected by the port authorities. Therefore he began secretely to stir the rough crew to mutiny.

Barstow only increased the rigidity of his discipline, much to the horror of Helen who could not understand the cause for it and was ignorant of the part which her husband was playing in the affair. When the vessel anchored in the harbor Burke swore out a warrant against the captain for attempted murder. At the trail, rather than tell the truth and thus imperil her happiness, Barstow remained silent. He was convicted and sent to prison for five years with his mate. They escape, however, and swim across the shark infested bay, Barstow dragging Plum Duff who had been wounded in the leg by one of the guards' shots.

The opposite shore was the habitat of a crew of deserters, murderers, thieves and ticket of leave men from all parts of the world under the command of Baltimore Bucko, the biggest ruffian of the west coast. Barstow conquered him and became in turn commander of the beach combers.

Having delivered his smuggled guns safely to Ramon, Clayton sent Burke back for another contraband cargo while outwardly enjoying friendly relations with the American consul. When the second cargo came the revolution started and Clayton, unable to leave with his family, on account of a smallpox scare, was caught in his own net. They all fled to the American consulate where the president of the republic had also taken refuge. Dead Light Burke endeavored to make Clayton assist in the defense of the consulate but Clayton took the first opportunity to escape through a back entrance, his exit proving an entering wedge for the insurgents.

In the meantime Barstow had heard of the insurrection and taing command of his beach combers, rowed across the bay and after desperate fighting rescued the beleaguered garrison and the consul. Clayton was killed in the street fighting and the little party of rescued and rescuers fought its way back to the wharf. The press agent of the insurrectos stops the fantastic revolution by announcing that the insurgent leader has been killed and the insurgents were anxious to return to their former allegiance.

Burke had been mortally wounded during the last stand at the wharf and knowing that he was about to die, confessed his part in the mutiny and the false accusation of Captain Barstow.

ADVANCE STORY NO. 1.

At the ——— Theatre next ———, theatregoers of this city will have an opportunity to see the latest Universal-Jewel production, "Under Crimson Skies," featuring the Colossus of the Screen, Elmo Lincoln.

"Under Crimson Skies," is an original story by J. G. Hawks and is reminiscent of the virile tales of the sea by Jack London and Robert Louis Stevenson. It tells the story of Yank Barstow, master of the Southern Cross, who is sailing to a South American port with a cargo of pianos. Clayton, owner of the cargo, and his wife and baby daughter are the only passengers aboard. Clayton is in reality a gun runner, taking a shipment of rifles and ammunition to be used in a rebellion, and the firearms are stored in the empty piano cases. The second mate and part of the crew are in his employ.

During a storm at sea Captain Barstow discovers that he is carrying contraband, and when he threatens to put Clayton in irons the crew mutinies. He is forced to shoot the ringleader, and Clayton's wife, who arrives on the scene too late to witness the mutiny believes Barstow's action due to sheer brutality.

When the Southern Cross docks at the Latin port, Clayton and the crew accuse the captain of attempted manslaughter on the high seas, and he is tried by a marine court martial. Keeping silent on account of his love for Clayton's wife and baby, he is sentenced to prison, from which he escapes and becomes master of a band of beachcombers after vanquishing the leader of the lawless mob.

How the revolution starts and threatens to engulf the conspirators, how Barstow and his gang of beachcombers come to the aid of the besieged Americans at the consulate and how he regains his liberty and reputation are told in a series of intensely interesting scenes.

Rex Ingram directed the production, which engages the services of many clever players and which is rich in artistic photography.

HISTORIC WRECK HOUSES DERELICTS

Rich in the traditions of the South Seas is a skeleton of an old gun-running sloop half buried in sand on the beach far down the coast of Lower California. According to the belief of the Pacific mariner, the sloop was scuttled forty years ago by her master, who ran a crazy course down the coast in the teeth of a storm and threw his vessel against the rocks in a fit of rage. It is said by old sea-faring men that the skipper lost his pilot's papers through drunkenness at sea and that he carried his sloop to the rocks in his suicide.

The boat was discovered by Rex Ingram, a Universal director, and used for several scenes in "Under Crimson Skies," a Universal-Jewel photodrama starring Elmo Lincoln, the Colossus of the Screen.

"Under Crimson Skies" will be shown ——— at the ——— Theatre.

Supporting Lincoln are to be seen such favorites as Mabel Ballin, Harry Van Meter, little Nancy Caswell, Frank Brownlee, Paul Weigel, Dick LaReno and Noble Johnson.

FOR THE HERALD

The Southern Cross, a small coastwise vessel commanded by Captain Yank Barstow, cleared a north port with the good will of the custom's authority and a spanking breeze abaft.

In the snug little cabin were Vance Clayton, a commercial traveler, his wife Helen, and their little girl. In the hold was a consignment of boxed pianos, being shipped for Clayton. Little did Barstow know that Clayton was a gun-runner and that in his harmless looking piano box he had rifles and ammunition that would set one South American country at the throat of its neighbor, and cause the loss of innocent life. He finally discovers them but is confronted by a mutiny, fostered by Clayton.

To divert suspicion from himself, Clayton tells the American consular agent at their port of landing, that Barstow is an attempted murderer. Barstow is arrested. Because of the regard in which he holds the wife of Clayton, his lips are sealed. To deny the charge would be to disclose Clayton's duplicity. He escapes from custody, however, makes his way to an abandoned beach, and because of his strength, is placed at the head of a band of beach combers.

With the rifles that Clayton has smuggled into the country, a rebel band rises up against the American colony and puts the flimsy dwellings to the torch. At the head of his motley crew of beach combers, Captain Barstow goes to the rescue. What becomes of Helen, the lovely woman for whom Barstow suffered imprisonment to save? The unexpected happens, resulting in happiness for all but Clayton, who went to a miserable death.

The story is being told at the ——— Theatre in "Under Crimson Skies," the Universal-Jewel photodrama in which Elmo Lincoln, the Colossus of the Screen, affords the silent drama a new type of manhood.

REGARDING THE STAR

Elmo Lincoln, star of "Under Crimson Skies," the Universal-Jewel photodrama of the South Seas, is internationally known as the Colossus of the Screen. Because of his tremendous strength, Lincoln has aroused world-wide interest as an exponent of right living.

Elmo Lincoln was born in Rochester, Indiana, thirty years ago. His father was a well known physician and surgeon of that place and intended that his son complete his college education and emerge into one of the conventional professions.

Instead of that Elmo ran away from home when he was seventeen and went on the stage. He appeared in many stock companies throughout the West and eventually drifted to Southern California, where he entered motion pictures.

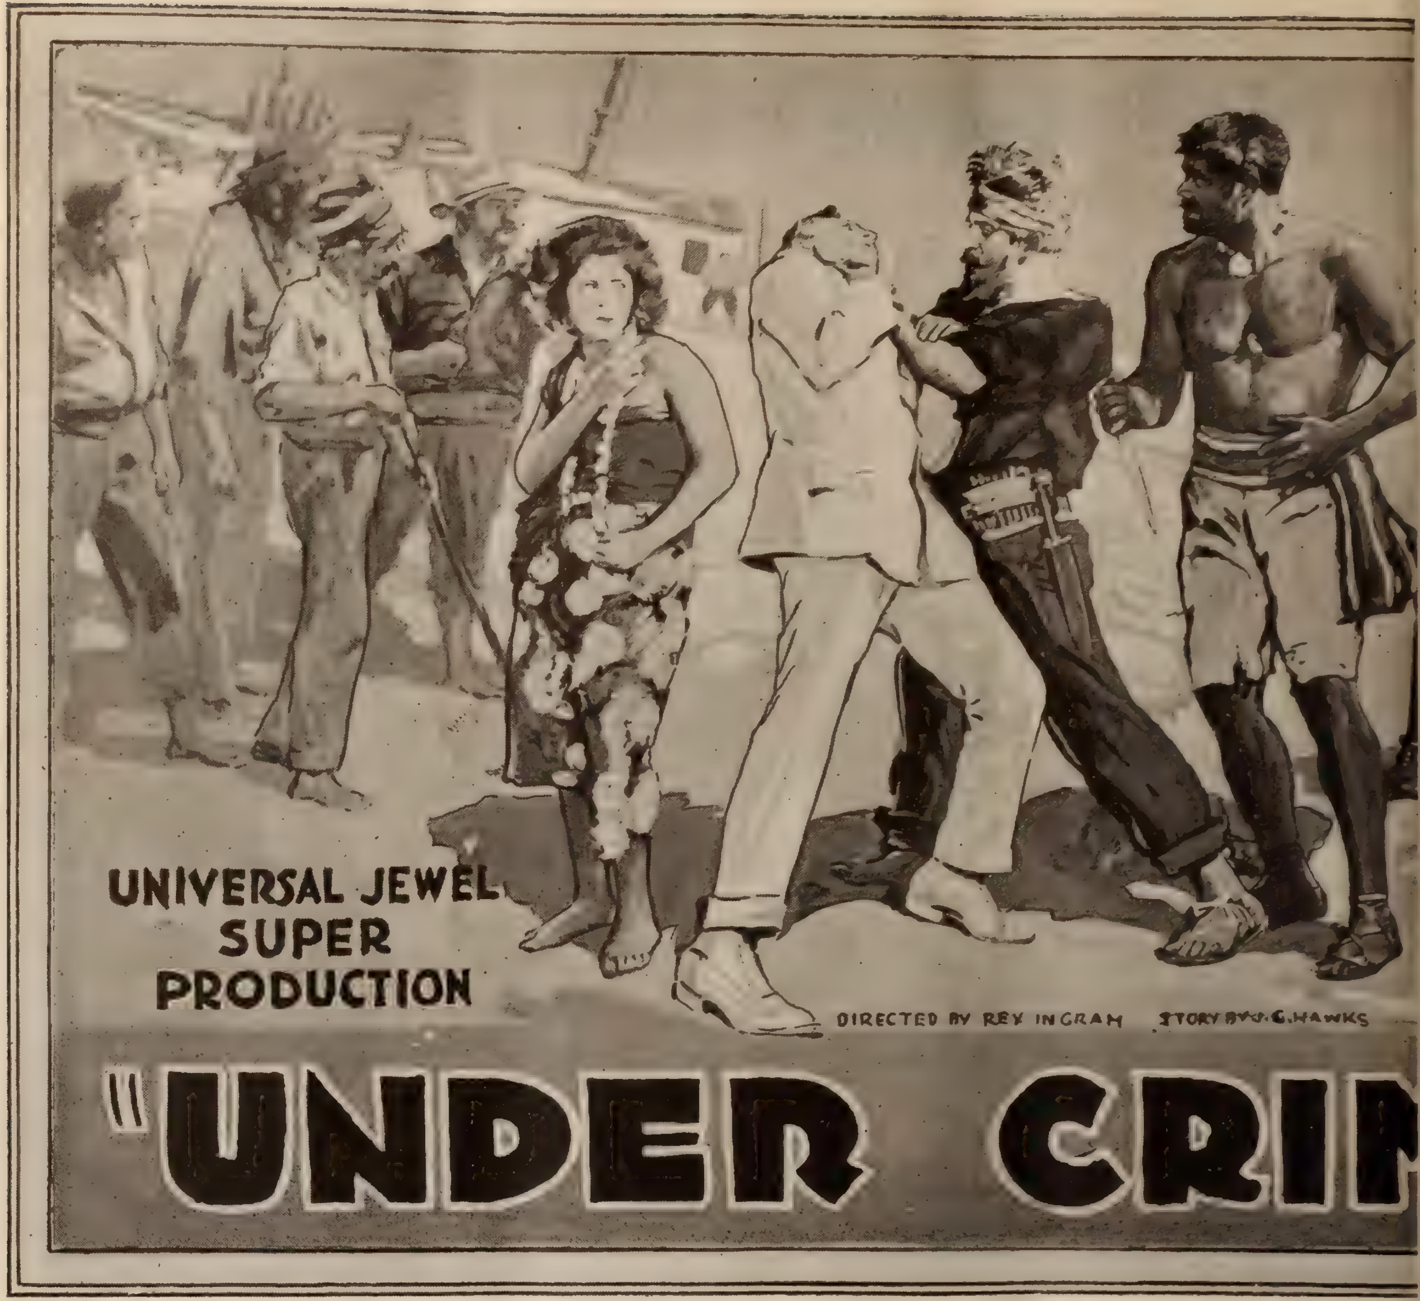
Standing at the gate of the old Biograph studio six years ago on one hot sultry day, Lincoln inflated his mighty chest with enough fresh air to blow up a tire. D. W. Griffith saw him and cast him for a small role in a photodrama requiring the presence of a modern Hercules.

After considerable preliminary work with some of the smaller producing units, Lincoln turned toward Universal City. He is remembered for his remarkable work in support of Rupert Julian in "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," in which he played the role of the blacksmith of Lovain. As Tarzan, in "Tarzan of the Apes," he aroused universal admiration by his splendid physique and dramatic ability. Immediately before work began on "Under Crimson Skies" at Universal City, Lincoln completed the serial, "Elmo, the Mighty." He later enacted the serial "Elmo, the Fearless," and at present is appearing in a third, "The Lightning's Eye."

GIFTED ARTIST WINS SCREEN FAME

Mabel Ballin, who supports Elmo Lincoln, the Colossus of the Screen, in his Universal-Jewel photodrama, "Under Crimson Skies," is well remembered as a popular player of the speaking stage.

Before Miss Ballin entered motion pictures, she was on the Keith & Proctor Vaudeville Circuit and with the Charles Dillingham Theatrical Enterprises. In addition to being an unusually gifted photoplayyer, Miss Ballin is also a painter of note, having painted the portraits of many celebrities in the United States and on the Continent.



VIVID TWENTY-FOUR SHEET

POSTERS have often "put over" a production and they are always a tremendous force in the exploitation. "Under Crimson Skies," the thrilling romance of the iron-fisted skipper who led a motley crew of beach-combers to the rescue of the woman whose happiness he would not wreck by accusing her husband of gun-running, is provided with a full assortment of the most striking and compelling posters that the Morgan Lithograph Company has ever issued. The illustration above is the twenty-four sheet for this new Universal-Jewel Production.

The set contains two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet and a window card beside the twenty-four. All are in full color and depict in a striking manner all sides of this picturesque and romantic love story of the southern seas.

The scene shown in the twenty-four is on the beach opposite the capital of the Central American republic in which the one requisite to a revolution, the guns and ammunition, have been supplied by the agent of a northern munition firm. This beach is the undisputed habitation of the beach-combers, the lost souls of four coninents, the dregs of civilization tossed ashore and forgotten. The king pin of this fierce looking aggregation is the Barbary Bucko, wanted from Frisco to Singapore for killing and mutiny on the high seas. His rule was absolute, his favor cringingly sought by the bauble belles of this bedlam until Captain Barstow swam to the dangerous haven through the shark-infested bay dragging his wounded mate with him. In a furious battle he worsted the Barbary Bucko and in turn became king of the beach-combers.

Then one day came a soldier from across the bay. Other soldiers had come before, but they never went back. This one resigned on the spot. He told Barstow of the danger to the woman for whose sake he had permitted his lips to be sealed. Summoning his piratical, black and tan army, the Captain shouted, "To the boats, men, we'll show these tin soldiers how the beach-combers can fight." Its great stuff.

THE APPEAL

PICTURE for a woman the deep drama of another's soul—paint for her the secret of a woman's bravely tragic love—and sheer human nature compels her keenest interest. The three loves of woman!—here is a story every woman wants to know—compelling, irresistible. A story, too, with its own appeal to men, revealing the subtle workings of that secret diplomacy that sets nations at each other's throats. A stirring International romantic drama set in the exquisite beauty of the perfumed Orient.

Universal Employees on Outing

EVERY one has to bust out occasionally, and Universal finds it pays to do it regularly and under the proper auspices. So last Saturday was the annual Universal outing. By forty-seat busses, almost four hundred employees took the entire day off and journeyed up into the Bronx to a place called Westchester, where was the makin's of quite a decent party. To enumerate, there were eating halls, bowling alleys, dance hall, deserted saloon, soft drink bar, grass games, oval and a so-called ball field. If it had been any more like a diamond the Fort Lee ball team would have rolled up a much bigger victory over the 1600 Broadway ball chasers than 7 to 1. The Fort Lee bunch looked like class. They had spikes, gloves, suits, caps and a league ball, and the Broadway boys were licked before the first ball was thrown. John Schroeder, the aviator, tuned up for 1600, and before he came down to earth he decided that he had engine trouble. Paul Goldman of the Industrial Department then unreeled a few fade-outs, and was developing nicely when he cracked Catcher Bill Powers on his adding machine finger and lost the game.

As soon as the busses reached their destination and the two crowds had looked each other over and said, "No, I don't know him, he must be from 1600 Broadway," and "Never saw her before, must be Fort Lee," Ring Master Etchingham put on his concertina hat and started the games. The prizes were exquisite and well worth the effort. The only one who complained was Olga Hadel, who only won a twenty-dollar silk umbrella and half a manicure set. She couldn't understand why she didn't get the other half, too, until Phil Cochrane told her that this was a manicure set for one hand. Olga won it in the one-legged hopping race. But the games were a big success, and so was the dancing, thanks to a fine orchsetra under the leadership of Bandmaster Bennett.

Carl Laemmle seemed to enjoy himself hugely. He was accompanied by his son and daughter. He posed with the bunch for his picture, and was busy the whole afternoon shaking hands with employees he rarely sees. Among those present were Julius and Abe Stern, E. H. Goldstein, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Berman, Edward Moffat, Harry Levey, David Murphy, Clarence Jack, Joe Mayer, Jack Crowley, Horace Judge, Joe Monahan, John Davidson, Fred Perkins, Mr. and Mrs. Siegel and Mr. and Mrs. Jack Gartman. Mr. Gartman acted as general manager of the affair, and when they got to the office on Monday morning all hands united in giving Jack a hand engraved vote of thanks.

EDGAR HAINES RETURNS

Manager of Universal's Des Moines Exchange Tell How They Like Universal

MIDDLE west audiences like "wild west" pictures and go to see them in preference to society photoplays, crook dramas or comedies, says Edgar B. Haines, manager of the Universal exchange in Des Moines, Ia., who recently visited New York to get his lungs full of Gotham air and his eyes full of—old acquaintances. He used to be a film salesman in the New York office.

"They want action—hard riding and square shooting," said Haines. "Why, when I get a good western picture into the exchange, it doesn't stay on my shelf long enough to collect dust. It is that way with Universal's two-reel westerns, with Hoot Gibson and Art Acord and the other cowboy actors. When one of Harry Carey's five-reel westerns comes along I hardly get a chance to look at it myself.

"Iowa people are great picture fans. They are getting more so every day, if you can judge from the film selling business. We are doing business this summer that wasn't dreamed of last summer. Cancellations are few and far between, despite the hot weather. They used to say that Iowa had one inhabitant to every square mile. Now they say there's a picture house to every 25 square miles and a movie fan every 25 feet."

MON RANDAL DRAWING UNIVERSAL CITY STARS

MON RANDALL, noted pen and ink artist, whose sketches of motion picture stars are familiar to every reader of trade and fan magazines, and whose posters adorn the walls of every city and village in America, is now confining his talents to reproducing the features and characteristics of Universal players at Universal City.

Randall went to California a few weeks ago and now has his studio established at Universal City, where he can study the nature and habitat of Universal artists on their native heath.

Mon Randall's work is as well known to filmdom as the acting of any of its famous stars. In fact, the Universal City portrait studio was enlarged at his suggestion and so constructed as to include a thoroughly equipped studio suitable to Mr. Randall's work. There is a quality about Randall's sketches that reproduces the very characteristics of the original and gives a far better likeness than the finest photograph.

All future Universal advertising will be illuminated by Randall's drawings, and some unusually brilliant work may be expected from this artist, now that he is at work at the studio and able to sketch the Universal stars from life.

Not only will you make a killing with "The Virgin of Stamboul" just at this time when YOU NEED IT MOST—you can double your profits, too, by simply doubling your run.

He Beat the Heat!

"When the morning of June 2nd dawned, and I felt that the day would be exceptionally warm, I was already discouraged, for I was booked with 'The Virgin of Stamboul' for June 2nd, 3rd and 4th, and from past experiences with other productions, really believed that my run of 'The Virgin' would be a failure.

"However, imagine HOW SURPRISED I WAS when I found that the RESULTS achieved on this production after my three day run surpassed ANY PROFITS secured on features in the past. I now am CONVINCED that a Universal production will STAND ANY TEMPERATURE—hot or cold. Don't forget to advise me when you have another such production."

CARL LAEMMLE TALKS

Tells Eastern Division Managers, at Cleveland, what They May Expect From Universal

THE eastern division Exchange managers of Universal were assembled in convention in Cleveland, Sunday, June 13, to hear Universal's sales and production plans for the coming season. Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, addressed the meeting.

The principal reason for the convention was Mr. Laemmle's desire to assure his lieutenants personally that Universal is planning an unusual series of big pictures for the fall.

"Before I take my vacation and go to Europe," he said, "I want you men to know that you can go to your exhibitors with full confidence and tell them they are going to get pictures better than Universal ever produced before and of such a quality and high standard of story and production, they can come to look on a Universal picture as a sure and surprising investment.

"We have been sparing no money to obtain wonderful stories for our pictures. We have lined up an array of stories that are unequalled for their screen value. The same degree of earnestness will be exercised in their production. I am determined our pictures shall not give place to any brand."

In the evening a testimonial dinner was given to Mr. Laemmle. The other two guests of honor were Mr. Berman and Louis Baum, formerly manager of the Cincinnati Universal exchange and now district manager for Universal's middle western offices.

Among the exchange managers and their assistants present were A. A. Schmidt, eastern district manager; E. J. Smith, Cleveland; Herman Stern, Pittsburgh; Ralph Abbett, Indianapolis; Cleve Adams, Cincinnati; Billy Bein, Cincinnati; M. A. Chase, Buffalo; J. M. Sitterly, Buffalo; W. D. Ward, Detroit.

CHICAGO COMMISSION

Exchange In Windy City Follows Example Set At Universal City.

COMMISSION form of government has spread to Chicago. As a result of the recent convention in that city, it was decided to adopt the commission form as a substitute for the prior form of management. It was put into effect without delay, with three high commissioners.

This situation has nothing to do with Mayor Thompson or the recent Republican convention, but is the outcome of the recent convention in that city of the middle west exchange managers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Organization management by commission, inaugurated early this spring in Universal City, Cal., and later adopted in the home office of Universal, has proved so successful that it is being spread to the larger branch exchanges of the big film company.

Chicago is the first exchange to be placed under the new type of management. The three commissioners are Louis Baum, district manager of the middle west territory for Universal; Louis Laemmle and I. L. Leserman, formerly the sole manager of the Chicago Exchange. The commissioners were inaugurated into office personally by Carl Laemmle, president of the film corporation, who journeyed to Chicago to attend the managerial convention.

Among the others assembled in the Windy City were Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal and one of the home office commissioners; Louis Baum, Louis Laemmle, I. L. Leserman, Edgar B. Haines of the Des Moines office, Joe Roderick of Minneapolis, George Levine of Milwaukee, J. C. Calvert of Kansas City, H. F. Lefholtz of Omaha and Sam Benjamin of Oklahoma City.

A MODERN GOLDILOCKS

Little Kittens Reichert Playing A Real Live Fairy Tale for the Industrial Seven

IF anyone told Kittens Reichert today that "you can't mix business with pleasure" she would look at you with amazement, and tell you that for a little while, at least, she can't un-mix them. For Kittens is revelling in an opportunity that doesn't come often to small ten-year-olders—she is in the midst of living an actual fairy-tale!

Miss Reichert has been chosen to enact the role of Goldilocks in a motion picture showing the wonderous adventure of Goldilocks and the Three Bears. The picture, which is now in process of making under the supervision of Harry Levey, Manager of the Educational Department of the Universal Film Company, is to be known under the title "A Modern Goldilocks" and anyone who knows his "once upon a time" thoroughly, knows too, what a wonderful adventure this is, not only of Goldilocks, but Kittens as well.

A regular little fairy village has been built in Fort Lee for the making of this picture. A corps of architectural experts—and only those who, like "Peter Pan" still believe in fairies, were put to work studying the old fairy-tale classics, and the result is that the house of the three bears has actually come to life. The big bear, the medium-sized bear, and the little tiny bear are there; the big bed that is too hard, the medium-sized bed that is too soft, and the little tiny bed that is "just right" are also there, built to the proper dimensions that every child knows by heart.

"The utmost care had to be taken in arranging the settings for this picture," says Mr. Levey. "For children are the most critical audiences in the world, and this picture, of course, is made for a special appeal to the youngsters. There probably isn't a youngster who doesn't know to the fraction of a square inch just how big and how small the house and its furnishings ought to be—and they are going to want it just right. Every one of their illusions must be kept intact when they see this picture. So you see, we had a double responsibility."

As for Kittens, she says there isn't any responsibility about it at all—she's really living Goldilocks, and having a most wonderful time.

This picture is the first of a series of fairy tales that are to be made under Mr. Levey's supervision.

CINEMA COMPANY ACTS IN REAL CLOUDBURST

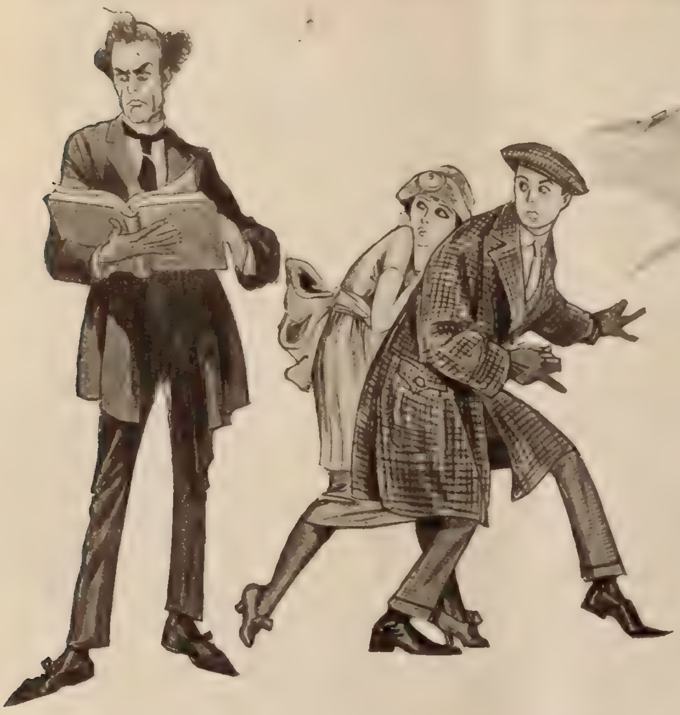
One of the most terrific storms that has ever lashed the South Pacific into fury was utilized in the filming of "Under Crimson Skies," the Universal photodrama now playing at the ——— Theatre.

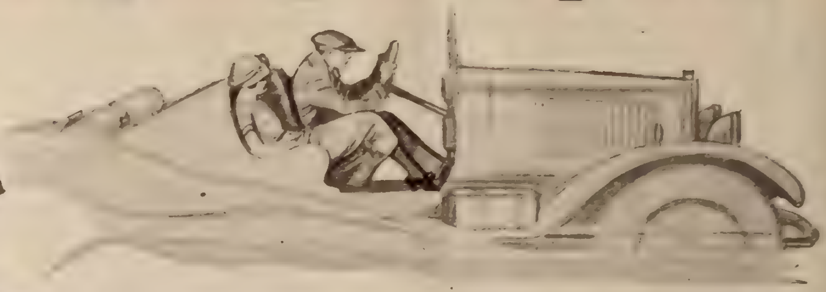
Under the spur of a northwest gale, the usually docile Pacific plunged wildly off the Southern Pacific coast and sent pyramids of water shattering into the rocks along the shore.

Rex Ingram, directing Elmo Lincoln in the romantic Universal-Jewel photodrama, decided that it was a fine night for ducks. Nevertheless, he thought, it was exactly the kind of a night that the Universal camera should record for "Under Crimson Skies."

Ingram took his entire Universal company to the beach and had the players enact their roles in the midst of the storm.

"Built For Laughing Purposes"





"THE multitude of screen fans," says the M. P. World, "who have watched Lyons and Moran do their team work in short subjects will be pleased with this, their first five-reel production. It is done in their best comedy vein and carries a good, light plot with numerous laughing moments strung through the action."

"Like the suspense in well-written melodrama," says Wid, "the comedy in 'Everything But the Truth' is accumulative through a series of very humorous scenes and good complications handled with appreciative comedy sense. . . . Lyons and Moran are entirely successful in their first feature comedy."

Anna	Mildred Moore
Egbert	George Field
Rosa	Beatrice Dominguez
Warpee	Tote Du Crow

BUCK and Baldwin, escaping unhurt from their perilous fall, mount their horses and espy Anna riding at top speed towards home. She has been warned on the penalty of her father's life not to disclose her marriage to the moon rider chief. A spy on the Baldwin ranch notifies the gang of the safe return of the three and a decoy note sent to Baldwin, sends him and Buck to the cliffs in the hope of meeting the moon rider who has tricked Buck of his inheritance. There they are captured by the moon riders.

Rosa, jealous because of Egbert's intended gift of a necklace to Anna, lures the latter to the cabin, where she overcomes her, binds her to a chair, in such a position that the opening of the cabin door will fire a revolver straight at her. She then goes to Warpee's and induces him by a ruse to sign over the rights of the land to her. With the deed she endeavors to taunt Egbert into marrying her, and when he angrily demands of her where the deed is, she lies to him and sends him to the cabin after it. He opens the door and the revolver fires off at the unfortunate Anna.

At that very moment, in the cliff cave, the moon riders set a fuse to blow up the rooms in which Baldwin and Buck were held captives. Baldwin manages to escape but just as he makes for Buck, the room blows up and Buck is buried in the wreckage.

In the meantime, the long suffering cattlemen, meeting in the sheriff's office, make inquiries after the detective from Los Angeles who has not as yet showed up.

In town Grant is accused by the cattlemen of stealing one of their horses, since they notice a brand on his horse, and seeing a chance to break loose from the rustlers, now that he has his evidence, Grant starts a rumpus and the rustlers, who always avoid trouble, rush away. Then Grant explains to the cattlemen that he is "John Edwards" the detective, but he is overheard by Claypool, who slips out unawares. Grant, the sheriff, and a posse go after the rustlers. Nell who has advance news of the raid, rides to Rustling Hollow to warn them. Madge Ben's Sweetheart.	Ethel Ritchie
Village Bum and First Mayor	J. Walters
First Sheriff of Copperhead	Ed. Jones

BEN COOPER was the most feared and disliked man in Copperhead, because of his fierce eyes and taciturn manner. Virtually an exile, he yet longed to be liked and do good. One day Madge, a village girl, smiles on him, and it is the first ray of sunshine in Ben's life.

Fate sent Jake Caldwell, a stranger, to Ben's claim and between them, they hatched a pot for taking possession of Copperhead. They did, and Ben made himself mayor, and Jake sheriff. But once in power, Ben forgot all old dreams of revenge for his exile and ruled kindly and well. And all would have gone well, only Jake took a fancy to Madge, and being evil, attempted to harm her. Ben beat him up and discharged him, and Jake, plotting revenge, had Ben's gun filled with bored cartridges, and in a fight which Jake subsequently forced, Ben's gun backfired and blinded him. Jake took the office away from Ben and ruled in dissipated fashion.

The townspeople went back on Ben—all except Madge who was instrumental in procuring a specialist who promised a return of Ben's eyesight. Madge announced in town that she was going to marry Ben, and on the day set, a mysterious current spread through the town, all in favor of Ben and Madge. At the wedding, by a ruse, Ben drew on Jake and the citizens backed him. Ben was made permanent mayor and the wedding was celebrated by the grateful people of Copperhead.

IS THERE A FILM STAR IN NEWFOUNDLAND?

UNIVERSAL pictures are being boomed in Newfoundland and the Canadian maritime provinces by a lively tie-up with the Halifax Herald and the Hailfax Daily Mail, in which the two papers are staging a popularity contest with the view of choosing several likely screen heroes and heroines to be sent to California for training under the Universal banner.

The Universal has guaranteed that a limited number of the lucky contestants will be transported to Universal City and given a fair try-out at a nominal salary. If they are accepted, they will be engaged at a good salary for continuous work in Universal pictures. If they are not available, they will receive transportation home.

The newspapers are carrying daily spreads booming the popularity contest, showing pictures of Universal City, and giving short histories, with pictures, of various Universal stars who have risen to fame from obscure beginnings.

The stunt has aroused gerat interest in Halifax and its vicinity. Hundreds of young men and women are vieing for a place in the lucky list. The local exhibitors have taken advantage of the scheme and are reaping rich harvests at every representation of Universal pictures.

HERE is a production which starts without a single, so-called "star" in its cast and ends with every player in it a star in his or her own right. Take, for example, the work of Clyde Fillmore as "Captain Rex Strong" and that of Mae Busch as "La Belle Odera," the dancer of the Tivoli. You will not have to know army men—or the demi-monde—to realize the admirable art of these two as they seek, one to send Grace Goodwright into the gutter, the other, to save her even at the point of a husband's pistol. It is our belief that the screen has seldom seen more perfect acting.

that has Everything!

HERE, at last, is one of those great epics of the screen for which the camera was invented. A huge human drama that rouses you out of yourself, sweeping you out to tremendous adventure on the high-seas, then back to wondrously photographed scenes among a colony of lost souls, then plunges you straight into the midst of red revolution and the rescue of a beautiful woman doomed to a tragic fate. Admirably acted by a great company and staged for the most part in a glorious flood of sunshine, this great drama may truly be said to be "the picture that has everything."

THIS picture has the treble advantage of a very sympathetic and intense story—an appealing star—and a supporting cast of really unusual talent and popularity. Add to these three things the fact that it has been staged and costumed to perfection and you will see why it is a Universal-Jewel Super-Production. "THE BREATH OF THE GODS," while it is laid in Japan, is almost as much American in its atmosphere as it is Japanese. It is in the clash of temperament, of love and of racial beliefs and customs that it gets its truly remarkable hold on the viewer. It is safe to say that not a single woman in your audience—or man—but will praise your good taste and keen sense of the dramatic after they have seen this fine picture in your theatre. "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals"

William F. Alder

Edward Laemmle

Unique adventures of two modern Explorers and Sportsmen among the Kia Kia headhunters of New Guinea where they risked their lives for weeks rather than forego the opportunty of making some of the most remarkable moving pictures ever taken.

SHIPWRECKED among cannibals, was the unique experience of two intrepid Americans, who, in search of adventure, which could be shown on the screen, risked their necks and after many harrowing experiences covering a period of fourteen months, returned to the United States with the proofs of their explorations in the form of six thrilling reels of moving pictures. These under the title "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" will be shown at the Astor Theatre in New York City beginning July 4 and shortly afterward will be shown all over the country.

These two men, who dared to approach the wild haunts of the Kia Kia tribe of head-hunters, were Edward Laemmle, nephew of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Mfg. Company, and William F. Alder, well known in moving picture circles and a member of the Southern California Academy of Sciences. Together they set sail from the sunny shores of California on April 17, 1919, bound for Java and other points in the Orient. Not until the eighth day of May, 1920, did they again set eyes on the land of the free, and the home of the brave in the little old U. S. A.

The expedition was known as the Laemmle-Alder Expedition, and was under the auspices of the Southern California Academy of Sciences in conjuaction with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It was their intention to photograph strange sights in the Orient, and islands in the South Seas, and until they set sail from Java on their way to New Guinea, their plans went ac-

Eileen Sedgwick in New Serial

ANOTHER new serial is to go into production at Universal City shortly, directed by Edward Kull and starring Eileen Sedgwick, the heroine of many a chaptered nelodrama. This new thriller is based on "The Diamond Master," the famous Saturday Evening Post story by Jacques Futrelle considered by many critics the most perfect mystery story of a decade. What finer material for a serial film than the story of the inventor of the process for manufacturing perfect diamonds who holds the jewel merchants of the world at his mercy? Even the mind of Jules Verne never conceived a more ingenious contrivance than the colossal machine which turns pure carbon into priceless gems, and a set over forty feet in height is being erected to house this mysterious engine.

Robert Rodin who wrote the scenario assisted by George Pyper, has made but one important change in the original Futrelle story, and that is, changing the leading character from a man to a woman, so that Miss Sedgwick can be cast for "The Queen of Diamonds," which will probably be the working title of the production. Eileen Sedgwick requires no introduction to theatregoers. She was Eddie Polo's leading woman in "The Lure of the Circus," played the leading role in "The Radium Mystery" and other serial successors. Edward Kull, who will direct the production, was co-director with Eddie Polo in his latest serial, "The Vanishing Dagger."

New Productions Are Planned

"THE ORCHID," a story by Marguerita C. Storrs, has just been purchased by Universal as a vehicle for Carmel Myers.

JOHN COLTON, who was engaged by Universal as a staff writer after he had sold them "The Cat That Walked Alone," declared by scenario experts to be one of the best screen stories ever written, has finished a comedy drama tentatively called "The Hooch Hound," which will probably be used by Harry Carey. "The Cat That Walked Alone" will serve Priscilla Dean after she has finished "Outside the Law.'

KATE of Crime Street," a story by Edgar Wallace, has been secured by Universal as the second starring vehicle for Carmel Myers, to follow her current production of "In Folly's Trail," being directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

AS soon as Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have cut and titled their recent comedy feature, "La La Lucille," they will begin work on the third of their series, "Once a Plumber——," by Edgar Franklin.

cording to schedule. Then one night their ship was blown off its course, and wrecked, and Laemmle and Alder found themselves far beyond their destination, on the shore of cannibal-land. But let Mr. Laemmle tell his own story.

Edward Laemmle Tells His Story

"In Java, with letters we had in our possession from the Secretary of State and Secretary of the Navy to all officials in foreign countries representing the United States we called on the Consul General of the United States, who, in turn, gave us an introduction to the Consul General of the Netherlands. He gave us letters to the Resident of Ambon, informing him of our mission and requesting his aid. We then equipped in Java and set sail for the South Coast of New Guinea.

"This place is absolutely the wildest, blackest spot on earth. On many occasions Chinese traders worked their way to these parts, but they never came back. After 21 days on the steamer we arrived at a little port called Merauke. This is a little military post, in Dutch New Guinea maintained by the Dutch Government for the protection of British subjects in New Guinea. Merauke has but a few troops commanded by native officers. The resident in charge of this fort upon reading our instructions to him, kindly loaned us a two-masted schooner called the Nautilus, in which we started for Cannibal land. We had a native captain and a Malay crew.

Ship-wrecked in Cannibal Land

"After being at sea two days we ran into foul weather, and soon the sea was running high. The skipper was drunk most of the time, which added not to our peace of mind. The fifth day out a heavy squall drove us up on a reef where our schooner was helplessly pinned. It was not long before the heavy seas opened up her bottom and the water rushed in relentlessly. The cameras being our first thought, they were quickly transferred with all the film we had into our dinghy and taken to shore under great difficulties. Our next thought was for our provisions. We were very lucky saving these, losing only three bags of rice.

"On landing, we were surrounded by hundreds of grotesque, blood-thirsty looking savages. Their welcome was not very cordial; in fact they indicated by gesticulations that we would be safer if we left the island. However, we explained to them through one of our Malay boys who had lived among the tribe, as a trader, that we meant them no harm, and that we were their friends. They consented to allow us to remain for the time being, without molesting us.

The Fate of the Missionary

"After getting our equipment and stores ashore we set up a rude shelter on the seashore. That night we alternated at guard duty, I taking the first watch while Alder slept. Never will I forget that first weird night, as I watched these devils dancing madly on the ghostly sands. The night seemed to be a blackness of shrieking, maddening devils with a thousand unseen eyes. After a few days we gained their confidence by distributing gifts among them, such as trinkets, looking glasses, tobacco and shining axes. We soon felt somewhat at ease and dared to start taking photographs. We heard about a missionary who had lived among the tribes for some years, and started to call on him. On reaching his hut we learned that he had been eaten a few months before we came. The little mission over which he had presided looked a sad and desolate wreck in this God-forgotten place.

"On our way to the interior we met sentinels intent on getting us out of the way. Every bush seemed to contain a menace. However, we were there and we had to make the best of it. We intended to photograph these people at all costs. On entering the village, the women seeing us became frightened and ran away. The men, however, stood as if to bar our way. We didn't know just how to take this welcome. From the mural decorations of the chief's hut, and the coat of arms which adorned its front, his welcome savored of stew rather than hospitality. This chief, from the number of skulls that decorated his abode, must have been a great connoisseur of human flesh and we didn't know whether or not he thought we might be a new brand. However, after a nervous little cough, we introduced ourselves and started the old method of handing gifts.

Under Suspicion by the Savages

"Soon we were in a fair way to gaining their favor. The women returned and we gave them necklaces and little shining trinkets which savage vanity appreciates. We lived with this tribe for some time in peace, getting very many good pictures of them and their customs. But things seemed to be going too smoothly. One morning we found several of the savages had died.

"Around them were clustered the women mourners. They were swaying and wailing the loss of their tribesmen. We could see by the glances of both the men and the women that they thought we were the cause of the deaths in their tribe. Immediately the thought of the missionary who had passed came to us. That night, if ever, did Mr. Alder and I take precautions against a surprise attack. All night long we could hear the wailing and mourning of the women and their blood curdling death song and booming of the tom-toms as the men danced and sang to placate the spirits that threw death and destruction upon them.

"SHIPWRECKED

Sensational!

Here's a real thriller! The authentic adventures of two daredevil Americans shipwrecked on the coast of New Guinea completely at the mercy of a tribe of cannibals, the lowest and most savage specimens of the human race. With the very first title your audience will see that this tremendous adventure on the part of Edward Laemmle and William F. Alder is one of the biggest things ever shown on the screens of the world—sensational because true—dramatic because this is not a picture of actors but of the perils of two cameramen—true, because the whole expedition is there for you to see. AMONG CANNIBALS"

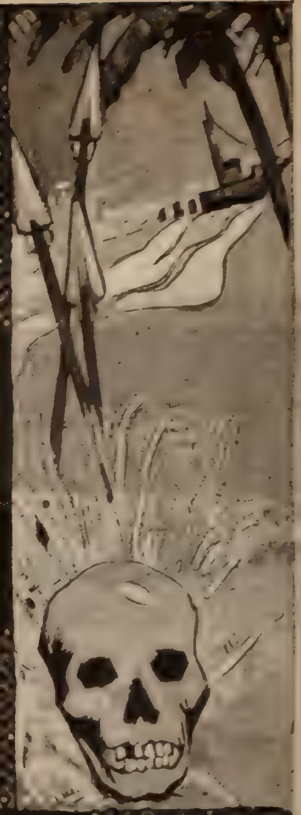
Dramatic! True!

Imagine the situation? You don't have to! It's all there in the pictures—their ship cast ashore by the storm—the wild savages rising out of the jungle and rushing down to the beach—the parley—then their virtual imprisonment for weeks during which time they were able to collect hundreds of the strangest scenes that any camera ever shot. Wild dances—children who play with human skulls—women whose bodies are scarred and seared to make them beautiful—men whose faces are tortured out of all human semblance to make them ferocious. Never have there been any moving pictures like these.

It gets you right at the start—the realization that here is the true pictorial history of an adventure that was never meant to be an adventure—a tremendous danger into which Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Alder were plunged without any wish on their part. And over it all hangs the constant danger—which the titles perfectly bring out—that each scene may be the last—that these two daring men may pay the penalty for their rashness and end as the only other white man who has lived among these savages, ended his life—in a big pot over a fire.



"The Parley. Our fate hung in the balance. One false move meant our finish. For once in our lives, we thanked Heaven we were both thin!"

Hell Broke Loose

"The next day the camp was in a restless state. We were met with surly looks everywhere. Even the elements seemed to be against us. As if to confirm their troubles, the air became suddenly a deadly calm. This lasted about one hour. Not a breath of air was stirring and the heat was intense. Then hell broke loose. The skies opened and a torrent of rain came down upon us, followed by crashing peals of thunder and bolts of lightning which seemed to rend the very earth from under us. Palms bent and snapped like matchwood. Some of the huts of the savages were swept from their foundations. Then suddenly, as came the storm, came the calm. Quiet and solitude seemed to reign supreme. Hardly a native was to be seen. Coming out of our hut we found only here and there an aged man too old to flee or some of the old women seated in groups whispering among themselves. The men and the women of the younger class ran into the jungles. That night the sky was lit, with a lurid glow from the many fires they burnt around which the savages danced to placate the spirits that seemed to bring death and destruction on them. All night long could be heard the weird nasal tones of the wailing of the women and the yelling of the warriors as they danced in the fitful light of their fires.

Head Dance—For Us?

"Seeing that there was nothing to do but make the best of it, we went back to our camp and though both of us were utterly exhausted we felt that it would be certain death for us if we should both go to sleep. Our Malay boy proved a wonderful help and friend to us through that terrible ordeal. The next day he came to us saying that he heard rumors that a head dance was to take place. Up to this time no outward demonstrations had been made against us but the savages, on hearing that we wished to be present at the head dance warned us to stay away. But we had come half way around the world to photograph just these things and we meant to do so.

Shot from Ambush

"Taking our cameras and silently concealing them in the underbrush, camouflaging our position with palm leaves, we started to photograph the dance, getting close-ups with our tel-photo lenses. The women are the chief feature of the head dance. With heads decorated with tufts of birds of paradise and cassowary feathers, the women danced in the center while the men wildly circled about them. The dance grew wilder and wilder and soon the spectators began to join in the chant. Some of them joined in the dance with the warriors. We managed to get several hundred feet of this and were happily grinding away when unfortunately a Kia Kia on his way to the dance spied us from behind. He gave one wild yell and rushed into the dancers, warning them of our presence. We hastily grabbed our camera and made for our camp with the whole tribe madly chasing us. We fired several shots at them and for the time they hesitated in coming on.

Relieved at Last

"On reaching camp you can imagine our joy to find the camp surrounded by Ambonese soldiers. Not having heard from us at the port from which we started we were missed and a detachment of native soldiers was sent to our rescue. They came just in time. There is nothing that the Kia Kia fears more than the Malay soldier. He knows that if he commits any depredation the government will bring retribution upon him, this in the form of killing all of the offending tribe and burning and laying waste their villages. We realized that there was nothing more to fear. We remained in camp that night giving the savages the last of our trinkets and tobacco, showing them we had no hard feelings. For the first time in weeks did we sleep the sleep of the just, while outside our hut could be heard the regular pacing of our sentinels or the sharp curt commands of the relief guard.

And We Were Presented With Two Heads

"The next morning the Chief called all his warriors to a grand council seated in a great circle of 500 savages in all the array of pomp and glory of cannibal-land. Never before had I seen Chief Umboo with such a bearing of majesty and superiority over his fellow savages. A short bamboo rod was stuck into the ground in the center of the circle. From this hung two heads, heads that had at one time been the property of an enemy who had passed into the happy hunting ground of cannibal-land. After a short oration to his warriors Chief Umboo requested us to step into the circle with him. With outstretched arms he told us through our interpreter that the Kia Kia was our friend and would do no harm to us. Taking the two heads dangling from the pole he presented them to Mr. Alder and myself, telling us that with these heads he extended to us his sincere and warmest friendship, the presenting of the heads meaning that he will never take ours but rather give us their heads. We, of course, accepting them with all the graciousness and pomp due a cannibal-king, telling Chief Umboo and his warriors we were going to leave them. The circle rose and danced around us in a farewell dance. As soon as things quieted down a bit we packed our equipment and with the aid of the soldiers started on the long hike overland to the nearest seaport.

UNIVERSAL-MADE

Publicity for "The Red Lane"

ADVANCE STORY

Frank Mayo is to appear at the .... Theatre next .... in the latest Universal photodrama, "The Red Lane," of which so many flattering reports have been heard that local interest in its appearance is quite keen. Holman Day, famous American Novelist, is the author of the story, and the direction is by Lynn Reynolds, who supervised the work of Mr. Mayo in "The Brute Breaker," and of Harry Carey in "Overland Red."

"The Red Lane" refers to the blood-stained road used in smuggling contraband into Canada across the north Main boundary line. In the story Frank Mayo appears as a government customs officer sent to halt the lawless traffic of the French-Canadian smugglers and who naturally incurs the hatred of the worst element of the north woods.

Vetal Beaulieu, whose saloon, straddling the international line, is the headquarters of the vicious element, has a daughter who has been raised in a French convent. She returns home to surprise her father and learns, for the first time, the traffic in which Beaulieu is engaged, and of the fact that she has been promised in marriage by her father to Dave Roi, leader of the smugglers. While in the act of defying her parent Norman Aldrich, a wounded customs officers, appeals for help at the Beaulieu place. Marie goes to his assistance; they exchange confidences and fall in love. Here begins a story of intrigue, adventure and romance filled with sentiment and red-blooded action.

Picturesque backgrounds and exquisite photography add to the splendid acting of the star. The supporting company includes Lilian Rich, Jean Hersholt, Paul Weigel, Karl Formes, James Mason, Frank Thorne and many others.

REGARDING THE STAR

Frank Mayo, the Universal star who appears at the .... Theatre on .... in "The Red Lane," a story by Holman Day, is, according to the concensus of opinion of screen directors, the leading type of American film hero.

The first and foremost reason why Mayo has attained his present success is because he is 100 per cent. man, before the camera and in real life. He is that tall, strong, virile type of young American that audiences like, rather than the fluffy, perfumed and manicured sort that held sway in the early history of filmdom.

Most important of all, Frank Mayo is an actor. He wears the histrionic mantle of his grandfather, Frank Mayo, the First, the most beloved actor of his generation, while his father, Edwin T. Mayo, was one of the foremost dramatic stars of two decades ago.

Frank Mayo began his stage career when he was five years old, playing the child in his grandfather's production of "Davy Crockett." He has been prominent on the stage and screen of America and England for the past ten years, and since appearing in Universal features has gradually won his way to the top.

Mayo is essentially an out-of-doors man and is seen at his best in red-blooded plays of the open air. In the "Brute Breaker" and in "Lasca" he scored his biggest successes, and "The Red Lane," directed by Lynn Reynolds, is said to give him the best opportunity he has yet found on the screen.

Riding, hunting and boxing are the star's favorite sports, and one who sees his physical combats in the various stories in which he has appeared will realize that he must keep in the pink of condition.

NEW LEADING LADY FOR FRANK MAYO

The selection of Lillian Rich to play the role of the little French-Canadian girl opposite Frank Mayo in "The Red Lane," brings a new personality to the list of screen leading women. Judging from the former film work accomplished by this delightful young English actress, she is ripe for leading honors.

Miss Rich is comparatively new to the screen, having appeared only in about four or five feature productions. She was seen in support of Mary MacLaren in "The Pointing Finger" and with Francelia Billington in "The Day She Paid." It was her work in the latter production which particularly attracted the attention of Lynn Reynolds, the well-known director, and when he was commissioned to produce "The Red Lane," with Frank Mayo, announced for next .... at the .... Theatre he immediately thought of Miss Rich as ideal for the chief feminine role.

But although Lillian Rich is new to the silent drama, she has been on the stage since a child. Born in London, she entered the ballet school when quite young, and before she was fifteen was singing and dancing in the big musical revues at the London Hippodrome, the Alhambra and other famous music halls. During the war she played a prominent role in Harry Lauder's London production, "Three Cheers."

The death of an aunt in Canada about a year ago brought Miss Rich to America, and she was induced to take a trip to California before returning to England. She fell in love with the country and decided to remain, especially as she received an offer in several Mack Sennett comedies. Then came the more serious drama, and now she is well on her way to stardom.

NOTES

Beauty spots of California are pictured in many of the scenes in "The Red Lane," a new Universal feature starring Frank Mayo, which will be shown at the .... Theatre on .... Big Bear was the picturesque location selected by Lynn Reynolds, the director of "The Red Lane," for many of the scenes, while Ocean Valley was used as the scene of the Arcadian settlement.

Paul Weigel, the sterling character actor who appears in the role of Father Leclaire, in "The Red Lane," the photodrama starring Frank Mayo, which is announced for next .... at the .... Theatre, is considered one of the ablest actors on the screen. He has few equals in the art of depicting unusual and difficult parts, and appears to splendid advantage in this Holman Day story.

Lillian Rich, who appears in the role of the little French-Canadian girl in "The Red Lane," playing opposite the star, Frank Mayo, is well on her way to stardom, although she has been in America a little over a year and on the screen but nine months. She was a musical comedy favorite on the London stage in her early teens. "The Red Lane" will be shown to the patrons of the .... Theatre next ....

The artistic touch of Lynn Reynolds, master of out-door photoplays, is easily discernible in "The Red Lane," the story by Holman Day in which Frank Mayo is starring at the .... Theatre. Mr. Reynolds has spent most of his life in the pursuit of open air sports and since going into pictures has devoted himself almost entirely to nature stories. He directed Frank Mayo in "The Brute Breaker" and Harry Carey in "Overland Red."

THE STORY

MARIE BEAULIEU, who has spent most of her life in a convent, returns home and is horrified to learn that her father is a saloon keeper and the intimate friend of smugglers. His bar straddles the Canadian border, with a half of the room on each side of the line. The night of her arrival he closes his saloon to talk to her, but later admits Dave Roi, a smuggler to whom Vetal Beaulieu, the father, had promised Marie in marriage. The girl, however, will have nothing to do with Roi.

Norman Aldrich, a young American customs officer, is shot by Roi's men that night when they are trying to smuggle sheep across the border. Aldrich stumbles to Beaulieu's door and asks for assistance, but Beaulieu and Roi refuse to admit him. Marie brings him into the house and binds up his wounds. The next day Marie leaves her father. She meets an old Arcadian fiddler, who takes her to Father Leclaire.

Arcadian settlers are being forced from their homes through the machinations of American lumber magnates. Father Leclaire tries to suppress the growing discontent and settle the trouble peaceably. Attorney Blais, representative of the settlers in the American State Assembly, agrees to help Roi steal Marie away in return for Roi's support at the polls for re-election.

Marie is kdnapped and rescued by Aldrich just as she is being forced by her father into a marriage with Roi. In the mix-up which follows, Vetal, the father, is killed. Roi picks up one of the customs agent's exploded cartridge shells on the field and starts a report that Aldrich killed the girl's father.

On election day, Roy brings a band of thugs to the polls to prevent the supporters of Aldrich, who is running against Blais for reelection as representative of the settlers, from voting. A tremendous battle ensues between the thugs and the settlers and the settlers are victorious until their leader, Aldrich, is arrested for the murder of Beaulieu, by the assistant deputy sheriff, who is in the pay of Blais. Father Leclaire attempts to prevent the arrest but is thrown aside and just as it seems as if the scheme of Blais and Roi is succeeding, the half-witted sheep herder who shot Beaulieu out of revenge, confesses to the shooting and the whole plan of deception falls to the ground. The crooked deputy is forced to arrest Roi and Blais, and Aldrich is elected in triumph. Nothing now prevents the marriage of Marie and Aldrich.

Baldwin, Buck and Anna, on receiving a telegram from the Atlas Co., set out for Warpee's. Warpee goes to find Rosa and attacks her as she is extricating the deed from a hiding place but he is captured by Snyder, now a full fledged moon rider and Egbert, and flung into the quicksands.

Buck and Baldwin, in an effort to see Rosa, get into a fight with the moon riders. Buck is taken prisoner but Baldwin escapes and rides away to arouse his ranchers, but Egbert has forestalled him and the first rancher to whom Baldwin appeals, an ally of the moon riders, knocks him out, ties him fast in his cellar and turns on a pipe to drown him. Then he leaves him there, so that Anna, now thoroughly alarmed at her father's absence, follows him to the rancher's cabin, she finds it deserted, and little realizes that her father is drowning below.

In the meantime Buck has been lowered into a pit in which a fire has been laid.

Grant	Eddie Polo
Nell	Peggy O'Dare
Claypool	Thomas Lingham
Elizabeth Latimer	Thelma Percy

BADLY bruised but with no bones broken, Grant is picked up by a man who is driving a wagon and they start back to town. Meanwhile the rustlers kill the Deputy and succeed in breaking jail. They are racing out of town just as Grant drives in. Jumping from the buckboard to a horse he starts in pursuit and by going across country gains a position ahead of them on the road out of town. Swinging a full forty-foot loop Grant ropes all six rustlers and turns them over to the posse who have followed. Back in town Grant wires the Chief of the United Detective Agency that he has captured the band and will start back to Los Angeles.

Meanwhile Nell discovers that Claypool has apparently deserted her, and that he has also taken with him Elizabeth Latimer, whom they have been holding for blackmail purposes.

Claypool, in fact, has arrived at his home in Los Angeles, and there reads that a Mr. Decker, the possessor of a rare collection of antiques, is to exhibit them that night. As Decker is known to be the owner of the sheath of the vanishing dagger, Claypool determines to attend the exhibition and to recover the sheath. Learning from Arizona that Grant has captured the rustlers and is probably on his way to Los Angeles, Claypool realizes that he must prevent him from arriving.

Nell again manages to ensnare Grant, and causes him to miss the first train. But by a mighty effort he pulls up the post to which he had been tied, proceeds to the depot, and there notifies the detective agency that he is taking the next train. The Chief of the detectives at once wires in return that he is to proceed to the Decker home as an additional safeguard for the jewels to be displayed that night. A spy in the detective agency notified Claypool what is happening, and Claypool at once dispatches some of his men to meet the approaching train, and to prevent Grant from arriving in Los Angeles.

These men board the train on the outskirts of the city and finding Grant alone in one of the cars, attack him. They succeed in knocking him out, and as a fire starts, caused by a lantern overturned, in the fight, the crooks detach the coach from the rest of the train, it being the last car of the train and then drop it.

As this has happened on a steep grade, the lone coach, now a mass of flames, backs down the grade increasing its speed every moment. The car is of course missed and the train starts back after it, but as the runaway coach comes speeding to a high trestle, it crashes down through it to the river bed below, where, as it furiously burns, Grant lays senseless under it.

CLIFF CHURCH, hidden among the peaks near Wildkirchli, is the highest chapel in Switzerland. The church can be safely reached but there is a short cut or two to it, where a misstep may mean a life. Near the church is the famous Wildkirchli Inn, much frequented by mountain climbers.

These are expensive times, but there are practical economies which can be carried out. One is to have a torn garment repaired by a process called textile reweaving, in which a sufficient amount of threads are unraveled from the seams and are woven into the fabric.

In this issue of the magazine, there is an exposition of what happens when a motor car is cranked, and this certainly will prove a revelation to thousands of owners of automobiles.

There is a collection of jokes and a brisk animated by Leslie Elton, featuring Cinema Luke.

"Kid-ing the Landlord"

One-Reel Star Comedy

Featuring Bartine Burkette

BETTY and her husband were blessed with a baby girl but for that piece of happiness they were banned by every landlord. At last they find a good natured agent who accepts a bribe and rents them a house. The landlord comes to inspect them, and they have no end of time hiding the baby, trying out such places as the icebox. The agent even goes to the extent of claiming the baby as his own in the presence of the landlord, which naturally leads to an angry scene with his wife.

And to add to the misfortune, the landlord lives next door, so that it is a perilous process handing the baby in and out of the window, when it has to have its airing. During one of these incidents, a "cop" gets interested in the mysterious process, and it looks like a whole lot of trouble, only the baby begins to "vamp" the landlord, and the landlord takes such a fancy to it, that he accepts good naturedly the fact that his tenants had been "kidding" him and all are at peace with each other.

ADVANCE STORY

AFTER the tremendous success scored by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in their first Universal comedy feature, "Everything But the Truth," every theatregoer is looking forward to their next production, "La La Lucille," which will be shown at the ——— Theatre on———.

"La La Lucille" is the work of Fred Jackson, author of such stage successes as "A Full House" and "The Naughty Wife," and was the hit of Broadway last season as a musical comedy. It was adapted for the use of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran by Philip Hurn, and the roles of Johnny Smith, who marries the juggling girl, and Britton Hughes, who elopes with a young girl from the South, suit the stars to perfection.

Even on the stage "La La Lucille" was a riot of laughter, in spite of the fact that many of the funniest incidents happened behind the scenes and were merely mentioned by the players. In the photodrama every amusing happening and situation is actually shown, and the result is an hour and a half of constant merriment.

The story concerns a little vaudeville juggler whose marriage to young Smith causes his aunt to disinherit him. When her will stipulates that he must divorce his bride in order to win two million dollars, the young couple schemes to perform the letter, but not the spirit of the instrument. A score of very amusing characters aid in the complications, played by such excellent artists as Anne Cornwall, Rosa Gore, Gladys Walton, Dorothy Wolbert, Fred Gamble, Charles McHugh, Arthur Thalasso, Frank Earle, Burton Halbert and others.

Some very elaborate settings, some replicas of different portions of one of Broadway's most famous hotels, provide a rich background for the feast of fun.

REGARDING THE STAR

AS well introduce George M. Cohan to Broadway or Uncle Joe Cannon to the Capitol at Washington as to present Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran to the theatregoing public. If there are any entertainers of the silver sheet who are a fixture in the silent drama they are Eddie and Lee, who have provided more laughter through the medium of the screen than any other two people in the world.

After winning laurels as comedians in vaudeville and musical comedy, Lyons and Moran turned their attention to the motion picture as a fertile field for the exploitation of their mirth creating abilities. Up to that time, and in many instances the belief still remains, producers of screen comedies were under the impression that the only way to provoke laughter in the films was to resort to the coarsest of horseplay.

Be that as it may, Eddie and Lee found no competition in their line. They at once began the production of comedy playlets characterized by good taste and intelligence and they were a hit from the start. The demand for the Lyons and Moran brand of Universal comedies became so great that "the boys" were compelled to turn out one a week—a feat they continued for five years.

Six months ago Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, decided the time was ripe for Lyons and Moran to produce comedy features, and he at once secured the best available material or the purpose. The first five-reel comedy, "Everything But the Truth," recently released, proved Mr. Laemmle to be correct, and their current feature, "La La Lucille," soon to be seen at ——— Theatre, promises to be a greater success on the screen than it was on the Broadway stage.

FOR THE HERALD

THE Juggling Jaynes were a success in vaudeville. Jaynes thought it was his remarkable dexterity which won applause but it was really his pretty young daughter, Lucille, in silken breeches and with bewitching smile. Then Lucille married Johnnie Smith and left the stage, and his act "flopped." Johnnie was the impecunious nephew of the rich and Puritanical Roberta Smith, who was scandalized when she learned that a Smith had married a girl who wore tights. One day a lawyer informed them that Miss Roberta had died leaving two million dollars to her nephew upon condition that he divorced his bride. Upon his failure to do this the money would go to some grasping relatives who were anxious to see Johnnie disinherited.

Johnnie and Lucille plan to divorce each other and remarry, and for the purpose the girl selects for a correspondent for her husband the homeliest woman in New York. At the same time Britton Hughes elopes with a pretty Southern girl and chased by an irate father, they select for their honeymoon eve the same New York hotel where Johnnie and his co-respondent plan to be discovered by his wife and her attorney.

It is hardly necessary to say that the resulting complications are such as to keep laughter popping on all twelve cylinders, as is the case in "La La Lucille," recently the biggest musical comedy success on Broadway and now adapted for the screen and played by those famous farceurs, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. It will be seen at the ——— Theatre next ———.

ADVANCE NOTES

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, who thoroughly established themselves as comedy feature stars of the first magnitude with their first big production, "Everything But the Truth," are said to have hit the bull's-eye once more, even with more certainty, in their second comedy feature, "La La Lucille," which is announced for next ———at the ——— Theatre. "La La Lucille" was the big musical comedy hit of last season on Broadway.

"La La Lucille," which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will offer the ——— ——— Theatre as the second of their big comedy features, is the work of Fred Jackson, famous playwright and author of such well-known footlight successes as "A Full House," "The Naughty Wife," and "The Velvet Lady." "La La Lucille" was a tremendous hit at the Henry Miller Theatre, New York, the greater part of last season.

Anne Cornwall, the charming little Universal star who was so delightful in "The Path She Chose" and "The Girl In the Rain," and who supported Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in their last comedy feature, "Everything But the Truth," is again serving these comedy stars as chief eminine foil in their latest laughter production, "La La Lucille," which will be shown at the ——— Theatre next ———.

Gladys Walton, a fascinating ingenue of the dramatic and musical comedy stage, is playing opposite Lee Moran in Lyons and Moran's latest comedy feature, "La La Lucille," announced for next ——— at the ——— Theatre. Miss Walton plays the role of a little eloping bride from the South who meets with some amusing adventures on her honeymoon trip to New York.

Gladys Walton, Lee Moran, Anne Cornwall and Eddie Lyons in "La La Lucille."

Four Stars Instead of Two

ONE of the very best pictures ever released as a Special Attraction is the second Eddie Lyons-Lee Moran production, "La La Lucille." It has every right to be a superb picture. In the first place, it was written by Fred Jackson, the playwright and short story writer. It first appeared as a Broadway comedy and was the hit of the entire season. Of course, the limitations of the stage prevented a great deal of the action being shown, and all of these complications had to be told in the conversation of the various players. The screen has no such limitation. It shows every little last thing in faithful and ample detail, even to the great lobby of the Knickerbocker Hotel.

In the second place, "La La Lucille" has four stars instead of the two who are advertised, Lyons and Moran. The other two came into the picture without their halos, but they are there none the less, and the thousands of exhibitors who book this picture are going to get the benefit of their presence. The other two are Anne Cornwall and Gladys Walton.

When Miss Cornwall was in New York last Fall she saw the musical comedy, "La La Lucille." She immediately fell in love with the part of Lucille and hoped some day she might be able to portray it on the screen. When she played with Lyons and Moran in "Everything but the Truth" she continually talked about "La La Lucille" until Eddie and Lee were so impressed they secured the screen rights to the piece. Since then, however, Anne Cornwall was promoted to stardom, and gained individual success in such productions as "The Path She Chose" and "The Girl in the Rain." When she learned that Lyons and Moran were to produce "La La Lucille" in the films she volunteered to forego her stardom for a while in order that she might play with the comedy pair and portray the rôle of Lucille. That's how the third star got into the cast.

The fourth star is Gladys Walton, a very beautiful girl, and an entire newcomer in the screen firmament. When Miss Gladys, whose entire experience has embodied an ingénue rôle in a musical comedy, was cast for the rôle of Lee's wife, she was not a star at all, never expected to be a star. In fact, it was her first picture. But she gave so much promise and was so beautiful on the screen that she was offered an opportunity to star in her next picture with Jack Perrin as her leading man. Of course, Miss Walton was not quite on to the peculiarly fast type of comedy that Lyons and Moran practise. Occasionally she may be observed a little "out of the picture" in "La La Lucille," but it is only for a moment, so that she can catch her breath. But she is a quick pupil, and Eddie and Lee predict as brilliant a future for her as for any of the score of screen stars they have started on the road to stardom. That's how and why there are four stars instead of two in "La La Lucille," their second feature.

It is not fair to stop with the stars either. There are a number of well-known and exceptional players in the remarkable photoplay. Fred Gamble has been with the Lyons-Moran outfit off and on for eight years; Arthur Thalasso has played heavy parts with Charlie Chaplin so many times that he is familiar to almost every one; Burton Halvert is a well-known vaudeville juggler; Sam Appel is well-known to every

A MAN and two women, fugitives from justice, reach a small country hotel in Virginia, closely pursued by two officers. The man, Beverly, tells one of the women, Judith, to get into her riding habit and go for a ride in the woods as though nothing unusual was happening. He gives her a package of saws to smuggle to him in jail in case he is arrested while she is gone.

A storm breaks while Judith is in the woods, her horse runs away and she sprains her ankle. She is found by Boone Pendleton, a rich young man who takes her to his cabin nearby in the woods. The river rises and they are marooned there for several days. They fall in love but Judith tells him she can never marry him. Meanwhile they pretend they are brother and sister.

When Judith returns to the hotel she finds that Beverly and Vera, the other woman, are in jail. She visits them and slips the saws to Beverly, with which they effect their escape. Meanwhile Judith has started for their country place. She is followed by a detective from a bonding agency. Beverly and Vera follow and meet Boone along the way when their automobile breaks down. They persuade him to take them to their country place in his car.

Judith sees them coming and is horrified to see the man she loves with her two associates. She gets a package from its hiding place, climbs out of a back window and hides the package in a hollow tree. Boone, who had taken his car around to the garage, follows her and sees this. So does the detective. The latter arrests Beverly. They interfere in the struggle and Judith urges Beverly to submit to arrest. The whole thing is then explained. Judith is Beverly's sister. They had come of good parents but as children they were left orphans.

Beverly had obtained a position and had been heavily bonded. He had married Vera, the daughter of a horsetrainer, and had stolen a package of securities. When Judith learns about it, her loyalty and gratitude to her brother makes her stand by him, though urging him to "go straight." Judith promises to give up the securities if her brother is not prosecuted and as the detectives has been given the authority he secures the package and all ends happily.

"I've been following that bent fender—not a license plate." The detective was shrewd, but he was outwitted by "The Girl In the Rain."

Alone in a deserted cabin, miles from nowhere, they pretended they were brother and sister. But the heart would not be deceived. See "The Girl In the Rain" with Anne Cornwall.

The lightning flashed and the thunder pealed as the fleeting horse dropped to the ground. "Oh, God! Why couldn't you let it strike me?" Thus wailed "The Girl In the Rain."

The rain ceased—the waters subsided—but the tide of love flowed steadily to flood.

She had given her word, and to keep it she threw away her last chance for happiness. But fate's not always cruel and "The Girl In the Rain" saw a way out.

The ties of blood were stronger than the law; but all else faded to insignificance in the light of pure love.

ADVANCE STORY

"The Girl In the Rain," most recent Universal feature, starring Anne Cornwall, will occupy the screen at the ———— Theatre next————. Varick Vanardy, popular novelist, wrote the story, which was adapted for the films by Doris Schroeder. Rollin Sturgeon directed the production, and Universal, it is claimed, gave him every advantage in the way of cast, settings and locations to vitalize the stirring tale of the Virginia woods.

Anne Cornwall makes her debut as a star in "The Girl In the Rain," a privilege won by her splendid acting and winsome personality displayed in "The Copperhead" with Lionel Barrymore; in "Everything But the Truth," and "La La Lucille" with Lyons and Moran, and in "The Path She Chose," in which she had the featured role.

"The Girl In the Rain" tells of a young absconder, accompanied by two girls—one his sister and the other his wife—who seek shelter in a rural Virginia hotel from the pursuing authorities of the law. Judith, the sister, is determined to leave the pair, having urged her brother to go straight, but he pleads with her to hide some saws, go for a ride in the woods and, if they are apprehended, to smuggle the tools into the jail. He further promises that if he escapes this time he will lead an honest life. In the woods the girl's horse is frightened by a peal of thunder and her ankle is injured as she is thrown to the ground. She is picked up by a young man bound for his country lodge, and the heavy flood and the girl's injury prevents them from leaving the isolated shack for several days.

How the romance thus begun is ruthlessly broken up by the arrival of the police and the situations which lead to the stirring climax are told in a picture of compelling interest.

57 INCHES OF TALENT

Anne Cornwall So Small She Gets Away With Half-fare Ticket Just For Fun.

IF talent were measured by inches Anne Cornwall, the star of the latest Universal production, "The Girl In the Rain," now showing at the ———— Theatre, would not rate very high in the world of the silent drama. Anne is several inches shy of five feet and constructed accordingly. She is the sort of girl who would be described as "no bigger'n a minute" and "knee-high to a grasshopper." But each of Anne's fifty-seven inches represents a different variety of cleverness, and her magnetic appeal is quite unusual.

Miss Cornwall has a quaint manner of costuming, designing her own clothes along original lines, but quite in keeping with her unusual personality. The riding habit she wears in "The Girl In the Rain" has attracted much attention and has been copied by a famous Fifth Avenue costumer.

Anne is so tiny that on a recent trip from Los Angeles to San Francisco, she wagered a friend she could ride for half fare. Curling her feet under her on the chair and letting down her dark-brown curls, she handed the conductor a child's ticket, and it was punched without a word. After she had collected the amount of the wager (this seems to be necessary as a character episode), she explained the matter to the conductor and paid him the balance of the fare.

MAKING UP A RIVER

For "The Girl In the Rain," Anne Cornwall Just Had To Have A Potomac River, So They Dolled Up the Sacramento For Her.

BEAUTIFUL scenes along the Sacramento River, which winds its sinuous way from San Francisco Bay to the foot of Mount Shasta, will be seen in "The Girl In the Rain," a Universal feature starring Anne Cornwall, which is to be seen at the ———— Theatre next ————. The scenes of the play are laid in Virginia and along the Potomac River, and the location department at Universal City was able to select sites along the Sacramento which were almost duplicates of well-known points along the eastern body of water.

A huge river boat, in regular service between Sacramento and San Francisco, was chartered for ten days from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company and transported to Northern California, near the headwaters of the picturesque river. Many of the scenes in the story occur on the decks of this boat and on the landings along the shore.

"The Girl In the Rain" was adapted by Doris Schoeder from a popular novel by Varick Vanardy, and the story takes on special interest because it introduces a new star in the person of Anne Cornwall, a former musical comedy favorite who is comparatively new to the screen. It was directed by Rollin Sturgeon who is responsible for many of Universal's best productions, and the new screen star was given the advantage of excellent support.

REGARDING THE STAR

THE surprising thing is not the rapid rise on the screen of Anne Cornwall, who is being starred by Universal in "The Girl In the Rain," but the fact that this dainty bit of femininity should have appeared in half a dozen photoplays before producers discovered that she is just the type of girlhood that audiences throughout the world are begging for. Making her first public appearance on the stage of the Princess Theatre, New York, in one of those exquisite musical comedies for which that playhouse is famous, it was not long before she was leading a number and doing a sole dance. At the end of the season she played in two pictures around the New York studios. She returned to the stage in the fall, playing an ingenue role with the Dolly Sisters and Harry Fox in "Oh, Look."

Two more film productions followed but it was not until she played with Lionel Barrymore in "The Copperhead" that producers began to bid for her services. Universal was fortunate in securing her services, and she was cast as leading lady with Lyons and Moran in "Everything But the Truth." She was next featured in "The Path She Chose," and then came her stellar appearance in "The Girl In the Rain," in which she was directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

Entirely New Idea In "The Dragon's Net"

So long as the world goes round it will happen--

"Once to Every Woman"

AMERICAN moving pictures are doing more to cement peaceable relationship between the United States and Japan than secret diplomacy, naval programs and other forms of international [illegible]ngs, it is the opinion of Henry McRae, who recently arrived in New York from the Orient, where he directed Universal's expedition to Japan, China and the Philippines, filming Marie Walcamp in a new international serial, "The Dragon's Net."

In a recent interview, McRae explained how American made moving pictures, which are immensely popular in the Land of the Rising Sun, have engendered in the common people of Japan, a wholesome respect and a sympathetic feeling for America and Americans our ways and customs. They have caused a great change in the attitude of the Japanese towards America. They are being educated in American achievements by the moving pictures they see daily on their screens.

"The American Government owes a lot to the American moving picture as a result of the good American movies are doing in the Orient," said McRae. "They are the greatest possible propaganda for peace between the United States and Japan. The average Japanese mind is no longer a fertile field for anti-American propaganda. The common people of Japan are no longer ignorant of Americans and their achievements.

"They have learned that American people are human—that they are lovers of fair play and justice, and that the average American is anything but a coward. They have begun to pick up American mannerisms. They are keenly interested in the way we dress, the way we walk and the way we transact business. Japanese women watch the screen eagerly to learn how American women conduct themselves under various conditions. Leading Japanese expressed to me the opinion that Japan owes more to America than to any other nation—that the proximity and influence of America is absolutely necessary to the progress of Japan, and that it is through the moving picture that the greatest linking up of the two countries is taking place.

"To the Universal Film Manufacturing Company should go the greatest credit for this state of affairs, as Universal has by far the most widely distributed film product in Japan. When I arrived in Japan with Marie Walcamp and the company, I found that 'Universal' is a magic word in that country. It proved to be the 'open sesame' everywhere we went.

"For instance, we would take the company out on location, and would find ourselves almost mobbed by large crowds of curious natives. We had only to explain that we were taking 'Universal moving pictures' and the police would exert themselves to facilitate our work. The police in Japan are on the job every minute. One day we drove out to the royal palace to take some scenes. The plaza around the entrance seemed deserted. Hardly had we stepped to the ground from our jinrickahas, when a crowd began to gather—pedestrians, cyclists and others. They stood several yards away, watching us intently. Then one of them ventured over and inquired as to our business. They were all secret service men, guarding the palace. When we said 'Universal' to them, they grinned broadly, extended themselves with hospitality and let us 'shoot' to our heart's content. We met the same courtesy in the great fortified district of Kamakura. Foreigners are not permitted to take a camera within miles of this district. We met with no opposition, except the request not to photograph sky-lines. Needless to say, we didn't photograph any sky-lines.

"We were on the go all of the time. There was one reception after another for Miss Walcamp and the members of the party. We were wined and dined by Columbia, Cornell, Yale and other American college graduates, all anxious to show their esteem for the country that had educated them. Miss Walcamp was almost mobbed by Japanese photoplay fans every time she appeared in public. Everywhere we went in the Orient, we found that Miss Walcamp was one of the most popular screen actresses. She and Eddie Polo, another Universal serial star, seem to share honors throughout the East. Many of the screen favorites whose names are household words in America and Europe, are almost unknown in the Orient.

"In China, our reception was just as hearty as it had been in Japan. From all I could learn, we were the first Picturesque setting used by Lynn Reynolds for the location of "The Red Lane," starring Frank Mayo, The star is eating lunch with his leading lady.

What Harrison Says About "THE RED LANE"

A beautiful picture, full of human appeal. It holds the interest tense. Quite a few of the situations are thrilling.

It is an outdoor story, taken among the hills and forest on the line between the United States and Canada. Simple folk, including a kind-hearted priest, are the characters. Land sharks evict the farmers from their homes. The hero, a customs officer, is shot by some smugglers, who are co-operating with the land sharks. The heroine, daughter of one of the smugglers, just back from the convent, treats his wounded arm. She runs away from home, because her father wants her to marry the gang leader. The gang kidnaps her, but the hero saves her. The hero takes up the cause of the farmer folk and wins out. He marries the girl.

It should give good satisfaction.—Univ. July 12. 4890 ft. 57 to 70 m.

A great production that sweeps you up out of the tawdry atmosphere of so-called "society plays" with their everlasting vamps and parlor snakes and gives you a thrilling picture of adventure on the high-seas, the love of a strong, silent, self-sacrificing man for a beautiful woman, a wild struggle for the mastery of a colony of outlaw beach-combers and then, the whirl of a tropical revolution — with Yank Barstow fighting his way through the streets to the boat that will carry the one woman and himself back to home and happiness. Play "UNDER CRIMSON SKIES" for a great photodrama that will grip and hold every person in your audiences—it is one of the truly great productions of the year.

HARRY CAREY
UNIVERSAL

Carey May Lecture

HARRY CAREY is seriously considering the idea of leaving the screen for a few months to take the lecture platform, using as his subject the legends and traditions of old California. He has just finished "Blue Streak McCoy," by H. H. Van Loan. Carey, who is best known as a star of Universal films, has given the great West much of his attention during the last twelve or fifteen years. His biggest successes on the screen have been achieved in stories by writers of the Far West and dealing with events in the development of California and other States beyond the Rockies.

It was Harry Carey's love for the West that prompted him, a son of a New York judge, and himself a graduate of Columbia Law School, to take to the stage so that he might travel and see the country that had always been in his mind. Not long ago, when Carey was on location near the California desert to take scenes for "Marked Men," by that famous California novelist, Peter B. Kyne, he entertained a small town high school class with stories of the Forty-Niners, the Vigilantes and other picturesque figures of California history. His talk was so hugely enjoyed that since then the actor has been besieged with requests for lectures.

Carey is conversant with the works of and personally acquainted with many of the modern writers on California, especially Peter B. Kyne, Steward Edward White and John Stevens McGroarty. He has also played on the screen many of the stories of the late Bret Harte and has made a study of California tradition from the establishment of the first mission to the present day.

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" Opens at Astor Theatre

ONE OF THE STRONGHOLDS OF THE DRAMA GIVES WAY TO THE FILMS WHEN UNIVERSAL PICTURE CROWDS THE HOUSE

ANOTHER Broadway theatre stepped into the ranks of moving pictures July 4, when the Astor Theatre, Broadway at Forty-fifth street, was thrown open for an indefinite run of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the unusual pictures of actual cannibals taken in New Guinea for Universal by William F. Alder and Edward Laemmle, two Universal cameramen.

The opening was heralded for many days by huge paintings over the theatre entrance, showing portraits of the most weird and ferocious of the cannibal men and women. In addition to these, there was a series of door panels announcing the coming attraction in gripping and grewsome phrases. Photographs of various types of the savages shown in the Universal film were used with the door panels.

The crowd that daily pressed around the theatre entrance to read the novel announcements was indicative of the crowds which flocked to the Astor on the opening night and which filled the theatre on the succeeding days of the "cannibal" showing.

In arranging the Broadway presentation of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," Universal established a schedule of popular prices and adopted a continuous performance, six shows being run off between 1 P. M. and 11. No attempt was made to detract from the photoplay by a prologue, stage setting, or music other than the orchestra which played during intermissions and accompanying the action of the features.

In other words, "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" is standing on its own merits as a Broadway attraction. With it is shown a Century comedy and several subjects from the New Screen Magazine. There the show stops. It is a novelty for Broadway, long accustomed to lots of dressing with its moving pictures, all the way from boiled down grand opera to the modern type of illustrated song.

Universal may present other pictures at the Astor after "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" has completed its run, and they will be presented by the same method, as a straight moving picture show, without trimmings. If this is done successfully it will be another step towards the inevitable acceptance by Broadway of the moving picture feature on the same basis as any other theatrical presentation.

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" also opened in the La Salle Theatre, Chicago, July 10, for a run of several weeks.

WITHIN fourteen years, scientists have calculated, these savages, the Kia Kia Cannibals of New Guinea, will have vanished from the face of the earth. With them will go all traces of their customs, dress and manner of living. These six reels of film will be the only authentic record of the lowest form of humanity known to science. Here is your chance to show your people something that the rest of the world, in after years, may never be able to see. Book this astounding picture now—to-day—without fail.

"THE cannibals of the south sea islands provide a thrilling offering this week at the Astor. There was almost a riot yesterday to get seats. Nothing of the terrifying phase of cannibal life has been omitted."

The New York SUN and HERALD says

"OCCASIONALLY, real life outstrips the movies. This picture shows how a couple of men were shipwrecked on a savage island and ran into a cannibal tribe.

The New York EVENING TELEGRAM says

"VERY good pictures of cannibals and cannibal life. "SHIPWRECKED AMONG CANNIBALS' is good entertainment. A tiger hunt in the jungle of Siam was most exciting."

Bon Voyage
Dinner and Dance to

"THE most enjoyable night of my life," declared Mr. Laemmle with deep emotion in his voice as he arose at the end of an evening of heartfelt felicitation and au revoir sentiment on the part of several hundred friends and employees, last Wednesday night, at the Biltmore. The occasion was the Bon Voyage Dinner and Dance given by the "U" Girls to the president and treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., who sailed the following day for Europe, accompanied by their families and quite an entourage of attendants.

The party had been planned by The "U" Girls, an organization of Universal employees as a surprise to Mr. Laemmle and through the assistance of Mr. R. H. Cochrane, who had invited Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Stern to be his guests at a very important business dinner that night, the surprise was successfully engineered. As Mr. Laemmle entered the music room, the lights, which had been turned out, were suddenly flashed on and he beheld a sight which was only approximated in his memory by the 50th birthday surprise which was given him several years ago. Mr. Laemmle was led to his seat at the table amid cheers and through outstretched hands. For it must be known that Mr. Laemmle had objected strenuously to Mr. Cochrane carting him off to this business conference on the last night which he was to spend in this country in the bosom of his family for some little time, but here was the family and surrounding him he found his son, Julius, his daughter, Rosabelle, Mr. and Mrs. Abe Stern, Julius Stern, his old schoolmate in Lauheim, I. N. Landauer, another very old and dear friend, Milton Einstein, his brother Louis Laemmle, and several other officals of the business family of which he is head. They included Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Cochrane, Mr. and Mrs. P. D. Cochrane, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Berman. E. H. Goldstein, general manager and his mother and Siegfried Hartman, one of the partners of Stanchfield and Levy, the Universal's attorneys.

Of course, nothing can happen at the Universal without a picture being taken and that was the next thing in order. We reproduce the result herewith. The dinner provided by Maitre d'Hotel Melnotti, was a remarkably excellent one and particularly agreeable to Mr. Laemmle, for he said when he arose to answer the numerous toasts which had bombarded him from all corners of the room, "I certainly am grateful for this excellent dinner to-night; God only knows what I'll have for dinner to-morrow night."

Mr. Laemmle thanked most particularly The "U" Girls who were responsible for initiating and carrying through this very successful affair. The "U" Girls Club has been in existence for some little time, but this is its most ambitious project to date. The president is Florence W. Kutner, vice-president, Olga Hadel, Secretary, Ethel C. Black, ass't secretary, Goldie C. Guth, treasurer, Sada Kahn and the other members, all of whom were on various committees are as follows: Alice Alpert, Helen Harris, Vera Kostick, May Shack, Minnie F. Todd, Genevive Ryan, Beatrice Karlin and May O'Brien. They also provided a souvenir booklet which was printed with the com-

Eckert, Insurance, P. J. Morgan of the Morgan Litho. Co. and the Brewster Publications.

As a souvenir of the occasion, John C. Brownell, head of the scenario department and E. F. Moffat, advertising manager, had written a Universal song entitled "Bon Voyage", dedicated to Carl Laemmle and Abe Stern, which was sung twice during the evening by Olga Hadel, vice-president of the "U" Girls Club. Miss Hadel has a rich contralto voice and sang with remarkable expression and clarity of tone and diction. Few of those present knew that we had an incipient grand opera star in our midst until they heard her. It was one of the most delightful surprises of the evening. The orchestration was made by Jimmie Bradford, and the manuscript copy was given to Mr. Laemmle. The words are as follows:

Far, far away across the sea
  Friends watch and wait for you,
Old friends of bygone boyhood days,
  Still faithful, ever true.
The little town where you were born
  May have changed with passing years,
But not the hearts of those who'll greet
  You, smiling through their tears.

CHORUS.

Old wine, old books, old friends are best,
  But take away with you
The thought that friends you leave behind
  Will loyal be and true.
God guard you every night and day
  Wherever you may roam,
And bring you safe to us at last
  In America, your home.

The dancing which followed the dinner was enlivened by several contests. Cash prizes were offered. Ethel Black of the Universal Purchasing Department won the principal prize as the most graceful dancer.

Mr. Laemmle sailed the next day aboard the Olympic. He will be absent from the United States for at least three months, during which time he will tour England, Holland, Germany, France, Italy, Austria and as far east, perhaps as Czecho-Slovakia, having taken his Locomobile and chauffeur with him. It is the first considerable vacation Mr. Laemmle has had in ten years.

What? When? Why?--

"Once to Every Woman"

Blonde or Brunette - inevitably it comes--

"Once to Every Woman"

Accompanying Mr. Laemmle are his two children, Miss Rosabelle Laemmle, and Julius, a youth; Abe Stern, treasurer of Universal, and his wife, and Louis Laemmle, brother of the Universal chief, with his wife and two children. Others in the party are Julius Bernheim, H. H. Zehner, secretary to Carl Laemmle; Joe Kramer, a valet, and Margaret Kramer, a governess.

The Laemmle party received a stirring farewell at the steamship pier before the Olympic sailed. Various personal friends and many of the Universal department heads gathered to see the film magnate aboard the ship.

In Mr. Laemmle's absence, Mr. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, will hold the reins of the complex moving picture organization.

A Novel Tie-up

HOW the manager of the Frolic Theatre, San Francisco, tied up with Cynthia Grey, the editor of the woman's page of the San Francisco Daily News, and with Judge Graham, San Francisco's most noted divorce court judge, to exploit "The Road to Divorce," the Universal feature starring Mary MacLaren, is an interesting example of simple but effective publicity.

Miss Grey started a Prize Essay contest on her page, offering cash prizes for the best essay on the subject, "How to avoid the road to divorce." More than three thousand 350-word essays were sent in. Judge Graham and a representative of the Universal Film Company were the judges.

The Daily News carried a box with contest news daily for more than two weeks, as well as reprinting interesting excerpts from many of the submitted essays. The novel contest aroused great interest in the photoplay and assured the Frolic of capacity houses during the run of the picture.

Fortune Teller Stunt

MANY novel stunts are being utilized by exhibitors far and wide to put pep in their presentation of "The Virgin of Stamboul," the big Oriental picture starring Priscilla Dean. Mr. Obetkin, manager of the Electra Theatre, in Brooklyn, set up an oriental fortune teller's booth in his lobby and arranged for her to tell the fortunes of his patrons.

In Clinton, Iowa, the manager of the Strand Theatre aroused the entire city with a Priscilla Dean mathematical contest, engineered with the aid of the Clinton Herald. Two knotty problems were presented to the youngsters of Clinton. Hundreds of solutions were received. The judges held session in the parlor of the handsome Hotel Lafayette. The first prize was awarded to Donald Campbell, the 15-year-old Clinton high school boy who recently won the Government's national essay contest on "Americanism."

What They Think of Universal Films

HAD UNIVERSAL WEEK

During Which Lyric Theatre Offered Prize For "The Universal Star, I Liked the Best and Why?"

THE value of booking a special brand of pictures for a week or more solid booking, and going the limit in publicity and exploitation was amply proved recently by the manager of the Lyric Theatre, Valley Junction, Iowa.

He booked a solid week of Universal features, comedies and short stuff. He focused attention on his theatre by means of a spirited contest in which he offered various prizes for essays to be written after the week of Universal pictures.

The subject of the essays was "The Universal Star I Liked the Best and Why?" The competition was opened to everyone. It aroused great interest. The local paper opened the contest with a column story on the front page with the heading "Universal Week."

As a result, the Lyric was packed for the entire seven days. In addition, the Lyric manager created a definite demand for certain Universal stars, on the part of the bulk of his patronage.

Colonial Theatre, Seattle, Plays Five Universals and Jewels and Helps Schuback.

THE manager of the Colonial Theatre, in Seattle, Washington, will not admit that he is partial to any kind of pictures except good once, but V. M. Schuback, manager of Universal's Exchange in Seattle has not lost any time letting it be known that the Colonial is playing twenty days bookings of Universal pictures during the period May 29 to June 29.

Five Universal features are on bill, including two Harry Carey pictures, "Bullet Proof," and "Human Stuff," "The Forged Bride" with Mary MacLaren, "Home," with Mildred Harris; "Burnt Wings," with Frank Mayo, and "Her Five-Foot Highness" with Edith Roberts.

HOW'S THIS FOR THE ORPHEUM?

BILLY BEIN, assistant manager of the Universal Film Exchange at Cleveland, Ohio, calls attention to the generous percentage of pictures shown at the Orpheum Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, which are Universal-made. Beginning Sunday of one week, Priscilla Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul" was shown there; on Monday of the same week, Anne Cornwall in "The Path She Chose" was on exhibition, and on Friday patrons viewed the little Japanese star, Tsuru Aoki, in "A Tokio Siren."

Something New in the Serial Line

American serial company to take moving pictures in those countries. In the Philippines we found that 'Universal' and 'moving pictures' were synonymous. We could not have been more royally received. Even the Sultan of Sulu, and his nine wives, acted for us, and had us to tea, or the Sulu equivalent of that afternoon social rite.

"Mr. Carl Laemmle told me he wanted something different in 'The Dragon's Net,' when he commissioned me to take the Walcamp company to the Orient. When he recently saw what we had obtained, he said, 'You have brought Japan to America.' The serial will educate America in the customs of Japan, just as our pictures have been educating Japan in the customs of America. 'The Dragon's Net' is not filled with blood and thunder punches. There are thrills in every episode, but they come naturally in the working out of the story. The interest mainly is held by suspense. The serial will make those who see it feel just as if they had been touring in Japan and the other countries in which we worked.

"I made it a point to pitch all the action in natural settings, and showing the Japanese as they live, how they shake hands, how they eat, the interiors, exteriors and construction of their homes, their shops and their amusement places. The habits, customs, are explained in the subtitles, not in any educational way, but adroitly as a part of the action. We have gone to every possible extreme to make the audience feel and realize that they scenes are real.

"In the Philippines, I worked the action so we could get pictures of several well-known battle-grounds where our Volunteers fought, as well as 'shot' of the scene of Dewey's famous sea victory. I believe 'The Dragon's Net' will usher in a new type of serial. It is a scenic, a travelogue, and an adventure thriller all combined, and worked out in such a way that the interest never flags. Just as the Japanese, Chinese and other Orientals are being educated in things American by seeing, not educational and travel pictures of America, but American-made photoplays with American men and women in normal surrounding, similarly, Americans will be educated in seeing Orientals in normal surroundings through the medium of the new type of travel and adventure picture—the international serial."

Special Stories on "La La Lucille"

ONLY the friendship existing between Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Fred Jackson enabled the Universal scenario department to secure the screen rights to Jackson's big farcical hit, "La La Lucille," so soon after its big New York hit. In fact, "La La Lucille" was still enjoying its Broadway run when the piece was secured for the use of Lyons and Moran in films.

Fred Jackson feels that he is indebted to Eddie and Lee for some measure of his success, for while he was still attending college in New York, some five or six years ago, the Universal comedy stars bought a one-reel comedy story from him—the first he ever sold. Since then his success has been phenomenal, and there has scarcely been a season without at least one Broadway success by Fred Jackson.

His first big Broadway hit was "A Full House," which served to bring farce back into popularity. Then he wrote "The Naughty Wife," which was at the same time brilliant and amusing. A little over a year ago his "The Velvet Lady," was produced in New York, for which Victor Herbert provided the musical score, and last season it was "La La Lucille."

In Fred Jackson's opinion "La La Lucille" is his best work for in it he is enabled to handle no less than a score of clever comedy characters, all ingeniously interwoven, and each contributing a distinct share of the fun. In making the screen adaptation, Philip Hurn lost none of the laughing possibilties, as will be seen by those who view "La La Lucille" at the......Theatre next.......

ONE of the most elaborate sequences of sets for a screen production ever constructed are those which show the various parts of the Knickerbocker Hotel, New York, in Lyons and Moran's latest Universal comedy feature, "La La Lucille," which will be shown next...... at the ....

The huge lobby of the hotel was reproduced on one of the stages at Universal City with not a detail missing. The desk, the key racks, the elevators, the cigar-stand and the revolving-doors are all faithfully duplicated. Then the other parts of the hotel, such as the ladies' rooms, the waiting rooms, the parlors, the writing rooms, the corridors, the rooms and bridal suites, are duplicated in the picture.

Lee Lawson, of the Universal technical staff, was formerly employed by the architects who constructed the Broadway hostlery, and he had a complete set of plans and photographs of the hotel. These were used in constructing the sets, and Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, who had been guests at the Knickerbocker just a few weeks before starting on "La La Lucille," could easily imagine themselves still in Manhattan.

The same care for detail is shown in every other setting employed in this comedy feature. The leading feminine part is that of a juggler in vaudeville, and the interior of a theatre is shown, with the act performing on the stage. Burton Halbert, formerly a skillful juggler, was engaged to create the proper illusion.

Jack	Ralph Lee McCullough
High Pockets	Mathew Biddolph
Bart	Ed Burns
Betty	Madga Lane
Eliza	Princess Neola

JACK SAUNDERS, nephew of old Bart Saunders, owner of the Pariposa ranch, and "Highpockets" Hendricks had been pals on the range for years. But the return of Betty Thurston, Bart's ward, from school in the East caused a breach in the friendship. Her partiality for "Highpockets," who had had an education, and his evident intention of winning Betty at all costs, turned Jack's wholehearted loyalty to his friend to a bitter feeling of rivalry. He therefore proposed to Highpockets that they engage in a broncho busting contest to decide which is the better man.

"Highpockets" agreed openly and the boys began betting furiously. The night before the contest, Highpockets fixed a small rowal in a bit of wood and in the morning, slipped it to Tony, the cook's helper with a ten-spot directing Tony to place it under Jack's saddle. "Highpockets" won the toss and chose to ride first. He stayed on ten minutes and Betty and his supporters thought the contest won. Tony fixed Jack's saddle according to agreement. In spite of this Jack rode the nearly exhausted outlaw until he was broken. But the victory was in vain for Betty stubbornly showed her preference for Highpockets.

The next day news came that Buck Graham had seized Bart's water hole on the range. Before Jack left with the boys for the scene of battle, he got the story of his rival's treachery from Tony, showing the half-breed the rowel he had found under his saddle. Miss Liza, Bart's housekeeper overheard Tony confess. Jack gives Tony a note for Betty telling her he will not return until he brings Highpockets back to her, the latter having left that day after a fight with Jack. Betty has promised Highpockets her love. Highpockets had ridden away to join Buck Graham. In the fight for the waterhole the two rivals met, Jack trying to take Highpockets alive, and the latter shooting to kill. Grant	Eddie Polo
Nell	Peggy O'Dare
Beth	Thelma Percy
Sonia	Ruth Royce
Zan	Karl Silvera

GRANT, clinging to the top of the mast of the yacht, is seen by Claypool, is forced to dive off and escapes to the shore by swimming under-water, but is pursued by Mike, Claypool's henchman. Mike proceeds to Claypool's house, where he meets Nell, lately arrived from Arizona.

Grant makes for the Claypool house, and in endeavoring to make Nell his prisoner, sees Beth and escapes with her. Nell departs for New York.

In the meantime Sonia and Zan are watching the crystal in hope that it will disclose the location of the dagger and eventually the sheath appears in the glass. They do not know, however, that a jeweler named Markham has it in his vaults.

As Grant is discussing the crooks at Claypools at the detective agency, the alarm announces that Markham's has been broken into, and as the whole force is busy, Grant offers to go to the jewelers alone. He arrives in in time to wrest the sheath from Zan, and in attempting to ward off Sonia, is mistaken for the thief by a policeman who releases him only after he has made a lengthy explanation. Grant is about to set out after Sonia and Zan, when they chlorororm him, seizing him from behind, and bundle him off in an auto. Reviving somewhat, Grant takes the sheath and hides it in the coat which Sonia has thrown over him.

He is taken to a rooming house, and after they search him in vain, the pair and their ally Maztos go below to look further for the dagger. Grant breaks the rope that binds him, takes the sheath, and endeavors to escape, but finding the door locked, he lassoes the street lamp with the rope, and starts to swing down. Zan however, cuts the rope, and Grant plunges toward the street.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Remarkable Realism and

Edith Roberts as Marama in "The Adorable Savage."

ALTHOUGH it is a commonly known fact that motion picture producers spend thousands of dollars in the erection of sumptuous interior settings for their productions, most directors prefer to "shoot" an exterior scene of natural beauty than the most elaborate studio set.

In "The Adorable Savage" the latest Universal Special Attraction, many exquisite natural scenes are shown. With a few exceptions, all of the exterior scenes were taken on an island ten miles off the shore of Monterey, California.

Much of the success of this romance of the South Sea Isles, in which Universal is starring Edith Roberts, is due to Norman Dawn, the director who produced the picture.

Norman Dawn is unique in filmdom—the man usually selected when there is something unusual to be filmed.

Born in the Argentine, a kodak in his hands ever since he can remember, and a globe trotter from early childhood, he has observed and photographed the manners and customs of the four corners of the globe. Dawn knows the islands of the South Pacific almost as well as he knows the two Broadways—New York and Los Angeles. He spent several years among them, securing material for travelogues. That is why, when Universal bought Ralph Stocks story, "Marama,' with its scenes laid in the Fiji Islands, the task of reproducing the romance on celluloid was entrusted to Dawn.

Whenever an unusual film is to be produced, Norman Dawn is called into conference. Some years ago, when traveling through Italy, he was called upon to film "Cabiria," the first super-production of the screen. Last summer, when Universal made a screen version of "Lasca," the famous poem of the Mexican border, Norman Dawn was commissoned to direct it, because he was thoroughly familiar with our sister republic. His thorough knowledge of Japan was the reason for his selection as director of "A Tokio Siren," starring Tsuru Aoki.

In "Adorable Savage" as "Marama" was called, he has utilized his knowledge of the South Pacific people, their mode of living, their superstitions and their religion, as contrasted with the habits and customs of the white settlers in the tropic isles.

How to secure the tropic scenes called for puzzled Dawn, until he thought of a small, deserted island, he saw while on a yachting cruise last summer, some miles off the California Coast.

Edith Roberts, Jack Perrin, Noble Johnson, Arthur Jervis, Lucille Moulton, Lillian Phillips and the other leading characters in "Marama" practically lived their roles while they were filming the scenes on the island, living in tents and being entirely cut off from communication with the rest of the world.

THE STORY

MARAMA THURSTON, attending a girls' school in America, has but a hazy recollection of Fiji, the land of her birth, which she left at the age of four. Her father is an American, who had married a Fiji woman. The native blood in Marama is virtually undiscernable, but her sister, though also half white, is a typical native girl. Marama returns to her father's plantation and is stunned at the realization that she is a half cast. She decides to renounce all the refinement of civilizaton and become a native girl.

Templeton, an American living near the Thurston home, tries to dissuade her, declaring she is all white—both in body and mind. On the contrary the hereditary ruler of the island, Ratu Madri, tells Marama her mother's blood is strongest in her and tries to persuade her to revert to the native life. Marama discovers that her brother-in-law, Maddon, a worthless drunkard, is cruelly abusing her sister. He makes love to her and she hates him for his bestiality. Ratu sends a woman to teach Marama the "meke," a native dance, and the girl begs to be taken where Maddon can not harm them. Templeton finds them in their retreat but is captured by the natives and is about to be slain for profaning the sacred dance when Marama holds a knife to her breast and threatens suicide if he is harmed.

The savagery of the natives and a lustful kiss that Ratu forces upon her convinces Marama that her instincts are "all white." But she finds herself a prisoner in the native village. An impending hurricane forces a mysterious yacht off shore to seek a safer harbor. The girl swims to it to escape from the natives and learns the two passengers aboard are seeking a man named Milton Craig. Templeton had confessed to her that his name was Milton Craig and that he had fled from America after killing a man. The storm breaks as the yacht drifts off Marama's home and she plunges overboard and is washed ashore half drowned.

She finds her father wandering insane in the storm and both are struck down by a falling tree. The next morning Templeton finds them there, the father dead. Templeton is about to take her in his arms when Ratu appears and the two men fight. The American is victorious but the natives come up and the couple escape through the intervention of Templeton's uncle and best friend who tell him the man he thought he had killed did not die after all. Then Marama and Templeton realize that their love dreams can come true in the civilized surroundings to which both their natures are suited.

Edith Roberts in "The Adorable Savage," one of the finest pictures Universal ever turned out.

Really an Adorable Savage

EDITH ROBERTS DECLARED BY NOTED TRAVELERS TO BE ONE HUNDRED PER CENT PERFECT FIJIAN MAID.

IN "The Adorable Savage," the latest Universal production, based on Ralph Stock's story of the South Sea Isles, "Marama," Edith Roberts, the petite star, appears as a Fiji Island maid, and her make-up, costume and dancing are claimed by authorities to be perfect.

It is doubtful if any player ever had as much first hand authority in the matter of historical or geographical make-up as was placed at the disposal of Miss Roberts before she began filming this spectacular Universal feature.

In the first place, Norman Dawn, her director, had spent a year and a half in the Islands of the South Seas, gathering material for travelogues, and he knew the various islands in the southern waters as well as he knew Los Angeles. He not only had thousands of plates covering every angle of life in these climes, but he knew the dialects, manners and customs of the various tribes in that part of the world.

Just about the time she was ready to begin the picture she was visited by her friend, Mrs. Frank Lloyd, wife of a prominent Liverpool marine insurance man, who had just returned with her husband from a trip to the South Seas, where Mr. Lloyd was establishing branches, and she presented the star with many trinkets and ornaments direct from Fiji which Miss Roberts used in making up.

Added to this, the Alder-Laemmle Universal expedition to Borneo, New Guinea, and the South Seas had just returned to Universal City, bringing relics and trophies galore, and fresh knowledge of that tropic spot which forms the background for the "The Adorable Savage."

The way that Norman Dawn camouflaged an island off the Pacific Coast to represent the Fiji Islands.

Right in the backyard of Universal City a Fijian village rose as by magic for "The Adorable Savage."

Copy for Advance Story

An entrancing tale of romance in the South Sea Islands is "The Adorable Savage," the latest Universal vehicle for Edith Roberts, which will be seen at the .... Theatre on ....

In this new Universal feature Edith Roberts is seen in the role of Marama Thurston, a young girl who has completed her education in an American boarding school and returns to her home in the Fiji Islands, which she has not seen since she was a mere infant. Although Marama remembers her father as an American, she does not know that he was married to a native woman, and that she is a half caste. Her tragic despair on learning the truth is followed by a mad desire to renounce her training and revert to the semi-savage state of her maternal ancestors. In this she is encouraged by Ratu Madri, hereditary ruler of the island, who has cast a covetous eye on this dainty specimen of budding womanhood.

Templeton, a young American living near the Thurston plantation, falls in love with Marama and tries to persuade her to live the life to which her instincts and training entitle her as the daughter of an American.

A bitter struggle then ensues between the white man and the native ruler whose baser instincts have but been made more subtle by his college education. At times it is a game of wits between the two men, and finally it develops into a most spectacular physical battle, with Marama as the stake. Human cunning and the natural elements become factors in the struggle, a tropic hurricane and a shipwreck entering into the development of the unique story.

Edith Roberts, whose skill has been proven in a dozen successful photoplays, is said to give a remarkable performance in the role of the half-cast girl, torn between two distinct passions. Jack Perrin makes a decidedly good looking hero, while the role of the chief is played by Noble Johnson, of gigantic stature and physical prowess. Other well-drawn characters are portrayed by Richard Cummings, Arthur Jervis, Lucille Moulton, Lillian Phillips and a host of others.

The story is from the novel "Marama" by Ralph Stock and the director is Norman Dawn, whose familiarity with the life and customs of the South Seas is evident in the perfect production.

Marama falls into the clutches of her wicked brother-in-law.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Strong Special Attractions Coming

"Under Northern Lights" New Special Attraction

THE series of two-reel Royal Northwestern Mounted Police pictures, produced by Jacques Jaccard for Universal, has proved so popular, and the atmosphere and drama of the great Northwest woods so interesting, that Carl Laemmle authorized him to produce a five-reel feature, using the same characters and following the same lines as the shorter stories. Jaccard is an honorary member of the famous Canadian Constabulary and is thoroughly familiar with their work and exploits. He had already completed two of the shorter stories, "The Scarlet Rider" and "The Son of the North," and will continue the series. Leonard Clapham and Virginia Faire play the featured rôles.

The feature, which will be released as a special attraction, is called "Under Northern Lights." Jaccard wrote the story, and it was put into continuity form by Kay Harrison, who also plays a rôle in the production. The following players are also in the cast: Leonard Clapham, Virginia Faire, Wilmer Paquette, William Buckley, Herbert Bethew, Charles Brinley, Ben Corbet, Frank Staples and Oleta Otis.

The backgrounds of "Under Northern Lights" are chosen with the most artistic appreciation of the wonderful beauty of the north woods, and Jaccard has enhanced them by photographing under unique conditions of light, both natural and artificial. A great deal of time, money and ingenuity have been expended on the lighting of the picture, which has a strong story with big dramatic climaxes.

Carey in a Van Loan Story

WHILE H. H. Van Loan has created successes for almost every film star in America, he has just written a scenario for Harry Carey, whom he has known longer and more intimately than any player in the silent drama. When University City was first opened as a motion picture studio, H. H. Van Loan was a publicity man for the Universal, while Harry Carey was one of its first stars. And ever since then Van Loan and Carey have been great friends.

Several months ago Van Loan asked the Western star to sit through a preview of the Priscilla Dean production, "The Virgin of Stamboul," of which he was the author. After Carey had admired the various points in the story he suddenly turned to the author and said:

"Van, why don't you write me a story?"

"I have written a story for you," replied Van Loan, "but we are such good friends I hated to talk business to you."

Carey silenced Van Loan's protests, and the next day he was reading the scenario of "Fighting Job." Two days later the scenario department at Universal City accepted the script. And in a very few weeks the public will see it under the title "Blue Streak McCoy." It is Carey's latest after "Human Stuff." In the cast will be seen Ray Ripley, Lila Leslie, Charles Le Mogne, Ruth Golden and Ruth Royce. Reaves Eason directed.

Frank Mayo's Masterly Portrayal

PROMINENT critics who have previewed Frank Mayo's latest photodrama, produced by Universal, entitled "Hitchin' Posts," declare that this actor reaches the pinnacle of his art in the portrayal of the rôle of Jefferson Todd, gambler, gentleman and man, in this story of the Old South and the New West by H. M. Shumate.

It has been Frank Mayo's ambition ever since he entered the field of the silent drama to portray a rôle of this type. His earliest childhood recollections, when as a child of three or four he sat in his grandfather's dressing-room while that famous actor played his notable creation, "Puddin' Head Wilson," is of a stage gentleman of the period of 1870, and he has treasured all the costumes of his illustrious sire and grandsire, both of whom were of the aristocracy of the stage.

Unconsciously Frank Mayo has been preparing all his life for the rôle of the chivalrous Todd in "Hitchin' Posts," and when he first read the story eight months ago he told the scenario chief at Universal City that he would not rest until he had an opportunity to play it on the screen. There are not very many actors in the films who can appear to advantage in costumes that are not strictly up to the minute, but Mayo's early training and his subsequent stage experience in England and America have given him a poise and dignity which are evident whether he plays the rôle of a cavalier or a lumberjack.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION	About 4,900 feet

THE fact that they take a little time to get started and in doing so offer some poor comedy in the way of titles isn't going to worry anybody very much once things get going and the complications "set in." There's a barrel of fun in "La La Lucille" for those who like riotous comedy.

You won't enjoy the latest Lyons-Moran picture unless you make up your mind to accept it as purely comedy stuff, forgetting all such things as probability and plausibility. If you want to be amused, want to see something that will make you laugh and that doesn't require any effort to follow, you will get what you're after in this. And strange to say it isn't Eddie Lyons nor Lee Moran that provide most of the fun in "La La Lucille." It's Dorothy Wolbert as Fannie, the janitress, who is hired to play the rôle of co-respondent in the divorce scheme.

Miss Wolbert is a scream all by herself. Her get-up alone, without appearing ridiculously artificial and "made up," is comedy in itself. She offers the biggest laugh in the production when friend husband traces her to the hotel room where she is to compromise the young husband that he may secure a divorce. "La La Lucille" is one of the so-called "bedroom farces," but if accepted in the proper spirit there is nothing that should cause extreme blushing.

John Smith (Eddie Lyons) inherits two millions, but must divorce his former vaudeville performer wife to get it, according to auntie's will. Fannie, the janitress, accepts ten dollars to go to a certain hotel room with John, thereby providing grounds for Mrs. Smith's divorce, after which the couple will remarry. At the same hotel is Britton Hughes (Lee Moran) and his wife, Peggy, elopers.

Mr. and Mrs. Brady, next in line for the fortune, learn of Smith's plan to secure the money. They put Fannie's husband on the trail, and from then on things start going. Fannie rushes into the adjoining bedroom and begs Peggy to help her, whereupon Peggy goes in in time to make it appear to janitor husband that she is Smith's co-respondent. There is a general mix-up of husbands and wives and a helter-skelter chase through the hotel by the husband to find Fannie, in the midst of which Peggy's irate father arrives and is accused of bringing Fannie to the hotel. Eventually everything is cleared, and the "dead" aunt arrives to say that it was only a scheme to test the Smiths' love for each other.

Box-Office Doings If They Keep Up This Record

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

HERE'S a good hot weather subject. They won't have to sit up straight and pay strict attention to know what it's all about. All they'll have to do is lean back and prepare to be amused. If they don't enjoy the complications and excitement involving two happily married couples who come so near being unhappy and the episode of Fannie, the janitress, in the role of a co-respondent, then there's something wrong with them. This is indeed a clever adaptation of farce-comedy. There's nothing startlingly original about "La La Lucille." It's just the fact that it has been skilfully produced and the players get right into the spirit of the thing.

There is no reason why the Lyons-Moran combination can't make a real success of their five-reel offerings if they keep up the pace set by "Everything but the Truth" and followed by this one. Play up the stars' names and mention the stage connection.

Berman Makes Preliminary Announcement Of Jewel and Universal Fall Schedule

IMMEDIATELY upon the departure of Mr. Carl Laemmle for Europe announcement of a formidable program of pictures for 1920 and 1921 was made by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges and the the sales department of Universal. In his statement, Mr. Berman lays emphasis on the fact that Universal will produce upwards of sixty big pictures in the next twelve months. On this program, which is the most elaborate and costly Universal has ever planned, at least ten pictures will be Universal Jewel Super-productions, with fifty Special Attractions starring such well-known box-office magnets as Priscilla Dean, Erich von Stroheim, Carmel Myers, Harry Carey and others.

Priscilla Dean's electrifying production, "The Virgin of Stamboul," put her in the very forefront as a star, and this picture was put over more quickly in the big cities as well as the smaller towns than any other production which Universal ever made. On the Jewel program will be several big productions by Dean, the first of which will be "Outside the Law." Tod Browning, who directed "The Virgin of Stamboul," is now busily at work on this production. As soon as Miss Dean finishes this picture she will begin work on a play called "The Cat That Walked Alone," an original story by John Colton, a contributor of Collier's Weekly and other national magazines. Another Jewel picture will be "Once to Every Woman," starring Dorothy Phillips and directed by Allen J. Holubar. This picture will be ready for release early in the fall, and also "The Devil's Passkey," a seven-reel producttion made by Erich Von Stroheim. Mr. Von Stroheim has established a reputation for himself as a director of unusually high calibre. His first production, "Blind Husbands," in which he starred, is still being booked extensively. Von Stroheim will start work soon on "Foolish Wives," a very elaborate Monte Carlo drama.

On the Special Attraction program will be forty-eight pictures, the first thirteen of which are announced as follows: "The Red Lane," "The Girl in the Rain," "Blue Streak McCoy," "The Adorable Savage," "La La Lucille," "Hitchin' Posts," "Under Northern Lights," "Out of a Clear Sky," "Once a Plumber" and "Kate of Crime Street." Starring in these are Frank Mayo, Edith Roberts, Anne Cornwall, Harry Carey, Carmel Myers and Lyons and Moran. Norman Dawn, who directed the "Breath of the Gods," has made an exquisite picture in "The Adorable Savage," a story of the South Sea Islands, starring Edith Roberts.

Harry Carey's next production, "Blue Streak McCoy," directed by Reaves Eason, is said to be a Western romance with all of the characteristic human touches which Carey put in "Overland Red" and "Marked Men." Harry Carey is now working on "West Is West," which he will follow with "The Hooch Hound," and "Sundown Slim."

At present a half-dozen companies are busily at work on the lot at Universal City. Stories now being put into moving pictures include "White Youth," by Forrest Halsey and Clara Beranger; "Out of the Sky," with Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin, directed by Reaves Eason; "Black Friday," adapted by John C. Brownell from Frederick S. Isham's famous novel, and starring Frank Mayo, will be directed by Fred Thomson, an old Vitagraph director.

In addition to these five and six-reel features, Universal is making one one-reel comedy and one two-reel Western drama every week. Elmo Lincoln, the serial star of "Elmo the Fearless" and "Elmo the Mighty," is working in a new serial, and Eddie Polo, following the completion of "The Vanishing Dagger," has started work on a new circus serial which will probably be called "King of the Circus."

Mr. Berman states that the scenario departments both in New York and at the studios are scouring the markets for stories for big productions to use in the Special Attraction program, as well as for the Jewel super-productions.

Filming the Head Dance

Three full-rigged Kia Kia cannibal warriors who were first toweled and then shot by Edward Laemmle and William F. Alder in New Guinea. The man with glasses is Alder.

WILD men who play medicine ball with human heads and yet are utterly cowed by the report of a .22 rifle were the paradox encountered by William Alder and Edward Laemmle during the stirring filming of "Shipwrecked Among Cannivals" on the coast of New Guinea. The little party were wrecked near a native village and while the tent and cooking paraphernalia was being unpacked, Alder went into the jungle after wild pigeon for the evening meal. They didn't know they were among cannibals. But the Kia Kia tribe is the fiercest of the Dyak headhunters. And they were on that inhospitable shore.

"I was rewarded with a nice bag," he says, "but the report of the rifle occasioned the utmost consternation among the Dyaks, who feared rifles as a punitive instrument in the hands of the soldiers. Rifles were about the only thing they did fear, however. Upon my return to the camp I was dismayed to find that they had all, with the exception of a few old men and women and the head Dyak, taken incontinently to their heels and were hiding in the jungle."

But further in the interior a feast was given in honor of the explorers, and as the festivities began an old crone stepped into the circle and swung into the measured cadence of the Dyak head dance. She carried in one hand a live fowl and in the other dry unhusked rice. Swinging around the circle she sprinkled the rice over the heads of the onlookers, at the same time touching each with the fluttering body of the fowl. She broke into a wild eyrie chant, her movements became faster till she was whirling around in a fit of wild hysteria that moved the silent throng to murmurs of excitement. Then slowly twisting the live fowl by the neck, she tore the head from its quivering body and thrust the red spouting fountain to her lips, drinking to the last the warm blood of the luckless creature. As she did this the Dyaks, now howling and

"SHIPWRECKED AMONG CANNIBALS"

The Diary of the Year's

"As we turned toward the jungle the tops of the ship's masts sank beneath the waves and from the jungle's edge a thousand eyes, hideous and sinister, leered at us. We were shipwrecked on Frederick Henry's Island, the nearest settlement 300 miles away, and cannibals behind every thicket. Our hearts sank within us."

1st Day

"The savages danced all night on the beach. Weird, fantastical, ghostly visions they were silhouetted against the moon and the shimmering waters. Uncanny, shouting beastly humans in ghoulish manifestations seemed to bode ill to us for hostile gestures toward our shelter accompanied every changing rhythm of their lustful gyrations.. We took two-hour turns at guard duty."

2nd Day

"To-day we caught our first glimpse of a savage child. One baby about two years old, its face having the appearance of a thirty-year old woman, sat in front of a heap of bones, using human skulls as building blocks. Had we seen its face and not its body we would have sworn it was that of a well-developed young woman."

Huge, black, demon-like features, horribly marked with great tubes or bones protruding from their noses. One or the other of us stood guard every minute for we knew not when this great black cloud of hungry savages would descend upon our little shelter."

3rd Day

"To-day we witnessed the blood dance. The cannibals were enraged over the destruction of their village in the storm of yesterday and their belief demanded revenge. They hold some enemy, seen or invisible, responsible for every injury they suffer, and they were asking their spirit gods who was responsible."

4th Day

"To-day we visited the cannibal village again, and as we entered, the women folks, their naked bodies gnashed, slashed and seared from head to foot with weird savage insignias of primordial brutalities, raced off into the dense jungle. Their savage warriors, their talon like teeth glittering in contrast to their blood red lips and purplish gums, arose and assumed threatening attitudes."

MONKEY SHINES

MARTIN

WHEN I first came to this country" JOE MARTIN said to the Moving Picture Weekly reporter, "it was my intention to appear exclusively in Shakespearean repertoire, this having never before been done by any monkey actor, either here or on the Continent. I soon found that the American public does not care for "costume plays" and regretfully abandoned my idea for short subjects, realizing that, after all, what the people really wanted was me, not Shakespeare. Some day, nevertheless, I hope to produce 'Hamlet"—in shortened form—with most of the scenes laid in Africa and my wife playing "Ophelia." In the meantime, while waiting for my real life-work, it would be well for the exhibitor who understands what money is, how it is made and what it is used for, to play me in "MONKEY STUFF" and "THE JAZZ MONKEY" directed by William Campbell and my better half in "A BABY DOLL BANDIT"—"A JUNGLE GENTLEMAN"—"THE GOOD SHIP ROCK'N RYE"—and "OVER THE TRANSOM," directed by Fred C. Fishback.

Color Plays Important Role in "The Devil's Pass Key"

COLOR as one of the dramatis personæ of a film play is utilized for the first time in history in the final scenes of Eric Von Stroheim's "The Devil's Passkey." Universal chemists interpreted in the metaphor of color a phase of dramatic action unwieldly of exposition by action or sub-titles. Experts say there is more drama in manipulated color than in natural color photography. Universal is making plans for a tremendous business on this masterpiece when it is released early in the fall.

Technically known as a "color lap dissolve," the effect is a laboratory process of dyeing developed under the guidance of S. M. Tompkins, superintendent of the Universal film laboratories, and his assistant, Jack Guerin. No camera attachments are necessary in photographing scenes to be treated by this method, and the effect may therefore be used at any time with any scene. Tompkins and Guerin are now rounding up all available film dyes and coloring chemicals preparatory to an extensive series of experiments in this branch of color work. This research was ordered by Producing Manager Bernstein.

The initial experiment in "The Devil's Passkey" follows the night-long vigil of a repentant woman in the room with her disillusioned and despairing husband. During the cold morning everything is dark blue. Through the French windows the dawn is seen to break. A glow grows against the sky, and gradually the sun rises, flooding the room with the hopeful pink of a new day. It is symbolic of what has passed in the minds of the two in that room. And so the picture is ended.

Here is a case where manipulation of color was the dramatic punch itself; where the subtle hint of the prism told its own story better than it could have been told in a sequence of scenes, at the same time giving the audience the satisfaction of being able to use its own imagination.

Producing Manager Isadore Bernstein will make more elaborate use of the "color lap dissolve" in forthcoming Universal productions. In Carmel Myers's current feature, "In Folly's Trail," an unusual effort is gained in this manner. At a Bachanalian feast Miss Myers, in the role of Folly, beckons the guests to follow her to the subterranean regions—otherwise the wine cellar. As a hidden trapdoor opens there is a spurt of flame, and the vast hall changes in its tint from amber to the reflected color of the fire, causing uncanny shadows to dance on the walls and ceiling of the room.

A similar effect will be used in Von Stroheim's next production, "Foolish Wives," which will show a heavy rainstorm through a huge window. The storm will gradually subside, and a rainbow, in natural colors, will span the sky. The Universal laboratories are pioneers in this branch of photography and will soon be able to show the public many striking chemical and photographic effects.

Buddhist Temple Built

A BUDDHIST temple built at Universal City for "The Breath of the Gods," in which Tsuru Aoki is starring for Jewel, stands as a monument to the motion picture art. Perhaps in no other setting has a director been called upon for such absolute accuracy. "The Breath of the Gods" is a Jewel photodrama of the Orient, starring Tsuru Aoki, the Japanese Bernhardt of the Screen under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon.

Several of the sequences occur in a Buddist temple. It was necessary to duplicate at the world's film capital a temple fashioned after one of the most beautiful edifices of worship in Tokio.

Corley S. Ito, a Japanese artist of note, was summoned to Universal City by Mr. Sturgeon to act as his technical adviser in the building of Japanese settings.

An imposing image of Buddha, sixteen feet in height, was erected at one end of the temple. Universal sculptors fashioned the mobile face of the Oriental prophet and a corps of artists working under the direction of Corley S. Ito, gilded the figure and gave it its proper photographic color value.

At the base of the image candles were set to burn in homage to the great Gautama. Scenes in the temple, Japanese street scenes and scenes made in a Metropolitan city add greatly to the color of the remarkable photodrama.

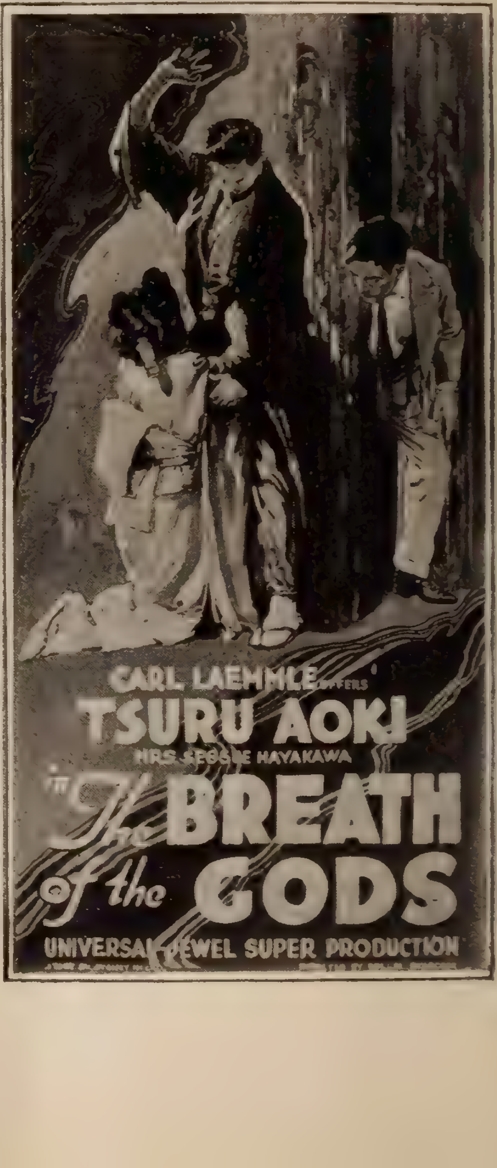
Fifty Elaborate Sets Erected

THE technical department at Universal City received instructions from President Carl Laemmle to spare no effort or expense in making "The Breath of the Gods," Tsuru Aoki's Jewel starring vehicle, the most perfect Oriental photodrama ever produced. The result has been a series of the most elaborate settings ever erected for a photoplay of this or any other description.

Nearly fifty different sets were erected at Universal City for Miss Aoki's initial feature, and as many more outside locations were utilized in completing the photodrama. A staff of Japanese artists were engaged as technical advisors, and every scene was reproduced with true fidelity to its Oriental original. Six different Japanese streets were erected, a score of beautiful interiors, pagodas, tea houses and temples, roads, gardens and landscapes—all constructed on the vast acres of Universal City.

Naturally Universal felt confident of the ability of the star and the quality of the story before expending such a vast amount of money on the production. Miss Aoki, who has played in many photodramas with her husband (Sessue Hayakawa), reveals new skill and magnetism in this feature, while the story, by Sydney McCall, is recognized as a masterpiece among tales of modern Japan.

Rollin Sturgeon directed the production, and in the splendid cast were such well-known players as J. Barney Sherry, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Arthur Carew, Ethel Shannon, Pat O'Malley and M. Seki.



For the reason that it forms a regular item in your program, more than ordinary care is required in your choice of a NEWS reel, for it invites in the minds of the public constant comparison, as regards novelty, newsiness and photographic quality, with the News reel of your competitors. This one fact of itself would explain the overwhelming popularity with exhibitor and public of INTERNATIONAL NEWS – the Service of Quality, released thru UNIVERSAL.

World Wonders Shown in "The Dragon's Net"

WHEN the latest Universal serial, "The Dragon's Net," is released next month, the public will be able to see sights and scenes filmed in the far corners of the earth and which cost hundreds of thousands of dollars to secure. Marie Walcamp is the star of this serial, and it was directed by Henry McRae. The eighteen episodes of the drama were enacted in America, China, Japan, Korea, the Philippines, the South Sea Islands and Hawaii, and seven months were spent abroad by a complete Universal unit to properly film the serial.

Henry McRae relates many amusing incidents of the tour. A particularly interesting story relates to the jealousy with which the Philippine natives regard their new civilization.

"While we were in Cebu," relates McRae, "we tried to get a native Filippino to play a bit in the picture without his shirt on, but he wouldn't do it. His friends also protested. I argued with them, pointing to the fact that our own American actors were appearing that way—stripped to the waist.

"'Ah, but,' the Filippino answered, 'the Americans have been civilized for many hundred years and the world knows they are civilized, but we don't want the world to believe we are still in the savage state.'

"I was pretty anxious to get the scenes and appealed to the native governor of the islands, but to my surprise he was as firm as the others. He gave me the same argument, and there was a tearful quaver in his voice that got me.

"'All right,' I said to the native actor, 'keep your shirt on.' And he did."

What Others Think of Universal

HE SAW THE LIGHT

THIS letter is from a Paramount-Artcraft Exhibitor, who has been using Universal Service for the last four months. Prior to that time it was impossible to jimmie Universal service into his house. He began by using a few spot bookings on short reel stuff and gradually increased until now he is using virtually everything the Universal exchange at Omaha can give him. The experience of this exhibitor is a criterion of the sentiment of many who were tied to an expensive service. They are gradually swinging to Universal Service.

Gentlemen:—

Replying to your favor of the 12th inst and credit memo. enclosed. You have our thanks for both.

I will allow our account to run open until we have had service to take up our credit and then will send in bills for receipt.

Regarding the AIR ROBBERY. Will say it went over fine with ideal weather and roads and satisfied 95 per cent at advanced prices, 40c. and 20c.

We have many favorable comments on Universal stuff and our people have been educated for the past three years to believe that the Paramount Artcraft was really the only people who made pictures that had any entertaining value. Thank you!

Featuring

CHARLES DORETY, HARRY KEATING and CONNIE HENLEY

CHARLES, otherwise known as "Useless," is a helper in a blacksmith's shop in Chestnutville, and useless he surely was.

He has a good time of life, however, especially when a customer enters with a baby carriage from which one of the wheels had been broken off. Charles does more than fix the carriage. He discovers that it really contained a "precious" load, and he drank until he staggered.

But all good times must end sometime, and Useless fell in love with a girl. Naturally, when a city chap tried to beat him to it, Useless departs for the city to win fame, fortune and the girl.

A fortune teller advises him to stake his luck on the horses and he gets a job at the track. He has heaps of mishaps until the day of the great race when he sees his girl with the villain among the spectators. The villain recognizes him and seeks to disable the horse which he thinks will be the winner. When Useless intervenes, he is thrown from the hay loft where he is sitting onto the back of the race horse; the horse becomes frightened, chases out, enters the race, and wins with flying colors. Charlie is showered with flowers but when he begins to demand the money, the fortune teller explains that he is still gazing in the crystal. Charlie smashes the crystal, is thrown out by the fortune teller, and alas, is compelled to hit the trail home again.

New York City, N. Y.

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" opened at the La Salle Theatre today to absolutely capacity business from the moment we opened the door until after eleven o'clock tonight and there has not been one of the hundreds who witnessed the play who did not deem it an unusual and sensational picture from every angle. This is the first picture ever to play the La Salle Theatre on a percentage basis and we are more than pleased at the result. Your methods of exploitation and advertising is the most unusual that has come to my notice and aided greatly in getting a wonderful opening.

shrieking, rose and formed in a mad dancing cordon around her.

A dried human head, taken in some previous foray, bounced into the circle, thrown there by someone on the outer fringe of the churning mass and the crone seized it, pressing it to her lips. Then as if to show her contempt for one killed in battle, she spat upon it and whirled off again in the mad ecstasy of the dance. Soon she passed it to a Dyak, who also spat upon it, and in turn passed it on until it had gone the round of the whole circle. When the last Dyak received it he tossed it to the ground at the feet of the old woman, who sank exhausted in a dead faint.

These and many other weird and uncanny scenes were secured by Alder and Edward Laemmle, for the Universal and for the Southern California Academy of Sciences. These scenes are now being shown at the Astor Theatre, New York, to wondering crowds who seem not at all concerned at the torrid weather, and at the La Salle Theatre, Chicago.

Dear Mr. Rosenthal:

"BLIND HUSBANDS" gave the theatre-going public of Cairo something to talk about for months to come. Judging from the crowds during the three-day run, I would say modestly, that every person in the city witnessed this unusual strong attraction.

It is a whale of a picture and will bring extraordinary returns if played up properly in advance. I had every minister in the city of every religious denomination attend—the first time this has ever occured. I could not have wished for better results.

FULFILL THEIR MISSION

Mr. Herman Lerch,
Mgr. Universal, Butte, Mont.
Friend Herman:—

In reference to your letter as to what I think of the Century and Rainbow Comedies will say that the patrons enjoy them immensely and that I, personally, believe they are the biggest "GOB" of comedy on the market to-day for the price. They certainly fulfill the mission for which they were made to make people laugh.

Booked "The Virgin" Had To Post Bills for the Theatre

LABOR is just as scarce and high priced in Walkerville, Ontario, as it is in the dear old U. S. A. That is the reason two non-union men got into a couple of pairs of union overalls and posted a wonderful collection of Priscilla Dean posters for "The Virgin of Stamboul" on all of the available posting places in Walkerville. P. C. Taylor, Jewel-Universal representative had booked "The Virgin of Stamboul" to R. M. Humble, who owns both the Family Theatre and the Armories Theatre. Mr. Humble decided to play it in the Armories in connection with the G. W. V. A. But he could not get anyone to post the bills. In his trouble he appealed to Taylor, and Taylor agreed to help him personally.

P. C. Taylor and R. M. Humble act as Poster Mounters in Walkersville, Canada.

While the bill posting fun was at its height, a camera man came along and snapped these two amateur bill posters in the act.

Bringing Films To Indians of West Coast of Panama.

"IF your patrons won't come to your theatre, take your theatre to your patrons," is the slogan of Monroe Isen, manager of Universal's Central American branch exchange, who has just sent word to the Universal home office of the unique tie-up by which Universal films are being shown to the Indians of the islands that fringe the western coast of the Republic of Panama.

Two weeks ago the steamship Machawa nosed her way into the Pacific from the port of Panama City. The Skipper, Captain Carbone was sailing on the strangest cruise he ever made, for he had turned his ship into a floating moving picture theatre and he himself had taken over the duties as manager.

Every two months, the Machawa spends a month cruising along the Panama coast and trading among the San Blas Islands, populated solely by Indians . No white man is permitted to remain on the islands overnight.

By special arrangements with the Chief, however, Captain Carbone will be permitted to remain on each island, with his crew, until two hours after dark, for two days on each island. He further has permission to put up a screen, install projection apparatus and give the inhabitants a regular movie show. This has never been done before, and only a few of the Indians, who have visited Panama City or other Central American towns, know anything of the silver sheet.

The Indian Chief made one stipulation in his agreement. He told Captain Carbone that as soon as the show was over, the Captain must take all his crew and apparatus, including the "actors" back to the ship every night.

When Captain Carbone sailed he had aboard a complete assortment of Universal pictures, comedies and short stuff. He will show Universal pictures exclusively for the next year.

The Captain expects to take in everything from old Spanish "pieces of eight" to South Sea wampum as admission fees. He says he will draw the line at war trophies, such as scalps, human teeth and necklaces.

"THE ADORABLE SAVAGE"

ONE of the most accomplished of the many Hawaiian girls who have found their way to America since the weird strain of "Aloha" first captivated the visitors to Honolulu is Lilly Phillips, who is now portraying the role of the Fiji Island ceremonial dancer in the Universal film "The Adorable Savage" in which Edith Roberts is starred. Miss Phillips' name at birth was Fillipilli, and her mother was a grandniece of the late King Kamahameha of the Hawaiian Islands. When the country became an American possession the family changed its name to Phillips.

At the age of 16, Miss Phillips was considered one of the most expert swimmers and surf riders in Honolulu, played and sang sweetly, and may be remembered by travelers as one of the principal entertainers at the Alexander Young Hotel in Honolulu.

Baldwin	Charles Newton
Rosa	Beatrice Dominguez
Anna	Mildred Moore
Warpee	Tote Du Crow

EGBERT, believing that Buck has been killed by the explosion of the fake money bag, refrains from using the knife on him and rides off. Warpee, arriving later, restores Buck to consciousness, and the latter rides off to rescue Anna from the moon riders' cave, which he does successfully, inasmuch as most of the moon riders were absent.

In the meantime, Baldwin and Rosa waylaid Snyder and took the money from him, and in the ensuing fight, Snyder is killed. Baldwin races to the bank to deposit the money.

Egbert squares himself with the riders, by declaring that it was Snyder who did the double crossing and not he, and overhearing Baldwin's remarks about depositing the money, Egbert and the moon riders make a clever hold-up at the bank and get away with the money. Buck, however, overtakes Egbert and two of his companions as they are quarreling over the spoils and a fight ensues, in which one of the men is killed and Buck barely escapes with his life, minus the money. The latter is on the person of the dead man and it is Rosa who sees it and takes possession. She is on her way back to her cabin to take her belongings to the ranch, her new home.

Baldwin and Anna are captured by the moon riders, who believe that Baldwin has the money. Buck discovers that they are captives and goes in hot pursuit, only to be captured himself. One of the moon riders returns from the bank and accuses Buck of having the money, and when he denies all knowledge of it, they determine to torture the secret out of him. He is placed in an electric chair and Anna is handcuffed to the switchboard and forced to witness his sufferings.

HELEN SOMMERS, bravely shouldering her late father's burden as owner of Triangle Y Cattle Ranch, finds herself unable to meet the payroll. The cowboys, stirred up by "Buck" Hyam, a contractor whose men are building ditches on the ranch, clamor for their pay. Just as Hyam, who seeks to possess both Helen and her property, is proposing marriage as the one way out, Jim Burton, foreman, in love with Helen, arrives from town with a letter from the bank agreeing to loan Helen the sum she needs. He rides for the money, and on the way meets a stranger with a scarred face who asks the way to Hyam's outfit. The scarred stranger rides a horse with a white splash. Returning with the money, Jim is held up by two masked men, who blindfold him and exchange the money package for counterfeit bills re-wrapped in the bank folder. They then tell Jim they have gotten the wrong man and send him on his way. Finding the package apparently intact, Jim does not suspect he has been robbed. The punchers are paid but discover the bogus bills next morning and confont Helen and Jim, led by Hyam. Jim tells about the holdup, but his story is laughed at. Even Helen believes him guilty of switching the money. He is accused and turned over to the sheriff who locks him in jail. While the sheriff and cowboys, with most of the townsfolk are discussing the case in the saloons, Helen rides for town to aid Jim, actuated by her love for him in spite of her belief in his guilt. She helps him escape, but conceals her feelings for him. Hyam meets her and again tries to force her to marry him, but she indignantly cuts him across the face with her quirt. When Jim's escape is discovered, Helen joins the sheriff's posse in the search to avert suspicion. Jim, meantime, has recalled that one of the holdups rode a horse with a white splash on it and links the crime up with the scarred stranger, whose face he remembers having seen before in a newspaper. Jim reaches a friend's house, finds the newspaper in which is printed the picture of Dick Dawson, notorious counterfeiter, with an offer of $10,000 reward for his capture. He trails down both Dawson and Hyam as they are about to divide the spoils of the holdup and captures them just before the sheriff and posse, with Helen, reach the scene.

NORMAN DAWN

The Dawn of Perfect Photography

AS everybody knows, the picture play differs from the stage play in that you must have pictures as well as dialogue—pictures of action as well as a good story. If a director, therefore, is a master of pictures—an expert camera-man no less than a dramatist and stage manager, he will give you your best photoplays.

NORMAN DAWN is just such a director. Not yet so well known to the trade and the patron, perhaps, as some of those whose horns have been lustily blown during the past few years but—and note this well—soon to be recognized by everyone who views pictures as one of the biggest and most artistic minds in the picture business. View "THE ADORABLE SAVAGE" at your nearest Universal Exchange without delay and see how his marvelous work—in story telling, in stage management and in photography speaks for itself.

THERE is the touch of a master-painter in everything Dawn does. Just as he filled that beautiful picture "LASCA" with scenic backgrounds that were a delight to the eye and mind, so in "THE ADORABLE SAVAGE," laid in the tropic glory of the Fiji Islands, he has instinctively picked locations whose natural beauty makes this marvelous photodrama a joy forever. Two of his locations are shown on these pages—we show another simply as a sample of his eye for lighting as well as background. While we know that the exhibitor seldom analyzes the technical points of a picture as completely as do its producers, yet we sincerely advise every one of our friends in the trade to study these points in NORMAN DAWN'S work—for we know that perfect camera work and expert direction will bring and hold audiences.

Police Court Helped Carey

"Blue Streak McCoy" concerns a young man who deems himself worthy of a great love and who tries to atone for his past by service and self-sacrifice. How a two-fisted man disguises his feelings so that he may bring happiness to a pal is told through Harry Carey's emotional acting.

Harry Carey, Ruth Golden and "Breezy" Eason in "Blue Streak McCoy."

HARRY CAREY has become one of the most sympathetic characters on the screen. Leading screen writers are beginning to regard him as an apt object for their pen. As a result he is getting many first-class stories written especially for him by authors of national repute. One of the most recent to turn out a typical Harry Carey film story is H. H. Van Loan, one of the foremost screen authors of the day and the author of the Priscilla Dean vehicle, "The Virgin of Stamboul."

In a recent interview Harry Carey revealed the secret of his deep insight into human nature and of how he acquired the faculty of making his screen portrayals not merely characters, but human beings.

"Before the ordinary police magistrate," said Harry Carey to the reporter, "comes every known class of human being, and in the ordinary court room each day are enacted dramas and tragedies which sound the depths and scale the heights of human emotion. Here are revealed not only the incidents and scenes in the drama, but the motives which led up to them and the instincts which actuated them.

"My father," continued Mr. Carey, "was a judge of a New York City court for years, and I myself studied law after completing my school course. When I was fifteen years old my father, who intended that I should follow a legal career, would have me come down to his ocurt to hear important cases tried, and then I contracted the habit of dropping into the police magistrate's court. I did this throughout my three years at law school, and, strange to say, it was the dramatic side of the cases that always impressed me, rather than the legal phase. That is probably why I went on the stage shortly after receiving my diploma.

"But the years at law school and of watching the court proceedings were not lost. In fact, I consider them a distinct gain. I learned more of human nature in those three or four years—more of the real drama of life—than is found in all the play books ever written. I have found this knowledge very useful, not only in my acting, but in the seevral plays and scenarios which I have written."

Star Stuff in "Breezy"

IF "Breezy" Eason does not become a film star before he is many years older many critics will miss their guess. And as "Breezy" is only four years old, one may observe that he has a fairly good start.

The youngster in question is the son of Reaves Eason, well-known director, who has been supervising the Harry Carey productions recently. It was Eason who produced "Human Stuff" for Universal, and who also held the megaphone on Carey's current feature, "Blue Streak McCoy," coming to the ...... Theatre on ....

Little "Breezy" is playing the part of a rich city youngster in "Blue Streak McCoy," and although he has played in a half dozen Western dramas, he admits that this is the hardest role he has ever essayed. Not that the part entailed any great amount of physical labor, but the mental anguish of the youthful player during some of the scenes was almost more than his little heart could stand.

Had the scenes of "Blue Streak McCoy" been laid on Fifth avenue, "Breezy" would have been quite at home in his Fauntleroy velvet suit and his golden curls. But the particular rich boy in this story is visiting the mining country in Texas, and the rough youngsters naturally tease him about his ringlets and about his clothes. "Breezy" spoiled many feet of film because he started after his tormentors when their jibes became unbearable, instead of loftily ignoring the juvenile roughnecks. Finally Eason Sr. promised his young son that if he would follow directions while the scene was being photographed he would be permitted to "beat up" the entire gang. This pacified the young actor, and the scenes were filmed as per 'script.'

JOB McCOY, on the first day of prohibition, is in a little Southwestern town, recovering from the last celebration. At the railroad he picks up the hat of a girl, blown from the observation platform of the Texas Limited. The girl, he learns, is Diana Hughes, makes her first trip West in the care of her uncle, Howard Marlowe, owner of a mine in Nineveh. Also in the party are Mrs. Marlowe and her son, Albert, five, a curly-haired "mama's darling."

Otis, superintendent of Marlowe's mine, is repulsed by Diana and renews an incipient love affair with Mrs. Marlowe. Job reaches town tired and footsore and enlists in the Border Rangers. A great quantity of bullion is stored in a strong room under ground. Otis conspires with Mulhall, leader of a band of toughs, to loot the strong room. Otis plans also to elope with Mrs. Marlowe at the time of the getaway with the gold. Mrs. Marlowe hangs back, and to persuade her to go Otis conspires with his mistress, Conchita, to frame up Marlowe so that Mrs. Marlowe will think he is unfaithful to her. Shocked at the revelation, Mrs. Marlowe consents to go.

Job has become aware of the love affair and keeps constant watch. The robbery is carried off according to schedule, and Mrs. Marlowe flees with her son and Otis to the abandoned mine where the gold is to be divided. During the division Mrs. Marlowe is left in another building with her son. Job appears and tells her that, for the boy's sake she must go back. Otis returns unexpectedly and gets the drop on Job. In a thrilling fight Job beats Otis, but the fight is seen by one of Mulhall's men, and the whole party attacks the isolated building. Just as the desperadoes are closing in the Rangers appear over the brow of the ridge, guided by Conchita, who, in a jealous rage on learning of Otis's duplicity, has told her story to the authorities. The desperadoes are either killed or captured. Marlowe realizes his debt to Job.

Job has seen a young "buddy" of his in the rangers' service gradually win the affections of Diana. In this final scene he learns the pair are to be married.

ADVANCE STORY

AN appealing story of thrilling action, self-sacrifice and love, written by H. H. Van Loan, foremost screen author, will be shown at the .... Theatre on .... when Harry Carey is presented in his latest Universal feature, "Blue Streak McCoy."

Job McCoy drifts into the border country of the Southwest. The Ranger service appeals to his adventuresome spirit, so he joins and becomes active in protecting the mining interests. Marlowe, a prominent operator, has a son who recalls to Job his own youth and the two become great friends. Marlowe's niece, Diana, also strikes his fancy and stirs him to better deeds. Unfortunately, Marlowe's wife is attracted by her husband's manager, Otis, who plans to steal his employer's gold and elope with her. Job interrupts their plans, wins the admiration of Diana and the sincere gratitude of Marlowe, who offers Job any favor it is within his power to grant. How Job stifles his great desire and masks his feelings in order to bring happiness to his "buddie" and the girl he loves are told in the concluding scenes of what has been called the year's best Western story, "Blue Streak McCoy."

Reaves Eason, who directed "Fightin' Job," selected some notable players for the leading roles in support of Mr. Carey, among the principals being Ruth Royce, Ray Ripley, Breezy Eason, Charles LeMoyne, Ruth Golden, Lila Leslie, Charles Arling and Benny Alexander.

REGARDING THE STAR

Speak of the West to almost any theatregoer and it will bring to mind an image of Harry Carey, the first actor to portray the "Beyond-the-Rockies" type on the screen, and for the past several years the most popular of the so-called Western stars.

It is strange indeed that Harry Carey, who is now one of the best liked—it might be said beloved—of film actors, should have begun his screen career as a heavy. But that was in the early days of the photoplay, when David Griffith, directing the old Biograph Company, surrounded himself with a coterie of players, almost all of whom have since been elevated to stardom. Western stories were very popular in those days, and Harry Carey usually played the bad man. And to his credit it must be admitted that he won friends and admirers even in roles that invited hisses rather than applause.

However, any man possessing Carey's human characteristics, appealing features and irresistible smile could not long remain a heavy. The public made him a star by continuous demands for his presence on the bill, and for the past six years he has been one of Universal's most important luminaries, with his popularity increasing with every new release.

Before beginning his career in the silent drama Harry Carey was a successful legitimate actor, starring in two plays of his own creation, "The Heart of Alaska" and "Montana," proving that even on the stage he preferred the virile and rugged type of play.

His latest production, "Blue Streak McCoy," written by H. H. Van Loan, author of "The Virgin of Stamboul," and directed by Reaves Eason, is scheduled for next .... at the .... Theatre.

HARRY LIKE TEDDY

A WELL-KNOWN newspaper writer recently called attention to the similarity of the early lives of Theodore Roosevelt and Harry Carey, the popular Universal star. Both were born in New York City and both studied law at Columbia University. Both went West for their health about the time they reached their majority and both became so imbued with ranch life that the characteristics of the open plains remained with them ever afterwards.

Harry Carey, who will appear at the .... Theatre in his latest Universal photodrama, "Blue Streak McCoy," is the son of a New York judge, and was to follow in his father's footsteps. But the stage appeal to Harry after he graduated from the law school, and he tried out his ability in a number of road companies. Then he went to Montana for his health and spent several years there, leading the life of a cowboy. While there he wrote the play, "Montana," in which he afterwards starred on the stage, and later wrote "The Heart of Alaska," which also served him for two seasons on the road.

In the world of the photodrama he may be looked upon as a pioneer; for Harry cast his lot with the new form of entertainment the moment it assumed definite dramatic form. He began with the Biograph Company when David Griffith was directing, and gained such popularity with theatregoers throughout the country that Universal selected him as a star. For the past four years his record has been one rousing success after another—due to his splendid dramatic training and, what is more important, to his thorough human traits and contagious smile.

NOTES FOR "BLUE STREAK McCOY"

Harry Carey can always be depended upon to surround himself with a capable company of players, and "Blue Streak McCoy," his latest production, now showing at the .... Theatre, is no exception. The principal roles are in the hands of Lila Leslie, Ruth Golden, Ruth Royce, Reaves Eason, Charles Arling, Rap Ripley, Charles LeMoyne, Florence Hart and Bennie Alexander.

A gold-producing mine in Nevada was used as a background for a sequence of scenes in Harry Carey's newest production, "Blue Streak McCoy," now being shown at the .... Theatre, while the Western star and a score of other players spent ten days on the Mojave Desert for several other scenes in this photodrama, which was written for Carey by H. H. Van Loan.

The rebellion of little Job McCoy after the boys have taunted him about his pretty clothes and yellow curls, and which results in his clipping his own hair with his mother's scissors and administering a severe beating to his tormentors, is one of the most appealing scenes in "Blue Streak McCoy," the photodrama in which Harry Carey is now starring at the .... Theatre.

One of the reasons why Harry Carey, the popular Universal star, is so well fitted in the role of Job McCoy in "Blue Streak McCoy," now being shown at the .... Theatre, is the fact that H. H. Van Loan, the author of the story, is intimately acquainted with the star and knows every shade of his personality.

"UNDER NORTHERN LIGHTS" is a picture with the elements of romance, incident and dramatic moments mixed in the proper portions," says Motion Picture News. "Interest is aroused when the young mounted policeman falls in love with the French girl and it never lags. To give the story contrast and action, two characters are introduced. . . . These two characters furnish plenty of action and put up a thrilling fight in which the villain is killed. . . . Comedy relief is also furnished in the form of a negro who is always 'seeing things.' It is ludicrous indeed when he is seen pursued by a young bear, who does not hesitate to climb a ladder to 'get' the negro. This picture should give satisfaction wherever played."

Two Reel Rainbow Comedy
Featuring

BILLY ENGEL and LILLIAN BYRON

BILLY calls on Lilly in his two by four bath tub on four wheels, but dad objects because he wants Lilly to marry a millionaire. The millionaire comes to the farm in his limousine and when Lilly eludes him and spurns the limousine, preferring Billy's tub, the millionaire villain swears revenge. Dad pleads with Lilly to marry the millionaire but Lilly is obdurate and will have none of him.

Billy and Lilly run away with dad and the villain in hot pursuit. The pair land in a hayloft as do dad and the villain. A fight follows in which Billy is thrown out of the window by the villain and in turn strikes the latter with a mallet. When dad realizes, however, that Lilly will have only Billy he addresses the villain thus—"the tongue in your shoes better advise your feet that it's their move now." Whereupon Billy and Lilly disappear in the haystack.

How Long Does It Last ?

"What Our Subscribers Say About 'Once to Every Woman'"

FOR a few weeks past the Moving Picture Weekly has accorded space to a number of advertisements suggesting things that might happen "Once to Every Woman." They have been so soul searching and unique in character and copy that they have excited a great deal of comment and curiosity on the part of our readers. This curiosity has taken the form of letters to the editor in a number of instances. After a few score of them had been received the management felt that such earnest searching after the truth should be given fitting expression in the columns of the Weekly. In fact the Weekly has always been a ready forum for the expression of opinion and usually has a number of communications from exhibitors in each issue. In the present instance care has been taken to guard the identity of anyone who requested it and for that reason several of the letters are unsigned. We wish to reiterate that we will be only too glad to publish any letters we receive on this subject or any other that is pertinent.

Dear Sir:—

I see by your paper you are asking questions what comes Once to Every Woman. I would like to know if this is a contest. I am only a poor working girl, but I am sure I know the answer. It is love. I know it is thoughts of my Prince Charming that makes my days work lighter sometimes, and I just can't help telling you that it is love that comes once to every woman. Anyhow, I don't see what else it could be, for to me there is nothing so great that could happen to a girl but to fall in love and get married to the right man.

Respectfully,

News of New Specia

J. Farrell McDonald as the fiddler in "Hitchin' Posts," starring Frank Mayo.

WANTED—A SWEETHEART FOR CARMEL

"IS there always a thrill connected with being made love to by a nice, strong, handsome man? Is there ever a time when a pair of strong arms about you, two lips tilted near, tantalizingly near one's own, fail to transport one to the seventh heaven? Some folks with dreams of romance might say, 'Breathes there a woman with soul so dead' who does not respond to 'the time, the place and the man?' and I would blithely answer 'there does.'"

Such were the words of Carmel Myers, youthful star of the stage and screen, who is at present shedding her brilliance in Universal films after an absence of an entire year behind the Broadway footlights. Her first vehicle since her return is "In Folly's Trail," to be followed by "The Gilded Dream."

"I have played in motion pictures and on the stage," continued Carmel. "I have been held in the arms of the matinee idol of a million hearts and have listened to the whispered, passionate words of his ardor, while my eyes, from the close proximity of the Kliegs have felt like balls of fire instead of glistening orbs of love. I have been pursued by cruel fate till hope seemed useless and rescued at the psychological moment in his manly arms, just as the last inch of film turned, and then I had to be pursued and rescued all over again. I have worked all night till early the next morning, and have ended the grueling strain with a beautiful scene and culminating kiss meant to convey the wonderful joy of living.

"And yet," said Miss Myers frankly, "I have never been in love—never had a really, truly sweetheart, and all my romance, so far, has been make-believe."

WHY THEY CALL IT "HITCHIN' POSTS"

THE magic fiddle of Joe Alabam', river outcast, had saved hot-blooded Jefferson Todd from his raging temper in innumerable crises, but there came a time when the latter struggled on the brink of a cliff with his life time enemy.

Then Joe Alabam' smashed his fiddle and was content.

A gambler, a fiddler and a dog wander from hitchin' post to hitchin' post in the South in the seventies, and the story leads from the Mississippi to the oil fields of the Far West. So there is plenty of application for the title "Hitchin' Posts." It is a story of a man in equal parts good and bad, and therefore human; of another man all bad, and therefore unhuman. And there is a girl. That's "Hitchin' Posts," the Universal film made from the story by H. M. Shumate.

Frank Mayo is the star in a Frank Keenan characterization, but J. Farrell McDonald comes close to the star in the bid for popularity in "Hitchin' Posts" as a down-trodden fiddler whose soothing melodies save the gambler-hero from himself at several crises, but who smashes his fiddle rather than dissuade Mayo from meting out final punishment to the scoundrel of the story.

Beatrice Burnham, Jos. Harris, Mark Fenton, Dagmar Godowsky, C. E. Anderson, Duke Lee and M. Biddulph are all seen to advantage in this picture produced by Jack Ford.

The scenic beauty of the production and the exquisite photography require special mention.

Harry Carey and the members of the "Blue Streak McCoy" company on location, Reaves Eason directing; Val Paul, who is going to direct Carey in "Sundown Slim," standing at left.

Attractions

Power of the N. W. M. P. Basis of Jaccard Story

THE Royal Northwest Mounted Police, known the world over for their deeds of courage and bravery and the romance attached to the members of the corps, are the centre of interest in Jacques Jaccard's special attraction, "Under Northern Lights." Leonard Clapham, Virginia Faire and William Buckley have the leading roles in this romance of the Northwoods, playing roles typical of the locale.

Order is maintained throughout the entire Northwest, not only among the population, but among the Indians and the much more troublesome halfbreeds, by the Northwest Mounted Police, a body of seven hundred and fifty men, whose record has for years received unqualified praise. The members of this force are armed like soldiers, so as to fight collectively, yet have the authority to act individually as constables. The officers in the service are also empowered to act as magistrates — the combination which makes it possible to extent law and order over such tremendous areas by such a small force of men.

Jacques Jaccard has taken as a basis for his story of "Under Northern Lights" just a few facts from the records of service in this noted constabulary. Jaccard is an honorary member of the R. N. W. M. P., and his knowledge of their activities is vast and accurate.

It is a well-known fact that one constable has been known to ride directly into an Indian camp containing hundreds of armed savages and carry off, single-handed, a member of the tribe who was wanted on a charge of murder. The Indians are mortally afraid of the Mounted Police and prefer death to capture or sentence by them after committing a crime.

Third Lyons-Moran

EDDIE LYONS and Lee Moran have started on the third of their comedy features at Universal City, a story by Edgar Franklin entitled "Once a Plumber——" The success of "Everything bu the Truth" was eclipsed by the screaming hit, "La La Lucille," and the stars are confident of continuing their crescendo movement with their current creation. "Once a Plumber——" is a story of two young partners in the steam-fitting business in a small city. One is quite satisfied with his lot, and is looking forward to marrying the girl of his heart. The other partner has socialistic tendencies. He feels that the plumbing business is beneath him, and he envies the millionaire who owns the big mansion on the hill.

On the eve of a reception at the home of the millionaire the two young plumbers are called in to make some repairs. Overhearing the grumbling of the younger workman, the magnate offers him an opportunity to realize his ambitions. He invites the young men to stay as his guests, providing them with names, clothes and other requisites, makes them officials of a high-sounding corporation, and the boys finally wake up to discover that they have been led into a trap to shield two friends of the rich man who had skated on thin ice of high finance and become enmeshed in the coils of the law.

Dear Sirs:

While I have read your publication for several years, getting it from my uncle, who runs the ——— Theatre, Omaha, I have never yet wrote to you, although tempted to several times. This time I can't help telling you that those questions you are asking about what happens and what comes "Once to Every Woman" have got me thinking and wanting to know your idea.

I think there are lots of things that come to every woman, but I have tried in vain to think of anything that happens only once, and then that it happens to every woman. I'm sure I don't know, and I'm simply crazy to know the answer. Won't you write by return mail and tell me?

It can't be love, because some women never are loved. And there are lots of other things it can't be. So I wish you'd write and tell me the answer to those puzzling little designs in your publication. Very truly yours,

The Screen, The Only Medium Through which a French Story Can be Told to An American Audience.

Una Trevelyn, Clyde Filmore and Sam De Grasse in a tense scene from "The Devil's Passkey," in which the author refuses to shake hands with the man he believes to be his wife's lover and who has paid his wife's modiste bill

THE tremendous success scored by by Erich Von Stroheim's first Universal production, "Blind Husbands," which has been unanimously acclaimed one of the year's notable masterpieces, focuses the searchlight of public interest on that director's next achievement, "The Devil's Passkey," which will be released early this fall.

Von Stroheim and his assistants were busy in the laboratory and editorial rooms for several weeks, supervising and assembling and cutting of the film. Over 100,000 feet of film was exposed for "The Devil's Passkey," and it was quite a task to reduce this mass of footage to the 7,000 feet of the finished picture. The director himself came to New York with the final cutting to make certain it reached 1600 Broadway safely.

Officials of Universal City who have watched the filming of the production, the daily runs in the projection room and more recently in the laboratory, are enthusiastic in their praise of the newest Von Stroheim creation. They declare that in "Blind Husbands" this director has only given a promise of what he is capable of evolving on the screen, and that in "The Devil's Passkey" he has soared to much greater heights.

Baroness DeMeyer wrote the story of this photodrama under the title of "Clothes and Treachery." It deals with Parisian life after the war, and no one knows her French capital more thoroughly than the Baroness, except be it Von Stroheim himself, who spent a great part of his early manhood in the gay European city.

Many of the finest gems of Parisian literature and drama have been spoiled in the telling or presentation by being translated to English, because our language is incapable of expressing the fine shades of meaning possessed by the Gallic tongue, and because few American actors have the necessary temperament to interpret a real Parisian story. But here is where Von Stroheim shines. Continental Europe is his birthplace. As an Austrian count he mingled in the most exclusive circles in every capital from Petrograd to London, knows the gay and fashionable life of every European city, and still retains the point of view with which to mirror a French story as the author intended it.

The story of "The Devil's Passkey" deals with a Parisian dramatist, his pretty and extravagant wife, a fashionable modiste who traffics in the folly of her exclusive patrons, an American officer having his fling in Paris before returning home, a gorgeous countess whose reputation is in the hands of the crafty shopkeeper and dozens of other characters who enter plausibly into the plot. Settings of the most beautiful design serve as a background for the story. Parisian streets and boulevards, the Odeon Theatre, the Allied Bazaar, the Grand Prix and a score of other places and incidents have been reproduced for this feature with rare accuracy.

Chief among the players who participate in "The Devil's Passkey" are Sam de Grasse, Clyde Fillmore and Una Trevelyn, who are shown in a scene at the top of this page, and Maude George, Ruth King, Mae Busch and Leo White.

Edward Laemmle Who Accompanied Wm. F. Alder to the Wildest Part of Polynesia to Produce Western Pictures at Universal City.

EDWARD LAEMMLE, who with William F. Alder, went through many hair-raising adventurers in the South Seas to film the remarkable sequence of scenes from which "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" was made, has left New York for Los Angeles, where he will join the directorial staff at Universal City. It is the reward promised to him by his uncle, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, for the excellent work the young man did on his Oriental explorations.

Still having a taste in his mouth for the wild and simple life, such as encountered for many months in the heart of the New Guinea cannibal country, young Laemmle has chosen to break in by directing "Westerns." He says he wants plenty of action. He says he had brought back a few "stunts" from Polynesia that will make the old-time screen cowboys sit up in their saddles and take notice. Mr. Laemmle will start with a Western company making two-reelers.

Dear Sir:

Having noticed in your paper the ads. about what comes "Once to Every Woman," I want to say it is the moment when she must choose between the right and the wrong path. That comes once to every woman, and when it comes she must decide her whole future right then and there.

At least it is so with most, for we all want pretty clothes and other things that it costs money to buy. And every woman knows from reading the newspapers how chorus girls marry millionaires and have everything their hearts crave.

But all young girls don't realize the price she must pay to get them. I think that it would do a great benefit to the country if the Universal Company or some other firm would put out a picture showing this great lesson that comes in every woman's life. I am sure it would do lots of good.

Sincerely yours,

"I AM quite sure you will enjoy seeing this film record of a daring adventure. It is interesting from start to finish. There are no dull moments. The views are all genuine.

"The scenes of the cannibals at home are very interesting. The photography is very clear and the close-ups many. You become quite well acquainted with these ferocious creatures, who had, just a few months before their pictures were taken, dined upon a missionary and who look quite ready to make a stew of our daring camera men.

"The scenes of their savage rites are fascinatng without being so gruesome as to be repellent. The camera men have used good judgement in selecting the scenes so that the picture, while thrilling, is not offensive."

Rob Reel--the famous critic of the Chicago Eve. American Says

"THE LaSalle is having a time seating all the Chicagoans who crave a close view of cannibals and their haunts."

"The pictures are exciting and intensely interesting and different. The Kia Kias have the modern love of make-up to a superlative degree also of tobacco and the "shinny." Their dancing is not unlike that of the Indians, but there is a bit of a wriggle thrown in which makes you know you are in the tropics and not in North America. In the gentle art of painting the face, they are not held down by the conventional two red dabs on each cheek, a smear of the same for the mouth and sooty pools for the eyes. Each warrior translates to his face his ideas of manly beauty and the results are as varied as they are weird."

says in the Chicago Daily Journal

"THERE have been cannibal pictures before but it is safe to say that never have there been any as remarkable as this now on exhibition. Aside from the awe this film inspires, there is an educational value not to be ignored.—It looks as if the missing link were found.

"Brisk sub-titles explain as the film unwinds. The photography, for the most part, is unexpectedly clear—it should be remembered that much was done by microphotography. Mr. Laemmle has accomplished an accurate pictorial history of a race of which little has hitherto been known. It is worthy of the utmost consideration."

AM I sore? You bet!—sore as a toasted flea. Here I am, making thousands of people laugh, building up a big following, and what happens? Do I get credit? NO. The boss gets the credit—the coin, too. But he can't make a money out of me. I'll organize a union in the zoo here with Charlie, the Elephant, as Chief Persuader, and if the boss don't come across soon with more red meat for me and the wiff we'll strike and put one awful crimp in his bankroll. This is a fair warning—no monkey business.

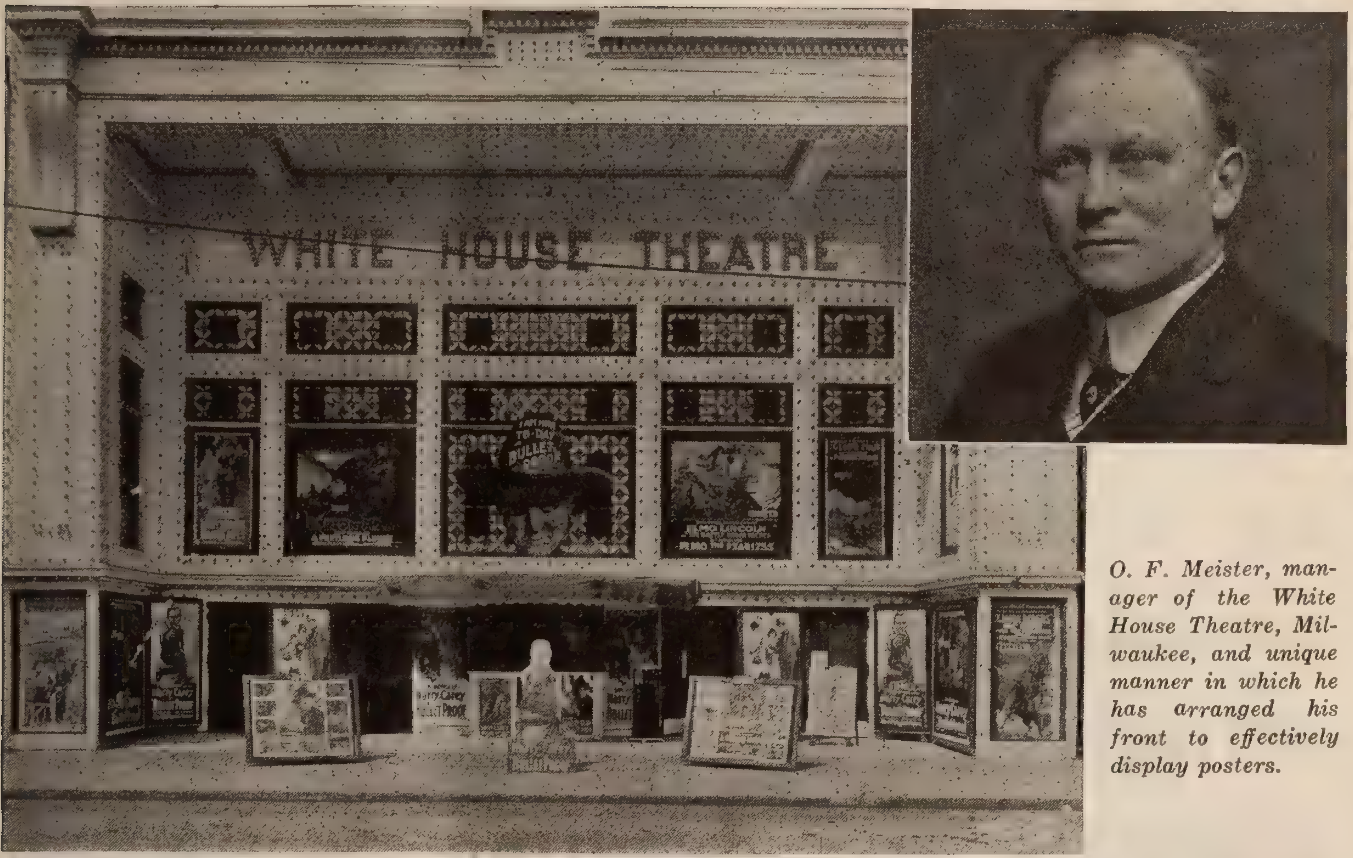
How Meister Uses His Posters



O. F. Meister, manager of the White House Theatre, Milwaukee, and unique manner in which he has arranged his front to effectively display posters.

O. F. MEISTER, the efficient and highly successful manager of the Whitehouse Theatre in Milwaukee, attributes considerable of his success to the novel manner in which the front of his house is designed. When he modelled this house, Mr. Meister endeavored to work out a plan whereby he could give his passion for posters full sway and yet have an attractive setting for them. His lobby is virtually a huge frame for posters and one glance at the accompanying photograph will show how these are arranged and what a beautiful effect they make. Meister believes in threes and sixes. He has space for four three-sheets and two sixes in the lower brackets of his huge frame work with a double row of incandescents thrown all over the intersections. The big center part he usually uses as the frame for a cut-out. The sidewalk frames are also utilized in the same way with room for eight threes and two sixes. In addition to that, there are four ones and two frames containing lobby display photographs.

This is not an unusual display at all, for Mr. Meister. Because he has the space for all of these posters does not mean that he does not use them outside of his theatre too. He believes thoroughly in posters and uses a great many of them on billboards situated on car lines which lead to his theatre.

As will be noticed, this is an exclusive Universal display. It shows he is playing Harry Carey in "Bullet Proof" and the big cut-out in the center is taken from a twenty-four sheet Harry Carey stand. In addition to the feature, he is playing the two-reel Rainbow Comedy, "A Champion Loser," and the International Weekly. The Sunday bill includes "The Lion Man" serial and "Hoot" Gibson in "The Texas Kid" and on Tuesday he plays Elmo Lincoln in "Elmo the Fearless" and the Rainbow Comedy, "Light Hearts and Leaking Pipes." He is starting the advertising of "The Moon Riders," the first episode of which he plays on the following Thursday, with a three sheet double poster at the extreme right of his lobby. The immediate interior is decorated with permanent pictures of the popular stars which play continually at the Whitehouse Theatre. Mr. Meister also makes effective use of cut-outs as will be seen by the cut-out of Harry Carey in the center of the picture.

CAST

Grant	Eddie Polo
Nell	Peggy O'Dare
Sonia	Ruth Royce
Zan	Karl Silvera
Beth	Thelma Percy

JOHN EDWARD GRANT and Nell Claypool escape from the room in which they had been cornered by Mike, Sonia, Zan and their henchmen and start to cross two planks stretched from a window to the building opposite. But Mike, reaching the window just as Grant and Nell are midway across, shakes the planks, precipitating Grant and Nell to the pavement of the alley far below. Grant and Nell by chance fall upon a stack of clothes that have been on the wash-line, and are not seriously hurt.

Mike, swinging down to the alley by means of a rope, obtains a disk that has fallen from Nell's pocket. This disk tells of the hiding place of the vanishing dagger and the Decker jewels in Scotland. Mike determines to proceed at once to Scotland, as do Zan and Sonia, who overcome Grant and Nell with a gas bomb and place the pair in the back of a country wagon, concealing them with canvas.

Reviving, Grant and Nell find that they are some miles out in the country, but fortunately close to a depot on the line to Glasgow, Scotland. Mike, who is on board the train that pulls into the station, sees Grant and Nell board it.

Prince Zan and Sonia, having engaged an auto to speed them to Scotland, are nearing Glasgow as the train pulls in to Glasgow with Mike, Grant and Nell. A confederate of Mike awaits him at the depot. They decide to dispose of Grant and Nell before beginning their search for the dagger and jewels. While Grant has left Nell to get a taxi she is overpowered by Mike and his aid, Jean, and tied to an iron gate in an alleyway. Jean then doubles back to misdirect Grant when he returns with the taxi. Mike and his hirelings then proceed to the shipyards, where the dagger and the jewels are presumed to be hidden.

Meantime, in Los Angeles, Beth succeeds in escaping from Maztos, Zan's henchman, and, after fleeing down a fire escape, is run down by an auto in the street. Beth is rushed to the hospital.

Grant goes to the shipyards and sees Mike digging under a bridge. Grant overpowers Mike, taking from him a small box he had dug up. Mike and his thugs pursue Grant, who is struck on the head by a stone and falls senseless into the canal.

BUT Buck had not really been hurt and had feigned unconsciousness. A fight ensues between the ranchers and the moon riders, during which Egbert and Anna make a spectacular getaway on an aerial bridge, with Buck in hot pursuit. Egbert takes Anna to a mountain cave, where he lowers her deep down in an underground cavity, leaving her there alone. She, however, has been clever enough to steal from him the money bag.

In the meantime, Rosa, seriously wounded and delirious, has been taken to Baldwin's house, where she is treated by a doctor. Unnoticed by the nurse, she wanders from the house, and comes upon Egbert and Anna, who are just entering the cave. When Buck, hot on their trail, espies Rosa, she tells him where Egbert had taken Anna. Buck climbs down into the cavity, and the delirious Rosa creeps into the cave. Egbert has seen Buck, however, and still thinking that he is in possession of all the money, plans to do away with Buck and Anna. He places a burning dynamite fuse in the cave, which explodes, burying Rosa and tearing open the water pipe in the cavity below. The water bursts forth, and as it is engulfing Buck and Anna, Anna makes the confession of her forced marriage to Egbert.

The ranchers, however, led by "Arizona," are in hot pursuit and come upon Rosa endeavoring to squeeze her way out of the wreckage covering her. She points to the cavity where Buck and Anna are slowly going to a torturous death. The water has just completely engulfed them when the ranchers become aware of their plight.

MAIZIE GRAY and her widowed mother are squatters on a few acres of the Blue River Range, where they determine to carry out their end of the bitter war always waged between the cowboy and squatter. The girl is wooed by Curly Crow, a designing cowpuncher, whom the mother fears. A smiling stranger appears one day, and the girl falls for his clean-cut manners. He departs, however, warned by Curly Crow to keep away from his reserve. He is more worried, however, by overhearing Curly tell the girl that he, Curly, is the only one that can prevent Cal Cady, boss of the Blue River Range, from ejecting them from their little homestead.

Stranger sets out in search of Curly Crow, who has joined the forces of Scorpion, bandit chieftain, at his hiding place. He comes across Scorpion mistreating Chicquita, whom he has stolen from her people. In the fight that ensues, Stranger is captured and tied to a scaffold, but a stogie which Scorpion has stuck in his mouth, proves a life-saver, for he burns the rope with its fire and dashes back to the Morgan ranch, where he gives the alarm, and, together with the cowpunchers, he captures the bandits.

Later Maizie goes to the haystack for an armful of hay, and uncovers the face of Curly Crow. Her screams bring her mother on the scene, and together they discover the entire gang gagged in the haystack. But their surprise is still greater when they discover that Stranger is no other than Cal Cady, boss of the range, whom they had so feared. Maizie, in trepidation, asks Cal if he will make them move, as Curly had threatened, and Cal smilingly answers: "Maybe if you let me come to see you—lots—I'll let you stay—for a while."

MR. EVERY EXHIBITOR:—
EVERYWHERE IN AMERICA:—

Universal has watched with growing interest the formation of Booking Agencies in various parts of the country. Knowing well from past performances the evils of collective bookings, we desire to sound a note of warning to our friends, the exhibitors, and caution them not to rush headlong into one of these organizations without first considering all the facts in the case.

The fundamental principle of booking through a central agency is wrong—dead wrong. The moment an exhibitor ties up with such an agency he sounds his own death-knell. From that moment his progress ceases, healthy competition becomes a thing of the past and the small theatre owner becomes but a pawn in the hands of a blind, floundering machine.

The individual exhibitor himself is the best man to decide what pictures are to go on his screen. He knows the likes and dislikes of his audience, and he alone is the logical man to select the program for his theatre. Promises made by the Booking Agencies sound good on paper, but they all end the same way—IN SMOKE!

Every time the exhibitors of America have been engaged in a fight for recognition, UNIVERSAL has been with them body and soul. We have lent our financial as well as our moral support. NOW, when we see our friends standing on the brink of a dangerous precipice, we FEEL IT OUR DUTY TO WARN THEM TO PAUSE AND CONSIDER WELL WHAT THEY ARE DOING.

Other industries are at this moment making every effort to ELIMINATE THE MIDDLEMAN. Why then should the motion picture industry do the opposite and deliberately CREATE A MIDDLEMAN? The ring-leaders in forming these Booking Agencies are not thinking of the exhibitors; they are thinking of THEMSELVES and FAT SALARIES and PERCENTAGES.

In other words, they are creating JOBS AT YOUR EXPENSE.

Can you afford to share your profits with a middleman? We think you cannot!

EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY, UNIVERSAL WILL NOT DEAL WITH ANY BOOKING AGENCY. THE ONLY WAY WE WILL SELL OUR PRODUCT IS DIRECTLY TO THE MAN WHO OWNS THE THEATRE. THIS IS OUR FINAL AND UNALTERABLE STAND.

You Can't Book Pictures By Machinery!

THE STORY

DOUGLAS MAC LEOD, a Constable of the Royal North West Mounted Police, stationed at Lebee, falls in love with Suzanne Foucharde. A short distance away lives Louis LaRoque, a professional gambler, and Madge Carson, his common-law wife. An Indian girl comes to find LaRoque, who had married and then deserted her. LaRoque refuses to take care of her and the baby. Broken hearted she lays the baby on the ground, and hides. Douglas finds the baby, and takes it to Suzanne. The Indian girl with a note from LaRoque, proving that he is the father of her child, clutched in her hands, jumps off a cliff. Suzanne agrees to take care of the baby until the Missionary comes, and Douglas leaves.

In the meantime, Jacques Foucharde, Suzanne's brother comes back from the Yukon with a small fortune. LaRoque persuades him to play poker, hoping to make a cleaning. Jacques catches LaRoque and Madge cheating, and accuses them. A terrific fight starts. When the lights are lit, Jacques is gone, and LaRoque is on the floor dead. Jacques goes to Suzanne.

Uncle Abner finds the dead Indian girl gone. Douglas finds that Jacques killed the gambler. When Douglas comes, Suzanne declares she has not seen Jacques. Douglas knows he is in the room. His duty is to arrest Jacques, but he loves the sister. Duty wins, however, and he arrests Jacques, although Suzanne says she will never see him again. He takes Jacques to his cabin and telling his men to go inside, for he wants to talk to Jacques alone for a moment. He tells Jacques that his horse can make the border in three hours. He turns his back, and Jacques jumps on the horse and gallops out. Burke, hearing, runs out and fires, Douglas jumps in front and takes the bullet. He falls in Burke's arms. He tells Burke to tell Suzanne that he did what she wanted him to, then falls back unconscious, apparently dead.

Some time later, Douglas, still weak, comes into the woods with Suzanne. Burke gives him three stripes for his Sergeant Uniform, showing that Douglas is re-instated, and the escape forgotten.

Suzanne was his shrine—his idol. One breath of calumny and he saw red. All else was forgotten. Only blood could efface the stain of the vile aspersion. One situation in "Under Northern Lights."

Douglas MacLeod, of the Royal North West mounted police, had but two ambitions—a sergeant's stripes and the hand of Suzanne. Yet fate so stacked the cards that he could not win one without losing the other. How did it end? See "Under Northern Lights."

Even in the Northern woods budding nature plays havoc with the heart of youth. See "Under Northern Lights."

Jacques Jaccard, King of the Camera Thrill, who produced "The Great Air Robbery," wrote and directed "Under Northern Lights." There's a spinal throb in every foot.

He was a coyote on the trail of humanity—sleeping by day—prowling by night—living upon the misery of his fellowmen. Such was Louis La Roque in "Under Northern Lights."

CONCERNING THE STARS "UNDER NORTHERN LIGHTS"

Leonard Clapham, Virginia Faire and William Buckley have the principal roles in "Under Northen Lights," coming to the .... Theatre on .... Clapham and Miss Faire are graduates of the Universal school of film drama, which has produced more stars of the first magnitude than can be claimed by all the other motion picture companies combined. Leonard Clapham, who is a Kentuckian of splendid appearance and fine physique, was introduced to the Universal Studios by his schoolmate, J. Warren Kerrigan, when he was starring at the Big U. That was about three years ago, and he has been doing splendid work ever since. He played the leading heavy role in the recent serial success, "The Lion Man," then appeared in the leading role in "Her Five Foot Highness," opposite Edith Roberts.

A thrilling and absorbing story concerning the activities of that famous body of guardians of the law, the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, titled "Under Northern Lights," is announced for the .... Theatre on next .... This latest Universal production was written and supervised by Jacques Jaccard, who produced two Universal Serials as well as "The Great Air Robbery."

"Under Northern Lights," tells about Douglas MacLeod, a constable in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, who is in love with Suzanne Foucharde. When Jacques Foucharde, Suzanne's brother returns rich from Alaska, he is enticed by La Roque, a professional gambler, into a card game. The young miner discovers he is being cheated and a fight follows. When the excitement is over, LaRogue lies dead on the floor. McLeod, finding the body of LaRoque, faces the painful duty of arresting the brother of the girl he desires to make his wife. He does his duty despite the fact that Suzanne declares she will never see him again.

The subsequent happenings that bring "Under Northern Lights," to a happy ending are tense with dramatic situations and extremely thrilling. A splendid cast of principals includes Leonard Clapham, Virginia Faire, William Buckley, Oleta Ottis, Herbert Bethew and many others.

Jacques Jaccard, who wrote and directed "Under Northern Lights," coming to the .... Theatre next .... and dealing with the activities of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, is an honorary member of these famous riders of the law whose exploits have figured in song, story and tradition. He has lived and worked with the mounted guardians of the law and knows their history thoroughly.

COCA COLA GIRL IN FILMS

Beauty Who Succeeded Alice Joyce As A Model For Illustrated Advertisements Seen In "Under Northern Lights.

THOUSANDS of theatre-goers throughout the country, when they see Oleta Ottis in "Under Northern Lights, a forthcoming Universal Special Attraction, will wonder where they had seen the young women before. Her face will be strangely familiar, and yet she is new to the films, having appeared before in "The Triflers," a Universal production.

The fact that for three years Miss Ottis was the girl whose pretty face figured in most of the advertisements of the Coca Cola Company. The publicity for this concern was conducted by N. W. Ayer & Son, advertising experts, of Philadelphia, and Miss Ottis, who was at that time a member of the stock company at the Chestnut Street Opera House, in the Quaker City, served as model for the photographic copy exploiting the beverage. Therefore the smiling face of Miss Ottis has been seen in almost every newspaper, billboard, street car and magazine in America and abroad.

It is a coincidence that Alice Joyce, the film star, was also a model for the Philadelphia advertising firm, Miss Ottis taking her place when Miss Joyce went to California to engage in film work.

Combine Exploitation with Showing

A FAR-REACHING method of combined film selling and picture exploitation was arrived at by Universal officials in a pow-wow recently held in Chicago, and which was attended by a score or more of sales managers, exploitation specialists and salesmen, headed by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for the Universal sales organization.

A new departure in the presentation of photo-plays to exhibitors was inaugurated and will be installed with "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the Universal feature filmed in the wilds of New Guinea. Henceforth, projection-room presentation will be accompanied by elaborate exploitation including lobby displays. In this way, the exhibitor will be able to see various ways of exploiting the picture at the time he books it.

Arrangements have been completed to make the initial exchange showings of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" a model of exploitation suggestion. Among the added displays available for the use of the exhibitor on this feature are six oil paintings 20 x 68 inches, of the most unusual type of Kia-Kia cannibals and four attractive signs, also 20 x 68. There also are display cards bearing excerpts from the diary of William F. Alder and Edward Laemmle, the two cameramen who were shipwrecked among the Kia-Kias.

It is planned to put in the hands of each exhibitor who will use it, a lobby display exactly similiar to those used during the initial showing of the picture, in the Astor Theatre, New York City and duplicated at the La Salle Theatre, Chicago. These lobby displays attracted great attention and resulted in greatly enhanced box office receipts.

The assembled Universal sales managers saw a pre-view of the Cannibal picture while in Chicago. All were enthusiastic over it and united in saying that the country is ripe for a screen novelty such as the two Universal camera-men brought back from the South Seas.

Among those present at the conference were Art Schmidt and Louis Baum, district managers for Universal exchanges in the Middle West, Cleve Adams, manager of the Cincinnati exchange, Ralph Abbett of Indianapolis, W. D. Ward, of Detroit, M. A. Chase, of Buffalo, J. H. Calvert of Kansas City. H. F. Lefholtz of Omaha, I. Gettlesman of Minneapolis, Edgar B. Haines of Des Moines, George Levine of Milwaukee, I. L. Leserman of Chicago, Barney Rosenthal of St. Louis, as well as the exploitation men of the various exchanges.

Upon returning from Chicago, Mr. Berman spoke with great enthusiasm of the success of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" at the La Salle Theatre in that city.

FEATURE NEWS SERVICE

THE backbone of a service of pictures is a crackerjack news release. Every big releasing company has felt the need of that because every exhibitor wants a fine news reel to bring his show up to the minute. Universal has always been in a very fortunate position on that account because it has always had the best news release on the market at any price. The peculiar advantages that accrue to International News through an unlimited newspaper alliance have given it the title of "The Feature News Reel" among exhibitors.

During the past two weeks International has spent a barrel of money in getting the cream of the yachting news for the lovers of international yachting. One of their best beats was the release of the first moving picture ever made of an international cup race. It is a picture of the old Columbia. Of this years race the International has pictures taken from every conceivable angle even from the clouds.

The most recent feature of the "Feature News Service," is the presentation of the Republican and Democratic presidential candidates taken together. Of course they haven't been seen together since the nomination, but by the means of double exposure, the International has given to the country a singularly graphic and comparative picture of these two Ohio newspapermen, one of whom will sit in the White House next year.

NEW EXCHANGE CREATED

AN important re-arrangement in the alignment of its sales force has just been made by Universal, it was recently announced by H. M. Berman, general manager of exchanges. A new sales district has been created, embracing a large section of the Atlantic seaboard, with headquarters in Philadelphia.

A new sales district to be known as the Atlantic Division, will include such important centers as Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Wilkes Barre and Richmond. Parts of New Jersey, Pennsylvania Maryland, Delaware and Virginia, are included in the new territory. Later it is expected to include the Carolinas.

The new district will be supervised by E. J. Smith, as District Sales Manager. For the last year he has been Manager of Universal's Cleveland Exchange. He attracted the attention of Universal officials by going "over the top" in a whirlwind sales contest last winter and winning first prize with the Cleveland Exchange. Smith has been with Universal for five years. He started in as a salesman in the Buffalo exchange. His personality and salesmanship soon started him on the up-grade.

The affairs of the Cleveland exchange are being managed temporarily by Art Schmidt, District Sales Manager.

Her First Big Role

Virginia Faire Who Won the Fame and Fortune Contest Has Worked Nine Months Faithfully and Intelligently. She Has Her Reward In the Leading Role In "Under Northern Lights."

WHEN Virginia Faire was declared winner of the Fame and Fortune contest held by the leading fan magazines last Fall, Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, showed his usual good judgement in placing the young aspirant for screen honors under a tentative contract.

Although the young woman had received oceans of publicity, although her features were known to the majority of motion picture patrons, and though she had displayed marked talent in the film produced in course of the contest, Mr. Laemmle did not at once place Miss Faire in prominent roles. He wanted her to begin at the bottom, learn the art step by step, and reach the top by her own efforts and through sheer merit alone.

After nine months of apprenticeship, Virginia Faire is now considered ripe for leading roles, and she has been cast for the chief feminine part in "Under Northern Lights," Jacques Jaccard's story of the Royal North West Mounted Police just produced at Universal City. Jaccard, who has tried the girl out in several short subjects, is enthusiastic about her many qualities which are sure to endear her to the theatregoers. In the first place she has extreme youth, unusual beauty, and features which indicate a high order of intelligence. She is sincere in her work and persevering in her efforts to learn all there is to know about the histrionic art. She possesses natural dramatic talent, which the public will be quick to realize when "Under Northern Lights" is released for exhibition.

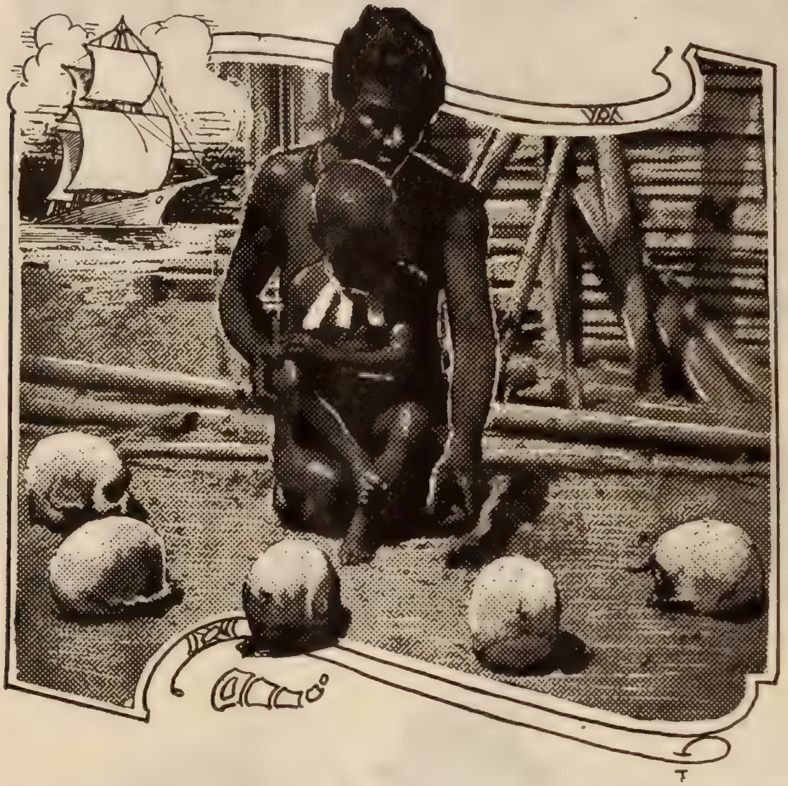
Human Skulls Are Playthings For Children of Kia Kia Tribe



The children of the rich have expensive toys to play with. The children of the poor content themselves with rag-baby dolls, and home-made toys. THE WOOZY CRAWL FASHIONABLE IN HOOLA

"Every little movement has a meaning of its own."

Oh, boy you otta see 'em in New Guinea.

Say, lemme tell you night life among the Kai-Kai's would make the night life of New York look like the Victorian period.

Nothing doing in the day time. They sleep from sunrise to sunset, but when the red orb sinks into the ocean the Kai-Kai stars start to shine, there is something doing.

Lizzie Umboo, the chief's daughter, is the vamp of the island. Lizzie would make Cleopatra look like Pollyanna. All the Kai-Kai warriors are her Mark. If Flo Ziegfeld was on his job, he would be over there with a contract signing her up for the next hundred years, for Lizzie's kind improves with age—the older they get in New Guinea, the better they shimmy.

About 1 a. m. in Hoola the principal village, there is a mixture of Murray's, Churchill's, Little Italy and Chinatown of before Prohibition days, all going strong.

You would not think it possible to wear any less clothing than they wear in the Lobster Palaces on Broadway, but then, we didn't think there'd be a war.

Wine flows as free as the Hudson—no one dances with his own wife and it doesn't cost a cent—they don't know what money is in that place. For two cocoanuts and a string of beads you can have a celebration that will make Armistice Day seem like a cemetery.

Note

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" is without a doubt the most unusual moving picture ever made. But even more than that it is a tremendous sensation as a box office magnet. It is going to prove a Godsend to thousands of exhibitors this summer. But it will not be half the success you could make it unless you exploit it properly and put it over right. The press sheet issued by the Universal Press Department is a mighty fine affair and will give you plenty of material with which to work. Get it from your exchange by all means and use the methods and accesories you find there. A very few of them are reproduced here.

An Advance Story

A motion picture that had no scenario! Such is "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," soon to be seen at the .... Theatre.

Not one of the cast had a minute's direction. Mr. Edward Laemmle and Mr. William Alder of the Universal Film Company, who were shipwrecked on the coast of Dutch New Guinea, took the scenes as they went along. The results are far more thrilling than if they had used a manufactured plot.

What scenarist or director could write a story as strange as the daily habits of these weird people, whose women disfigure themselves for the sake of beauty? Of children, who at nine and ten years of age, appear as forty?

In the midst of a tropical storm that almost wrecked their apparatus, these two men stood bravely by their camera and while the lightning struck near them and tall palms crashed at their feet cranked out hundreds of feet of film, the like of which never had been equalled.

One night they hid themselves in the nearby bushes, while the Kia-Kia Head Hunters danced upon the moonlit sands in a religious ceremony. It would have meant death by torture, had a rustling leaf or a crisp branch betrayed the two white men, but Fate was on their side and they were able to take and bring back to America the strangest picture of adventure ever shown. "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" is not a dry educational picture. It is the actual cinematic record of a true and thrilling adventure.

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals"

A Kia-Kia Belle

This lady might not win the blue ribbon at the beauty show or be offered a place in the "Floradora" Sextette, but in Dutch New Guinea, where she holds sway over the night life, she is voted as the belle of the village. Her suitors are manifold and her beauty a Kia-Kia criterion. See her in Universal's big adventure picture, "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals."

5.—W. F. Alder and Edward Laemmle, the shipwrecked Americans, escaped the broiling pot by good luck—and a few plugs of tobacco, with which they appeased the hunger of their captors.

6.—Although they were captives in the cannibal village for several harrowing weeks, they zealously filmed the life of the savages by explaining their camera chased away evil spirits.

7.—They lived through and obtained pictures of one of the worst tropical storms that ever swept destruction through New Guinea.

8.—The fact the cameramen-explorers obtained pictures of the awful ritual—the head dance—by which the native women goad their lords into a blood-lust for killing.

I further view the growing tendency to slapstick and I promise exhibitors as my first official act to give them only the highest form of fun, electric light pole or tree, it makes no difference to either myself or my wife. In order that the country may be fully informed as to my policies in these matters I respectfully urge upon every thinking exhibitor that he show between now and Election Day all my comedies. J. Barney Sherry Featured

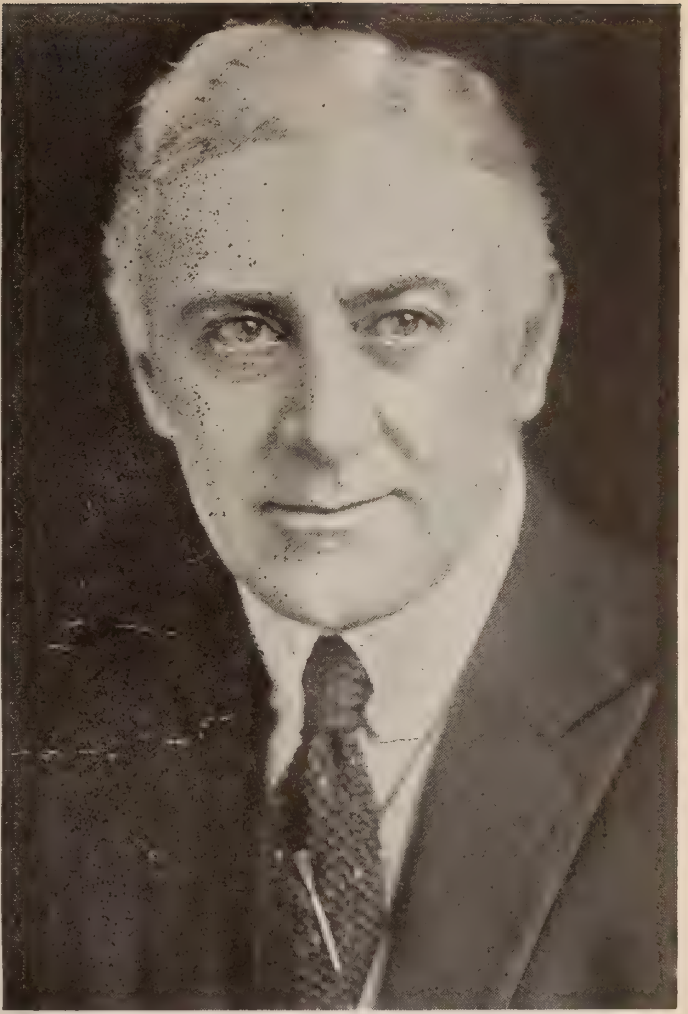
J. BARNEY SHERRY, who gave a wonderful performance in Marshal Neilan's picture, "The River's End," will be featured in support of Tsuru Aoki in her Jewel production de luxe, "The Breath of the Gods." His finished acting is the result not only of a natural talent but of the years of rich experience which he has had both on the stage and screen.

Born in Philadelphia and excellently educated there, Sherry early took to the drama. But it was not long before the movies "got" him, and after a stay with the old Vitagraph Company he joined the Ince outfit for a part in "Civilization." It was after this that he came under the Universal banner. He played with Frank Mayo in "Little Brother of the Rich" and with Mary MacLaren in "The Forged Bride." With each new role, his talent and versatility was more and more in evidence, so that he was cast for an important role in "The Breath of the Gods," Universal's forthcoming Jewel release. This is a production of the first order, directed by Rollin Sturgeon and featuring Tsuru Aoki, the talented little Japanese star, in private life the wife of Sessue Hayakawa. Money has been expended lavishly on "The Breath of the Gods," and no effort has been spared to make the production a notable one.

Mr. Sherry presents an interesting figure on the screen. He is over six feet tall, tips the scales at two hundred and has keen gray eyes and iron gray hair. His role in "The Breath of the Gods" is admirably suited to his imposing figure, for he plays the part of an ambassador to the court of Tokyo, and naturally such a role demands presence.

It is interesting to note, in addition, that this engaging artist has been an intensive globe-trotter, having wandered largely over both the western and eastern hemispheres. Perhaps this, too, has helped to make J. Barney Sherry so interesting an actor. At any rate, Tsuru Aoki could scarcely have picked better support in this forthcoming production, and there is no doubt that Mr. Sherry will duplicate if not outdo his former successes in "The Breath of the Gods."



J. Barney Sherry, featured player with Tsuru Aoki in "The Breath of the Gods."

What the New York Times says about "The Breath of the Gods"

THE New York Times movie critic is a very exacting person when it comes to praise. He demands a very high standard and cares not who he slams when the standard is not reached. This critique of "The Breath of the Gods," which is playing at the Astor Theatre, New York, this week, is about as high praise as he ever passes out. It appeared in the Times Monday, July 26.

PHOTOPLAYS with a foreign stamp, and more particularly those presenting life in the Orient, stir the interest unusually, even if their workmanship is not above the average of the home product, and for this reason, if there were no other, "The Breath of the Gods," which opened at the Astor Theatre yesterday afternoon, would be of more than passing interest. It has what seems an authentic Japanese character—at least to one who has never been west of the Mississippi—chiefly through the work of Corley Z. Ito, who supervised the production, and Tsuru Aoki, the wife of the better-known Sussue Hayakawa, who has appeared with him in a number of pictures and is now coming out at the head of her own cast.

But "The Breath of the Gods" does not depend upon its Oriental flavor to win friends. It is, in all departments, a work above the average. The director, Rollin Sturgeon, whose name, with those of most of the players, is omitted from the program, must be credited with skillful work, and the story, an adaptation of a novel by Sidney McCall, gives opportunities for the acting of an excellent cast, including, especially, Tsuru Aoki, as the heroine; Stanhope Wheatcroft, as one who loves her not wisely but too well; Paul Weigel, as the Austrian Ambassador to Japan, and Andrew Carewe, as a Japanese prince. Miss Aoki, if that is the way she should be designated, is not an altogether finished actress. Some of her gestures and expressions seem too studied and deliberate, too conscious of the camera, but, nevertheless, she has the quality of genuineness and succeeds in making the character of a Japanese girl influenced by unassimilated Western ideas consistently appealing.

Although the story is essentially a melodrama, and Japanese perhaps only to those who do not know Japan, it seems real in many scenes. This is due not only to the acting and stage settings but to the narrative's simple directness and honest acceptance of a tragic ending. The death of a defeated Japanese girl may not seem tragic to some, but if the character is conceived of as the victim of conflicting customs, traditions and desires, represented chiefly in a man of the East and one of the West, there is tragedy in her life and death—and Yuki Onda is such a victim.

Voluptuous Luxury in "Devil's Pass Key" Scenes

"All right, my dear, let the other hoof go till to-morrow," said Odera, as Madam Malot proposed a scheme combining profit and revenge.

THE pleasure loving Romans of old had nothing on the French stage favorite of to-day when it comes to luxury in the matter of bathing facilities—at least if one is to believe a scene in Erich Von Stroheim's Jewel feature, "The Devil's Passkey," which is to be released early in the Fall. One of the scenes in the story shows Miss Mae Busch, in the role of a Spanish dancer named Odera, in high favor on the Parisian stage, enjoying her morning bath. The word morning is used figuratively, for the lady in question does not begin her day till long after the noon-day hour. Von Stroheim copied the bath room from a picture of the private natatorium of a Parisian stage favorite before the war, and it is the absolute essence of creature-comfort.

It was one of the most unusual orders the production department ever received and the specifications caused consternation. Tiled bathroom floors and walls were easy, though they had to be supplied in most unusual design, but a tiled bath tub and tiled bathroom furniture and a tiled fire-place were as unusual and hard to find as they were effective in the scene. But Von Stroheim usually gets what he wants and he finally had this voluptuous bath room rigged up to excite the envy of a Cleopatra.

This remarkable scene was considered so effective and so dramatic that it was chosen for one of the two lobby display oil paintings that will go out with the picture when it is released in the early Fall. The scene was also copied for one of the three-sheet posters. The ultra sumptuousness of all of the sets is one of the features of "The Devil's Pass Key." The richness of all the furnishings and appointments, as it were, the apartments of Odera, the Spanish dancer, in addition to the bath room above mentioned, the quiet richness of the apartment of an American multi-millionaire in Paris the interior of a typical Parisian restaurant where Odera danced with swiftly changing lights playing over her swaying body, and an exact copy of a famous Paris opera house, with its unique boxes and the reception rooms back of them, all are marvellously carried out and make a gorgeously opulent looking picture. "The Devil's Pass Key" looks like a shiny new million dollar bill.

The action which takes place in this bath room, pictured at the top of this page, is very important to the plot, because it is here that the plan is hatched which brings on the attempted extortion and the dramatic expose of the unique methods of this unusual modiste in collecting bills from beautiful but impecuneous patrons. It was a difficult thing to film, difficult to get the action which would be naturally registered by these two European ladies with the morals of female vultures, the modesty of the monkeys of the zoo and the luxurious ease of crocodiles basking in a Florida bayou: difficult to stay within the requirements of the censor board. Yet it was passed without a cut. But there is no doubt that several cameramen fought for the privilege of photographing this scene. The director and the cameraman are the only ones to get an uncensored look.

My dear Mr. Morrow:—

Perhaps it will be of interest to you to know that during the month of June we used UNIVERSAL SERVICE on fourteen of the seventeen nights that the Theatre was open. I did not realize that I was using so much UNIVERSAL SERVICE until I inquired into the reason for our increased box office receipts. I then discovered that I had used Universal fourteen nights during the months of April and May and must say that our profits have been larger since using your service. In fact, our profits for one week in June, 1920, exceeded our profits for the entire month of June, 1919.

Believe me! Universal service is well liked by our patrons and we will continue to use it three nights each week just as long as you can furnish it to us.

Wishing you and Universal every success, I am

"An Oil Can Romeo"

Two Reel Rainbow Comedy

CHARLES DORETTY and LILLIAN BYRON

JOE'S daughter was coming home from college and the town was excited because Lillian was a "peach." Joe ran the village inn assisted by Aunt Emily, who was so darn anxious to get married that she had sent her niece's photograph to a matrimonial agency, claiming the likeness as her own, in her effort to land a "man."

Charles is riding along the road in a Ford closely watched by Brownie, the sheriff's dog. He strikes Joe's inn as a reception is being held for Lillian and recognizes her immediately as the girl in the photo whom he had come to marry at the instance of the agency. Lillian was dressed in an ugly costume, because Aunt was angry and had forced it upon her, but Charles falls in love with her anyway.

As luck would have it, the family get rich through discovery of oil in the back yard, and this doubles Charles' ardor, so that he and Lillian plan to elope. But the plan is overheard by Aunty, who works it so that she takes Lillian's place. She is heavily veiled and the unsuspecting Charles whisks her off to a minster's house. Just as the binding words are being pronounced, Lillian and Dad who had discovered the plot, pounce upon the pair and poor Aunty is left on the "shelf" because an exchange of brides is immediately instituted.

"The Smoke Signal"

Two-Reel Western Drama

Dave Morgan	Jas. B. Warner
Nell Morgan	Magda Lane
Red Carey	Jack Carlyle

DAVE MORGAN, Arizona border ranger, has been sent out to break up Red Carey's gang of horse thieves and rustlers. With him is his pretty young wife, Nellie, whom he worships. They live in a little cabin in the foothills on the rim of the desert. The morning the story opens, Dave finds a note pinned on his door with a knife, warning him to let the Carey gang alone or he will be killed. Dave instructs his wife how to send up smoke signals from a bonfire in case she is in danger, then leaves to trail the thieves. A spy for the gang, seeing him leave, informs Red Carey, who sends this same man and another villain to ambush Dave. But Dave turns the tables on the two men, captures them and marches them to town to turn them over to the sheriff. Meantime, Red and his other men, having heard nearby shots (fired when his two men attacked Dave) think the ranger has been killed and ride to town to celebrate.

Red and his men, coming from a saloon, see Dave turn the two prisoners over to the sheriff. Red decides to ride with his men to Dave's cabin, station themselves there and trap him upon his return. They reach the cabin as Dave, some distance behind them, rides leisurely homeward. Red tells Nellie they have come to help Dave round-up the Carey gang, but she becomes suspicious, tries to send up smoke signals and is stopped by Red, who reveals his identity and purpose. He forces her to cook for himself and men while waiting for Dave. Nellie takes advantage of the opportunity to operate the stove damper so that the smoke signals will arise from the chimney. Dave sees the signal and races for the cabin. Red, having filled his stomach, demands a kiss from Nellie as dessert. She slaps him. He starts to force an embrace, and the two start a struggle, witnessed by Red's men. Red is about to overpower Nellie, when Dave reaches the cabin, steals to the window, smashes the glass out with his guns and pokes the guns in thru the window, covering Red and men who are taken by surprise. While Dave keeps them covered, Nellie takes their guns and handcuffs them. While Nellie clings affectionately to his side, Dave, keeping the gang covered, forces them over to sheriff.

"Ringing His Belle"

BARTINE BURKETTE and AUSTIN HOWARD

NEAL had a dandy ring all picked out for Belle but mother called it all off, because Neal's salary couldn't keep him, no less a wife. Belle was heartbroken and so was Neal.

Back to work went Neal in the bathing suit factory and as he was bemoaning his troubles, he unconsciously drew several figures of girls in bathing suit. The wind carried the pictures to the manager's desk and the manager thought they were just great. Business was bad and Neal's ideas, on the paper at any rate, looked good, so Neal was made designer and called upon to help the firm make money. And he did. He cut down the bathing suits (not in price, of course) and he hired some nifty models to wear them and sell them. The crowds flocked thick and fast and Neal strutted like a sultan in the midst of the bevy of beauties. Then came Belle and mamma to view the store, and when mamma saw Neal she made for him, thinking him but an idler, wasting away precious hours amidst the charms of female models. But when Neal explained that he was the "big chief" of the outfit, mamma grew suddenly effusively friendly and said that he could "ring" her "Belle" if he wanted. Whereupon Neal put the ring on the dainty finger of the blushing Belle, while Cupid wisely shook his head and said: "I told you so."

"When London Sleeps"

CAST

Grant	Eddie Polo
Nell	Peggy O'Dare
Zan	Karl Silvera
Sonia	Ruth Royce

JOHN EDWARD GRANT, recovering from the blow on the head dealt him by Mike escapes from the ship's cabin and as the boat docks, jumps from the porthole to the wharf. As he comes to the depot to board the train for London, he is seen by Mike and Nell, who at once wire some of their band of crooks to meet them at the depot in London. While Prince Zan and Sonia, deciding if possible to beat the London train, engage an auto.

Arriving in London, Mike and Nell point Grant out to the crooks, Mike and Nell leave in a taxi and Grant, as they had planned, sees and follows them. The three crooks in turn pursue Grant. Sonia and Zan arrive at the depot late, an accident having delayed them, and they are enraged as they find that they have lost trace of Grant.

Following Mike and Nell, Grant is overtaken by the three crooks, who knock him senseless. They take him to their headquarters, while Nell, leaving Mike, proceeds to the London home of Claypool. There she learns that Claypool is dead and a letter delivered to her tells her that one of the crooks knows the hiding place of the vanishing dagger and the Decker jewels, and advises her to consult this man.

Grant breaks the ropes with which he has been tied, escapes out of the window, but seeing Nell arriving, comes back to investigate. Nell consults the crook mentioned in the letter and suggests to him that they double cross Mike. But the crook, when Mike arrives, informs him of Nell's suggestion, and Mike bitterly accuses Nell. Grant, eavesdropping, hears all this and comes to Nell's assistance. He and Nell get into an inner room, the door of which Mike and his crooks start to batter down.

Meanwhile, Sonia and Zan have discovered Grant's location by means of the ouija board. Zan calls three cut throats to his assistance and accompanied by Sonia they leave to capture Grant and Nell in hopes that they may recover the Vanishing Dagger.

Climbing out of the window, Grant and Nell make their way along the ledge to another window. They climb through into an empty room and start downstairs where they are suddenly attacked by Zan and his cut throats. Sonia is left on guard downstairs. Mike also climbs through the window and along the ledge and just as Grant has succeeded in throwing Zan and his three thugs down the stairway, he is attacked by Mike. Knocking Mike to the floor, Grant and Nell again climb to the outside of the building and start across two slender poles which are suspended over the alley-way to the adjoining building. Mike gets up and rushes to the window and starts shaking the poles. Grant and Nell lose their footing and are thrown from the poles to the alley-way, five floors below.

Aftermath of Universal Holiday Season

THE Universal Holiday Season is over now. It was a grand success. While it is true that the genesis was a publicity idea, yet the basis on which the plan was evolved was so well suited to the time of the year and the situation of the country as a whole that it was readily adopted by governors, mayors and city officials in hundreds of cities and by innumerable welfare societies and Chambers of Commerce. In Chicago the final week of Universal's Holiday Season fell on the fourth annual Go-To-Movie Week, which has been engineered for the last four years by the Chicago Evening American. This is the credit that Rob Reel gives in the little folder which the American issues as a part of its annual plan:

Universal's Holiday Season for Go-To-Movie Week.
By Rob Reel.

The "Universal Holiday Season," inaugurated November 15th by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company will reach its culmination during Go-to-Movie Week, Christmas to New Year. The holiday season was conceived, according to Universal publicists, for the purpose of "promoting happiness and good cheer at a time when the entire country's mental attitude is below-par."

It is estimated that by the time Go-to-Movie Week ends with the old year more than 60,000,000 people in the United States will have participated in the Universal Holiday Season.

Your exhibitor will be showing Universal productions in his house during Go-to-Movie Week, notably these: "Blind Husbands," Eric Stroheim's remarkable drama of the Austrian Tyrol; "His Divorced Wife" in which Monroe Salisbury elocutes; "Under Suspicion" featuring Ora Carew; "Lasca" with Frank Mayo, Harry Carey in "A Gun Fightin' Gentleman," and Mary MacLaren in "The Pointing Finger." It is expected that "The Breath of the Gods" with Tsuru Aoki (Mrs. Sessue Hayakawa), will also be released at this time. "And," further deposeth George De Kruif, Universal's local p a. "several Christmas surprises are in preparation.

Some Representative.

A COUPLE of programs of William Fox's theatres in New York City came into the possession of the Editor of the Moving Picture Weekly the other day and he was delighted to see the representation accorded to Universal productions. For instance, in the Strand on Sunday, Harry Carey in "A Gun Fightin' Gentleman" was the feature. On Monday the Strand used David Belasco in "A Star Overnight." On Tuesday the current episode of "The Lion Man" was used in connection with "The Brute Breaker" which was the feature. The Isis Theatre during the same time showed on Monday "The Woman Under Cover" and on Tuesday "Tom's Little Star." The following week the Strand used on Sunday "The Eternal Triangle" and on Monday Monroe Salisbury in "His Divorced Wife." On Tuesday the current episode of "The Midnight Man" and the Okeh Comedy "His Lucky Blunder" was used. The Isis on Monday used "Tailor Made" a Lyons-Moran Comedy and on Tuesday the Screen Magazine and the Lyons-Moran Comedy "Woes of a Woman," while the William Fox's Rivoli played Joe Martin in "A Jungle Gentleman" from Sunday to Wednesday.

We are now on the dawn of a Glorious New Year, living in the most wonderful Age of opportunity and service in the history of the world, at a time when the world is in a state of unrest and turmoil, when people are prone to assume the attitude of selfishness disregarding the needs and the misfortunes, of even their associates, neighbors, friends, and fellow citizens, and

Whereas, We oftimes neglect to say the kind word of encouragement to the less fortunate, do the kind act, and thoughtlessly neglect to dispense, HOLIDAY CHEER and make those around them feel the good fellowship which should be theirs, and

The Bravest of the Brave

DO you want to see the most thrilling, hair-raising, dare-deviltry that ever passed before the eyes of man?

Ormer L. Locklear, who served Uncle Sam in the air service during the war, and who has startled the world by leaping from one aeroplane to another in mid-air, is featured in a picture made by Universal, which for sheer, pure gasp-producing, daring thousands of feet up in the blue ether, where the slightest misstep or false move would mean death, has never been approached.

War-hardened aviators, dubious and "hard-boiled," who believed the world held nothing new in the way of hare-brained stunts among the clouds, have seen "The Great Air Robbery," in which Locklear is featured, have shuddered and declared to a man that the last thought in simon-pure abandon and utter disregard of personal safety had been reached by this young cloud-devil.

No other aviator alive ever attempted the feat of leaping from one plane to another. Yet this intrepid young man has been doing it for months. He startled the entire world by his daring. He obtained hundreds of columns of newspaper space.

"The Great Air Robbery" eclipses anything and everything ever undertaken to make the public gasp with mixed feelings of terror and amazement.

The greatest scenes of the picture were staged among the clouds, and were taken by an aviator cameraman who raced through space alongside of Locklear's plane. You get close-ups of Ormer Locklear as he crawls out on the wing of his plane and leaps for the flying ladder of the villain's "ship."

When you show "The Great Air Robbery" in your theatre (if you don't you'll regret it as long as you live), you will want to sit in the audience at every performance to watch again and again these nerve-wrecking stunts.

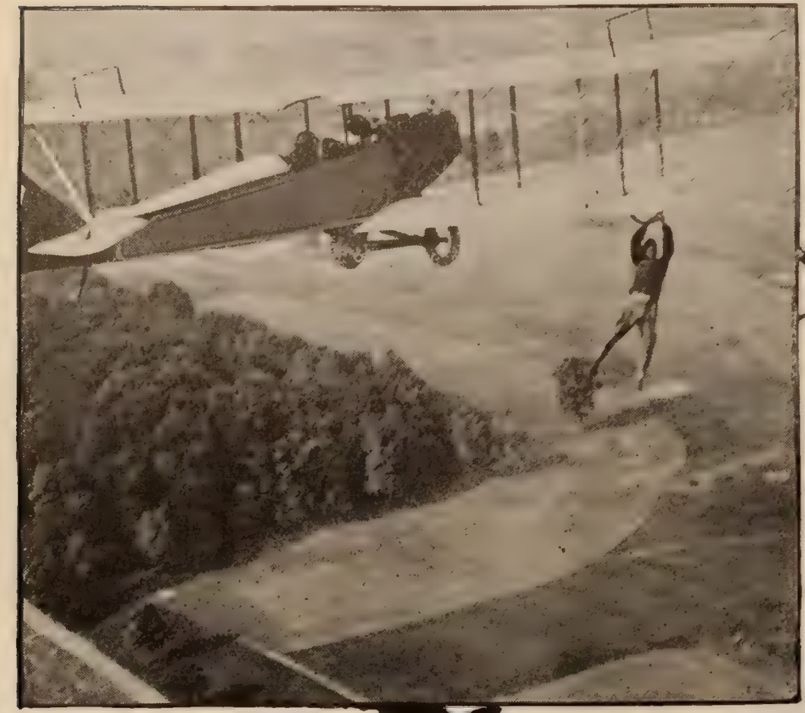
How's this for Cold-Blooded Abandon?



IF this photography gives you a start and knocks the everlasting breath out of your body for a moment, imagine the sensation you will get from a picture made for no other purpose than to feature the daring stunts of an aviator who has been hailed by the entire world as the most cold-blooded proposition who ever arrayed himself in human clothing.

Ormer L. Locklear, who performs this stunt and a world more like it, is absolutely devoid of any sensation of fear. There isn't a vestige of "nerves" in his body. While by all that is good and holy he has everything to live for, this man is risking his life time after time, week after week, trying to get a thrill. His attempts are vain, from his own standpoint, but the wonder, the marvel, the supreme abandon of a man who will leap from one airplane to another, thousands of feet in the air, dashing through space with the speed of a meteor, is enough to upset the nervous system of any other earth-clinging mortal.

This man frolics about on the tail of a hurtling airplane as coolly as you would sit on the verandah on a summer's evening in your shirt sleeves. His performances in "The Great Air Robbery," built on a man's foolhardiness and made into the most screamingly sensational picture ever devised, will pack people into your theatre until they won't have room to breathe, and what is more, they won't notice the lack of room, because they will be too thrilled to breathe, anyhow.

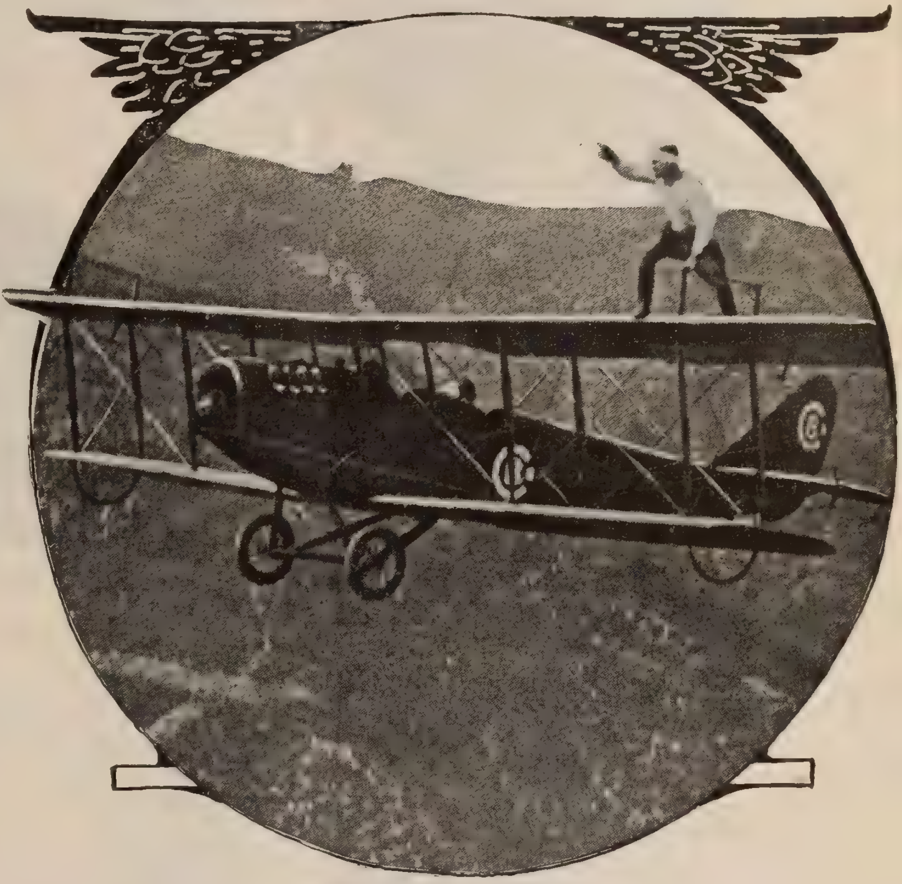
This Man Violated Government Rules When He First Performed This Stunt.

Later the War Department Ordered Him to Do It to Inspire Other Student Aviators with his Daring.



LOCKLEAR began his career of dare-deviltry and air deviltry while serving as a flight instructor at a Texas training field.

When war was declared, he was commissioned and assigned to an aviation training camp. In a few days he became an instructor, and after a few weeks' training he performed the feat of changing planes, which brought him a severe reprimand from his superior officers on account of the danger of demolishing government property. Then the value of his daring as an inspiration to student aviators was recognized and—he was asked to continue his death-defying act!

"The Great Air Robbery" surpasses even the stunts with which the birdman startled the world. While the picture was being produced at Universal City, Orville Wright, the father of the airplane, visited the mammoth studios. After watching Locklear in a big scene, Mr. Wright admitted that he had enjoyed the first thrill in many a day.

Francelia Billington and Cameraman Milton Moore

These People Made a Business of Bravery

DASHING through the clouds and circling the white-hooded mountains of California in the swiftest airplanes that man could devise and money could buy, Milton S. Moore, a Universal camerman, and Francelia Billington, noted leading woman for that company, were treated to the thrills of their young lives during the production of "The Great Air Robbery."

Cameraman Moore, himself a daring aviator, was selected to record on film the most hazardous feat of nerve ever performed.

He said, after the picture was completed: "I thought I had experienced every thrill that can come to a man in an airship, but I'll confess that I didn't know what thrill meant.

"The courage of this man so startled me that it fairly took my breath. I had to keep a grip on myself mentally every moment lest I forget to turn the camera crank. My camera was strapped and braced to my plane, and every contrivance possible to insure a good picture was utilized. I trained the lense on Lockklear's plane exactly as I would sweep an enemy plane with a machine gun.

"I never expect again to receive the exhiliration from a picture that I got taking this dare-devil in his superhuman stunt. It makes me shiver yet to think about it."

Universal City resembled a great aerial station while the making of this gigantic feature picture was in progress. Many planes were utilized in the production, manned by skilled birdmen from the American air service. Jacques Jaccard, the director and author of the picture, rode in a speedy plane with Milton Moore, the cameraman.

The Big Punch Scenes in "The Great Air Robbery" Demanded a Powerful Plot

HERE'S HOW WE GOT THE STORY

WHEN Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, grasped the possibility for a tremendous motion picture in Locklear's world-startling exploits, he saw that to get the full effect of Locklear's magnificent performance, he would have to obtain a story commensurate with the magnitude of what were to be the biggest scenes in the production.

Immediately he got in touch with the leading story writers of the whole nation. By mail and by wire came stories from men who are acknowledged masters in the art of embodying thrill and sensation in motion picture stories. The assignment to write a story for Locklear's picture carried with it the agreement by Mr. Laemmle to pay for the stories whether they were found suitable or not.

When the flurry and scurry of reading scenarios were over, it was found that Jacques Jaccard, one of Universal's own directors, had produced the only story with the necessary dramatic value. As Jaccard himself directed the filming of the sensational play, it goes without saying that he has put punch, action and power in every foot of film.

The story grips the interest at the outset and whirls the spectator on with increasing momentum to a conclusion that snaps the tension like the breaking of an elastic. "The Great Air Robbery" is a masterpiece of dramatic thrill and sensation.

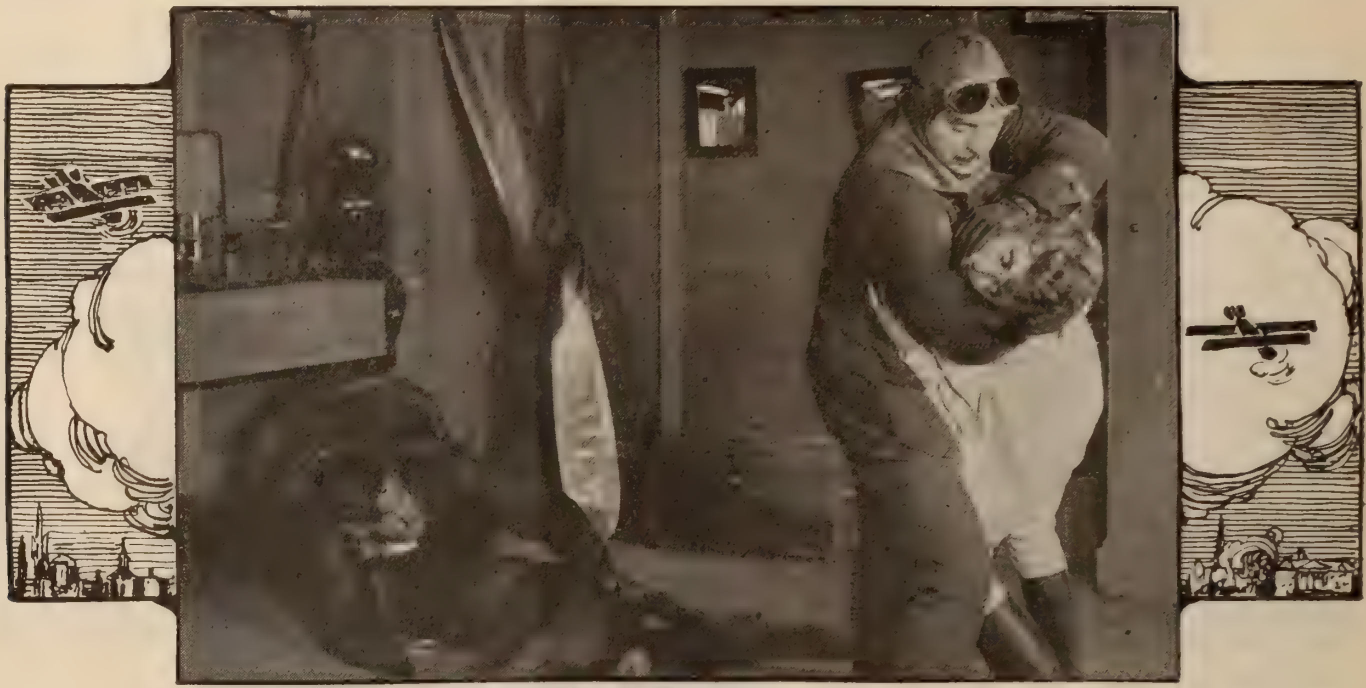
LIKE A PAGE FROM THE FUTURE



Will the Wheels of Progress Keep Pace With Director Jaccard's Scientific Vision?

VISUALIZING a future in aeronautics, when giant airships will whirl passengers from one end of the country to the other in a few hours, when meteor-like planes will scuttle through the clouds with their precious consignments of mail, Jacques Jaccard, who wrote and directed "The Great Air Robbery," has not only given in this wonderful picture, an insight into times yet to come, but has produced the most thrilling photodrama of the age.

The big scenes of the picture show former Lieutenant Locklear performing his blood-chilling feat, and the incident has been woven into the action in a masterly way. But the plot would have made a sensation in any picture even without the supreme punch of the aviator's daring exploit.

One of the most effective scenes in the picture from the spectator's standpoint is the tuning up of the huge mail planes at an aerial station, preparatory to the midnight trip with the mail. The big ships circle and sweep through the ink-black sky, leaving a vivid stream of fire in their wake, while spinning searchlights shoot long shafts of light into the darkness.

The Result of a Brave Man's Blunder. America Had Paid Him Her Highest Award

But He Threw it Away Because He Treasured It Too Much

"WALLIE" MASON was one of America's heroes. High above the battlefields of France he had outfought the Boche airmen, and when he returned to America he possessed the one treasure that compensates such men for their bravery—a tiny piece of metal and ribbon—the Croix de Guerre. Only one thing did Wallie Mason prize above this priceless bauble, and that was the love of Beryl Carruthers.

Like many other men of his strange mold, he was not the master of himself. His physical incapacity as the result of dissipation would have cost him his life had not his chum, Larry Cassidy, saved him by climbing into his ship in midair and bringing it safely to earth.

Then, as a token of his love, he sent the Croix de Guerre to Beryl Carruthers, and it fell into the hands of his rival, Van Arland, the leader of the Death's Head Squadron of air pirates. Van Arland gave Mason a gambler's chance to recover the cross, but Wallie lost, not only the cross and his money, but his soul of honor. Driven to desperation, he staked upon the last unsuccessful turn of the cards his promise to assist Van Arland in the robbery of the midnight mailship. That night, Wallie Mason, like a man in delirium, forfeited everything that the Croix de Guerre symbolized in his life.

His Love, Like a Phoenix, Rose From The Ashes of his Friend's Folly

BROTHERS in arms in France, inseparable friends when they both returned to America and became pilots of Uncle Sam's great aerial mail-ships, Wallie Mason and Larry Cassidy enjoyed that wonderful companionship of man and man.

Then Wallie fell in love with Beryl Carruthers. So did Larry Cassidy, but feeling in his noble heart that the girl belonged to his chum, he did not betray his feeling for her by word or act.

Dissipation had wrecked Wallie Mason's once iron nerve. His friend saved him from death for Beryl Carruthers, and he did everything possible to prevent Mason from making a fool of himself.

Then Mason committed an act of consummate folly that robbed him of his money, his Croix de Guerre and his honor. He turned robber and assisted the leader of the Death's Head Squadron to hold up a federal mail ship. But a deputy marshal brought down Mason's plane in a flaming heap, just as Wallie had brought down the enemy planes which won him the priceless cross of war.

Beryl Carruthers, in another plane, arrived on the spot just as her lover's ship was wrecked. Larry Cassidy, his heart breaking for the hapless couple, led the girl tenderly away.

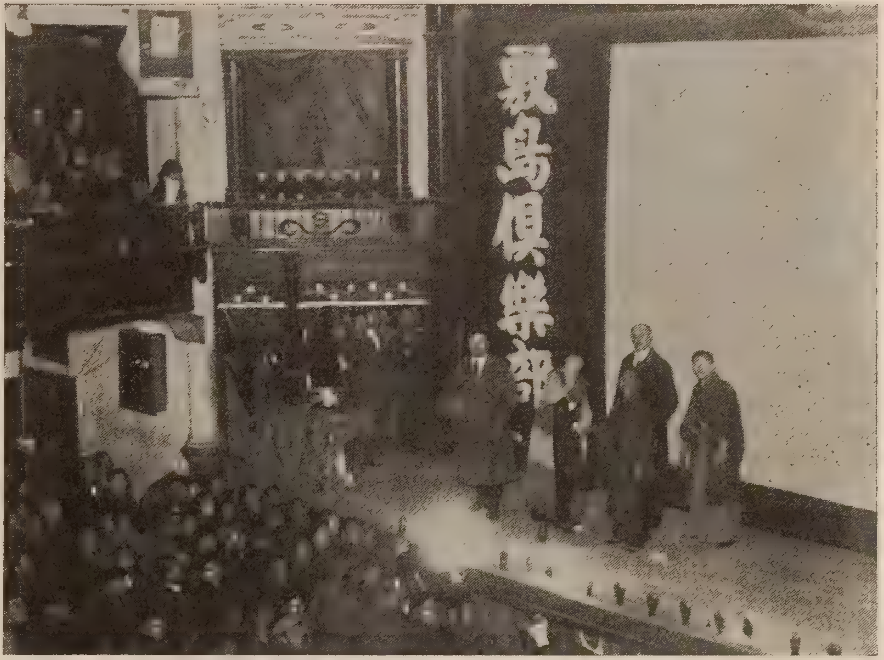
MISS WALCAMP IN TOKYO



Marie Walcamp being presented from the stage of the Komparu Kwan Theatre by Nakimura, the Japanese Harry Carey.

MARIE WALCAMP, the fearless star of the Universal screen, has taken Japan by storm; by typhoon would be more climatically correct, for the famous player arrived in Yokohama on the crest of a Mongolian hurricane.

The beautiful girl's shadow has always been popular on the screens of Japanese theatre, but to-day the star is with the Japanese in person. She went to Japan with Henry McRae, the Universal director who is filming "The Dragon's Net," with Miss Walcamp starring.

"The Dragon's Net" was written by J. Allen Dunn and appeared originally in the Adventure Magazine under the title "The Petals of Lao Tze." It is being filmed by Universal as a serial. Throughout the eighteen sensational and colorful episodes Miss Walcamp will be supported by Harland Tucker, her leading man, Otto Lederer and Wadsworth Harris.

Harland Tucker, former matinee idol of the Morosco stage, is Miss Walcamp's leading man in more ways than one. Immediately after the good ship Suwa Maru docked at Yokohama he led Miss Walcamp to the American consulate and married her. The news of the wedding created a society furor in Japan, and was cabled to the press of America as one of the most romantic stories concerning screen celebrities.

The trip of the Universal company was a classic event in globe-trotting. As the party passed through Portland, President Wilson, then on his swing across the country, was presented to Miss Walcamp and personally wished the expedition success.

Hardly had the Suwa Maru cleared Seattle than the word spread through the cabin that Marie Walcamp was a passenger. She was immediately beseiged by admirers and with other members of the company given the places of honor at Captain Schmidizu's table.

With the Suwa rolling comfortably in mid-Pacific the star staged several little plays for the amusement of the passengers. For the purpose Captain Schmidizu erected a stage in the dining salon and the technical staff with the Universal company placed improvised footlights with excellent effect.

Of course Harland Tucker took up a great deal of the star's time when they landed at Yokohama. He insisted that she accompany him while he dashed around to find an American pastor who would marry them in the American consulate at ten minutes' notice. The ceremony over, to the entire satisfaction of all Japan and particularly Harland Tucker, the honeymoon couple found time to accept an invitation to the theatre from no less a personage than Nakimura, the Japanese Harry Carey. The eminent actor entertained his guests "back stage" at his theatre in Tokio and was later host at an informal dinner served in his spacious dressing room.

Rich in the color of the Orient and with the distinction of having been filmed in the exact locale prescribed by the author, "The Dragon's Net" will be one of the most acceptable serials yet offered to playgoers by the "Big U."

SOME DON'T FOR SCREEN-STRUCK GIRLS.

EDITH ROBERTS, Universal's youngest star is a New York girl who began as a singer and dancer in a musical comedy. After a year in vaudeville, she was engaged for "cute girl" parts in Christie comedies. Then she went to Universal City to play in the Lyons and Moran comedies, and her youth, ability, tireless energy and intelligence soon won her important roles in more serious photoplays. Featured roles followed in such Universal successes as "The Love Swindler," "Beans," "A Taste of Life" and "The Deciding Kiss." In "Lasca" she was co-starred with Frank Mayo, and in "The Triflers," the newest Universal feature, she has a stellar role, supporter by David Butler.

As Miss Roberts has achieved success while yet in her teens, her advice to aspirants for screen honors should prove interesting.

Here are some of the youthful star's don't.

Don't imagine you are cut out for the screen just because you are blessed with a pair of dimples and a head of blonde hair. Mary Pickford has more than that to recommend her.

Don't aspire to a screen career just because your friends tell you "you ought to be in the movies." It may be subtle flattery.

Don't think of motion pictures unless you are prepared for hard work, rigid discipline and bitter disappointments. It is play for the audience only.

Don't depend on "pull" to land you a soft berth in the films. It won't get you far.

Don't expect a director to supply you with brains. That is nature's job.

Don't travel to California with nothing more substantial than the hope of getting a position with a motion picture company. Hope is not legal tender.

Don't spurn an "extra" part. You must begin somewhere.

Don't give way to discouragement. Talent will tell.

Don't believe all you hear about "movie folks." They're just human.

A SEVEN-YEAR-OLD STAR PLAYER.

LITTLE Benny Alexander, a child marvel of the screen, plays an important role in "The Triflers," the Universal photodrama which will be shown at the ——— Theatre on ———. At the age of seven, Benny Alexander is regarded as a finished actor, able to depict the delicate shades of emotion with the accuracy of a veteran of the drama.

Benny has been before the motion picture camera for three years. At the age of five, he was noticed by George Seigmann, the man who recently directed "The Trembling Hour," at Universal City.

Some days later, D. W. Griffith asked Seigmann if he knew where he could find a clever little kid player about five years old. Mr. Seigmann suggested that Benny be given a trial. So capably did the little fellow depict a minor role that he was given an important part in "Hearts of the World."

Through such productions as "The Turn in the Road" in which he was featured: in "The Better Wife," with Clara Kimball Young; "The White Heather" and "Tangled Threads;" he achieved a screen reputation that resulted in his being called to Universal City to appear in "The Triflers."

SOME STUDENT!

FORREST STANLEY, the Universal player, says that two cities claim his birth; New York claims it was Brooklyn and Brooklyn claims it was New York. However, his early life was spent in New York, where he attended grade school and won recognition as a diligent student. So diligently did he persue his studies that he spent five years with McDuffy's Fourth Reader and at the end of that time he knew more about it than McDuffy.

After dashing through the preliminary school, Mr. Stanley entered Columbia University. At the famous old King's College, he excelled in such studies as penny-ante, kelly pool and the scientific analysis of Broadway musical comedies.

At the completion of his college course, he went on the speaking stage, appearing in "The Bird of Paradise," "The Devil," "When We Were Twenty-One" and "Soldiers of Fortune," the last named production being his own show.

Mr. Stanley's photodramatic career includes screen appearances with such stars as Edith Roberts, Ora Carew, Constance Collier, Blanche Ring and the late Anna Held.

FOUR STARS SEEN IN "THE TRIFLERS."

FOUR leading players, each of whom has been featured many times in his own right, have been assembled in the cast of "The Triflers," a late Universal special attraction, which will lead the program at the ——— Theatre beginning next ———.

Edith Roberts, the charming little hoyden "Lasca" who carried the title role in the picture made by Universal from the famous poem by that name, has in her support David Butler, Nell Craig and Forrest Stanley.

Edith Roberts was widely known on the comedy screen before she was summoned to Universal City to star in such productions as "The Deciding Kiss," "Beans" and "Lasca."

David Butler has been known for several years as a matinee idol at the Alcazar Theatre in San Francisco and on the Morosco stage in Los Angeles.

Forrest Stanley is equally well known as a matinee hero, having appeared for ten years in such speaking stage successes as "Fine Feathers," "The Bird of Paradise" and "The Light That Failed."

Completing the role of fame in support of Edith Roberts is Nell Craig, who was a star in the pioneer Pathe film dramas of six years ago. Before Miss Craig's screen dynasty, she was a featured player with the Chestnut Street Stock Company in Philadelphia.

"The Triflers," will continue at the ——— Theatre until ———.

THIRTEEN NO JINX

"The Triflers," the Universal photodrama, which is to be seen at the ——— Theatre on ———, disproves the old superstition that thirteen is an unlucky number. Production on "The Triflers" was started at Universal City on October 13, and there are thirteen featured players in the supporting cast.

"The Triflers" is the story of a shop girl who aspired to a higher social position. Edith Roberts who was featured with Frank Mayo in "Lasca" is the star. Her leading man in the present production is David Butler, who has been seen of late in such Universal successes as "Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie" and "The Pointing Finger."

In addition to Miss Roberts and Mr. Butler, the following named players appear in the supporting cast: Forrest Stanley, Frederick Vroom, Lillian Langdon, Katherine Kirkham, Charles Arling, Arthur Shirley, Arthur Hoyt, Olita Otis, Nell Craig, Colin Kenny and Benny Alexander.

THE STORY.

JANET RANDALL, a shop girl aspires to the social lime light. Her idol is Monte Moreville, leader of the younger set of the Four Hundred. She starts upon her summer vacation, telling her sweetheart, Dan Cassidy, a motorcycle cop, and her parents, that she is going to Sullivan Lake, but instead she goes to the St. Legis Hotel, where Moreville is stopping. She becomes acquainted with her hero, who is about to be sued for breach of promise. Janet gets in a jam over her hotel bill. Monte makes a proposition that he will help her out if she will come to his country home and pose as his wife for thirty minutes. Janet accepts. The breach of promise case is headed off through Janet's aid, but a whole flock of Monte's relations and friends descend upon him and he is forced to introduce Janet as his wife.

Janet begins to see that society life is not what it is supposed to be—every man seems to be making love to some other man's wife, and none are capable of doing anything worth while. A pair of schemers are planning to unload some worthless stock upon Monte in exchange for some city real estate, but Janet knowing that a real estate deed is not legal unless the wife signs with her husband, refuses to sign and saves Monte. He misunderstands and accuses her of trying to save his money for herself. Monte's sister goes to a road house. Her husband sees her but Janet saves her by exchanging cloaks and saying it was really she who was there. Monte has not faith enough to believe her innocence. His sister confesses, but Janet has already made up her mind to return home. Monte pleads with her and offers to marry her but she has had enough. She realizes that these people are only triflers in the business of life. She returns to her motorcycle cop, saying she had a fine time at Sullivan Lake and is now ready to marry him and settle down.

ADVANCE STORY.

HOW a pretty New York shop girl aspires to get an intimate view of real society life, how circumstances conspire in her favor and make her the central figure in a week-end party at the home of the leader of the fashionable younger set, and how her illusions are shattered until she is glad to return to her modest home and her humble sweetheart are amusingly set forth in the newest Universal feature, "The Triflers," which will be shown at the ——— Theatre next———.

The featured players in the production are Edith Roberts and David Butler, whose work during the past year has placed them in the stellar class. Forrest Stanley, Nell Craig, Frederick Vroom, Lillian Langdon, Katharine Kirkham, Charles Arling, Arthur Shirley, Olita Otis, Colin Kenny, Arthur Hoyt, Magda Lane, and little Benny Alexander are other Universal favorites in the cast.

"The Triflers" was written by Joseph Franklin Poland and directed by Christy Cabanne and is an up-to-the-minute story, showing the contrast in the lives of the middle class and the butterfly existence of the ultra-smart folk of any large American community. Janet Randall, the pretty shop girl, is quite happy with her motorcycle cop sweetheart, Dan Cassidy, until her thoughts become centered on the doings of the fashionable set in general and of one Monte Moreville, the catch of the season, in particular. When Fate finally places her in the palatial home of Monte, Janet has an opportunity to observe the utter superficiality of her surroundings. She finally is glad to return home with her big motor cop when he comes to the house in pursuit of a speeding machine.

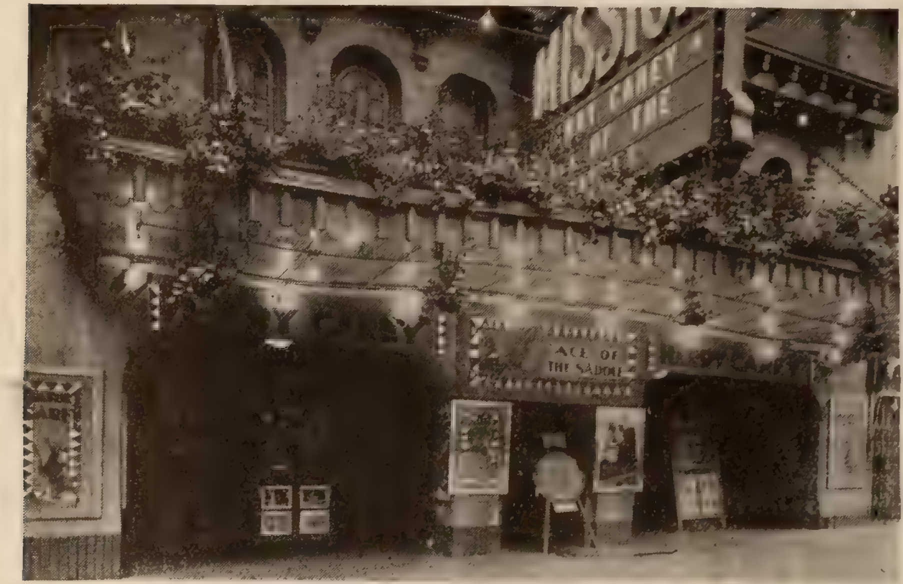
UNIVERSAL-JEWEL

You need the Director as well as the Star

Just as shrewd showmen of the legitimate stage always associate certain stage favorites with the name of Belasco, without whose magic they might never have won popularity so the picture exhibitor of America prefers to show Mildred Harris Chaplin directed by the master hand of Lois Weber. Mayhap the future will give us a picture as well acted as the Harris-Weber Jewels of the past two years but the exhibitor will find in the Four Selected Plays offered here the additional charm of pictures directed as only Lois Weber, the Belasco of the Screen, knows how to do. And every one of these Selected Four is a proven financial success.

How They Display Universal Pictures



Mission Theatre, Seattle, showing Harry Carey in "The Ace of the Saddle."

Color His Object.

SEATTLE, WASH., Dec. 22 (Special)—Strong colors and an array of paper with a punch, characterizes Manager Daigler's handling of Harry Carey in the lobby of the Mission Theatre, in Seattle, and one can usually tell when a Carey feature is playing there, when one is far down the street, just by the pepful color that appears in the lobby.

In running the "Ace of the Saddle," he adapted the vigorous equestrian pictures from the paper issued with the feature and centered his lobby about a galloping figure in the center over the entrance. The walls at the right and left inside the lobby were adorned with silhouetted figures of Carey mounted on a bucking horse.

He Used a Clock.

THE lobby of the Superba Theatre at Los Angeles is one which lends itself admirably to lobby displays of a unique and striking character. For the showing of "The Trembling Hour" the Manager chose the clock as the main feature of the display. He had a large stand erected in the center of the lobby with a clock face pointing to a quarter after one and a display card and photographs showing scenes from the film just below the dial. On either side in the curved brass frames, Mr. Arthur A. Wenzel placed pictures of the two stars, Kenneth Harlan and Helen Jerome Eddy in the costumes they assumed in the picture. Over the clock and toward the front of the marquis where it was easily lighted by the electric display was placed a banner in the shape of the marquis itself and on this banner the clock showed an hour later than on the main clock below, thus carrying out the idea of "The Trembling Hour." The picture is based on the idea of what happened between the hour of 1:15 and 2:15. Manager Wenzel's display is the best one as yet to come to our attention carrying out this point.

"The Eternal Triangle," the Jewel-Universal two reel Dog Comedy was also shown and a subordinate display for this remarkable comedy was produced by the use of stuffed dogs with subtitles from the film on them.

"A LION MAN" GUESSING CONTEST.

THE Alhambra Theatre of Cleveland, Ohio, which is one of the finest and largest picture theatres in the city and one of its two first-run houses has booked the serial "The Lion Man" and starts in immediately. It is one of the Loew chain of theatres. In order to intinate the serial the manager has evolved a mystery contest for children and has issued a series of cards with the teaser cuts designed by the Universal's advertising department. The design of the contest is to ascertain the name of the Lion Man. Prizes will be given at the end of the contest. A great deal of interest has been created in the serial through this expediency and the contest promises to be a big success.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

Meet William "Billy" Connors, His Middle Name is "Tie-Up"

Mr. Connors of Marion, Ind.

"BILLY" Connors, whose likeness appears above, and who is the guiding spirit of the Luna-Lite and Marion Theatres, at Marion, Ind., is rapidly gaining recognition among the exhibitors of the country, and more especially his native state, as an extremely hot and live wire.

This young manager, who plays nearly all of the Universal's features, graduated into the exhibitor class from the legitimate. Billy (nearly all of his patrons call him Billy), traveled with show troupes for several years before he realized that "fillum shows" were destined to become the universal enjoyment.

Billy never passes up an opportunity to exploit a picture, especially when he plays one with some star who is an especially favorite with his patrons, such as Priscilla Dean or Harry Carey, Dorothy Phillips and Monroe Salisbury.

Department store, music store, book store and every other kind of a tie-up for the purpose of exploitating a picture, is what Billy likes and when he starts out he usually ends with packed houses, afternoon and nights.

Billy recently played Harry Carey in "The Outcasts of Poker Flat." Realizing that Carey is a favorite with his patrons Billy went campaigning. The result was that all of the book stores, the libraries and even the schools of Marion, advertised the picture for him.

The result—capacity houses.

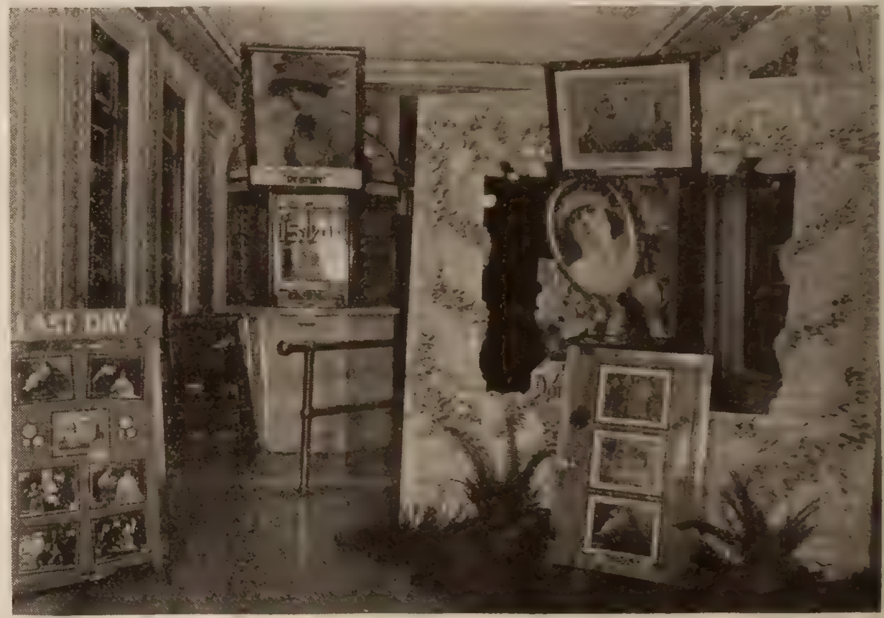
"And believe me, I never have heard so many good comments on any picture as I heard from my patrons on that one," he says.

Changed Type of Lobby for His Showing of "Destiny."

WITH his house popular as a playhouse of Westerns and other types of rugged drama, Manager Armstrong, of the Strand Theatre, Portland, last summer was confronted with an entire change of his usual lobby policy in putting on "Destiny," a picture of an entirely different type.

In the foreground of the lobby he used the utmost simplicity, and repression in the display of cards and posters. Back near the box office he erected a property pergola, on a foreground of ferns and greenery behind the opening in which a fountain played. Behind this was mounted a handsome cut-out of Dorothy Phillips, from the three sheet. In the color scheme of the entire lobby he followed the cue of the colors in the 22 by 28 tinted portrait above the pergola, running everything in cool pastel pinks and greens.

The novelty of the lobby, in contrast to his usual vigorous style of lobby building, proved a great attraction to his clientele.



Beautiful design for lobby of the Strand Theatre, Seattle, for "Destiny."

What the Hospital Patients Say About a Universal Program

Among the moral lessons we absorbed during the running of the Mary MacLaren film, "The Pointing Finger," at the State Hospital on Friday night, were these:

Never attempt to rob a wall safe unless you look behind the silken curtains, and never go away and leave your little Diebold unbolted with $10,000 in perfectly good money stacked carelessly on the shelves within easy reach.

As few of us had ever seen $10,000 all in a lump before it was a wonderful sight, and a pleasant time was had by all.

Mary, our Mary we call her now, was at her best. Our only criticism (and that is a gentle, subdued one) is this. We wish she would learn how to use a gun.

There was one high spot where a cute little automatic would have advantageously let a little daylight through the devilish, dastardly, deceitful villain. But then—things would have ended at the third reel, and there must be five reels, you know.

Miss MacLaren has a real sensitive nature when it comes to constant association with bugs. Still, the old "bug" professor was right there with the punch, despite his years and grey hairs. Some pep, boys, and that goes forty ways from the ace.

The motion picture fans at the State Hospital have not quite recovered from the shock of what happened to Mary MacLaren in the "Petal on the Current," all through indulging in one glass of beer. Some of the said fans have had quite some experience along these lines and all stoutly aver that Mary must have had the real old time strength in the scuttle of suds that she lapped up at the party. Be that as it may, nothing happened Thanksgiving night to Harry Carey, who got outside of his quota of old red eye and never turned a hair. "The Ace of the Saddle," was the feature and held the attention of a splendid audience, completely filling the large assembly hall. A western film, it breathes of the great outdoors, cowboys and cattle raids. Lyons and Moran pleased with the comedy, "Half and Half," and International Current Events was enjoyed by all. Community singing was tried and "Old Folks at Home" thrilled with its volume of sound.

We wish for Mary MacLaren a bountiful, happy New Year, "and may the Green-Eyed Gods grant her twelve desires."

The Century comedy, "Weak Minds and Wilful Lions," was a feature of the evening, and we hope that those three tame, toothless, tractable, trained lions of the Universal Co. will be given a fine Christmas feed of soft boiled mush, or fried chicken livers.

These lions have worked hard this year.

At first we were much concerned regarding the safety of the members of the company. But now—well, we can assume a nonchalant, indifferent attitude when they scowl their fiendish scowls.

During the tense moments of the first Century comedy featuring these lions, three of the younger nurses from the Annex building fainted dead away, and had to be revived with liberal doses of Rochelle smelling salts.

But no nurse has fainted now for months past. Is not that an improvement? We'll tell the world it is.

Current Events No. 47 and "Old Black Joe" vociferously sung by the splendid audience, concluded the evening's entertainment.

There will be motion pictures on Christmas and New Year's nights.

Tsuru Aoki, Universal's Newest Star

THE name of Aoki is as well known to the theatregoer of Tokio or Yokahoma as are the names of Barrymore and Drew to the playgoers of America.

Tsuru Aoki, Universal's delightful star, known as the Japanese Bernhardt of the screen, comes from a family of Japanese actors. While her father and mother were not on the stage, her aunts, uncles, cousin and sisters were all actors. At the age of seven little Tsuru, who was born in Tokio, began to act in melodramas and historical plays, playing child parts in support of her distinguished relatives for two years.

Educated in America.

When Miss Aoki was nine years old she came to America with her aunt and uncle, who brought a Japanese repertoire company to California, the first of its kind that ever visited the United States. That was in 1903, and the oriental actors remained here for nearly a year, playing in San Francisco, Chicago, New York and Boston, presenting Japanese plays in the native tongue.

Tsuru accompanied the players only as far as San Francisco, and after the engagement in that city she was placed in a convent in Chicago, where she remained till she was fifteen years old. She then went to Colorado Springs where she spent two years in a convent and took a post graduate course in a finishing school at Pasadena, California.

Wife of Sessue Hayakawa.

Miss Aoki's screen career dates back to 1913, when she appeared in a number of comedies under the direction of Fred Mace, followed by an engagement of two years with Thos. H. Ince, where she played opposite Sessue Hayakawa.

Miss Aoki had become acquainted with Mr. Hayakawa during her school days in Chicago, as he was also attending school in that city. They were married in 1915, during their engagement at the Ince studio.

Miss Aoki recently signed a contract with Universal for a series of Japanese photodramas, the first of which, "The Breath of the Gods," heralded as a most sumptuous production, will be released in the near future as a Jewel-Universal.

A Christmas Gift.

A teak-wood cabinet of great value and antiquity has been received at Universal City by Tsuru Aoki, at Christmas time, from an admirer in Tokio.

The cabinet was received by the star with only the following anonymous note as a clue to the giver:

> "Your wonderful artistry in 'The Breath of the Gods' has further endeared you to Japan, the land of your birth."

The pretentious gift is elaborately hand-carved and contains many secret compartments. Its antiquity, Miss Aoki says, is indicated by the condition of the wood and is confirmed by the character of the carving.

So unique is the cabinet that it was taken from the star's dressing room at Universal City to the stage where she is now playing in "Locked Lips" under the direction of William C. Dowlan, and used in one of the settings.

AN UNBEATABLE COMBINATION

Universal Industrials and Educationals Bo

"Heads Win" Covers the City from Loop to Prairie—Many Star Pictures, Showing the Amazing Industrial Life and Progress of America, Ready for Distribution Early in the New Year—Universal to Make Direct Payments to Exhibitors, With Extra Exhibitors of America, Inc., for Taxation, Censorship and Other Organization Welfare Work.

CHICAGO has seen "Heads Win," the great industrial-educational picture made by the Industrial and Educational Department of the Universal for the International Correspondence Schools and distributed to exhibitors in the Chicago district as a special feature, on the basis of the contract recently entered into between the company and the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc. Through this contract, or agreement, the exhibitors who run the picture are to receive direct payments, through the organization, and the organization itself will receive a substantial percentage of the gross receipts for bookings.

"Heads Win" has been played, or is being played, in almost every important theatre in the Chicago District from the Loop to the Prairie. The patrons of the theatres have voiced their approval and many of the theatres are arranging for additional bookings. This six-reel photoplay points a moral for every man, no matter what his station, who feels that he is about to enter the world of failures. Its bright story turns him from the rut into the path which leads to success. Wives who have lost hope of attaining ideals cherished for years for their children's sakes find in its story a solution which leaves the way clear. Is it any wonder that the picture is popular with the public? It deals with the essentials of life and teaches the "how" of happiness.

Harry Frazer in "The Golden Legend."

Many other star pictures showing the amazing industrial life and progress of America will be ready for distribution early in the New Year. In every case distribution will be made on the direct payment basis arranged with the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., but of course the arrangement includes all exhibitors who show the pictures no matter whether they are members or nonmembers of this organization. When the Universal decided to make direct payments to exhibitors for running industrial-educational pictures there was no thought of excluding any exhibitor. The plan operates fairly and impartiallly with honor and profit to all concerned.

STRAIGHT GOODS.

A fine example of a Universal Industrial picture, designed for general theatre circulation, is present in "Straight Goods." The film is being booked in selected towns all over the country and is an instructive as well as entertaining picture. The story tells of a young husband who has presented his bride with a chest of silver. She is not so pleased when she learns that it is not "solid" silver.

Later in the evening a gentleman burglar is caught in the act of stealing the silver and, womanlike, the bride asks him why he wanted silverware that was not "solid." The crook declares that inlaid silver is just as good as solid silver. To back up this assertion, the crook tells how inlaid silver is made.

WHEN EAST MEETS WEST.

One of the most unusual pictures of its kind ever produced is that of "When East Meets West" made for the Omaha Chamber of Commerce. A great many scenes were taken on the beautiful estate of Mrs. E. John Brandeis, "Fairacres," which is one of the show places of the Northwest.

The story of Omaha is intervowen with a story of love and adventure.

Madeline Brandeis in "When East Meets West."

The picture begins with a scene of the Missouri River in 1804, showing the explorers, Lewis and Clark, turning their canoe toward the shore to camp for the night on the present site of Omaha. Other scenes show Lewis and Clark making a treaty with the Shoshone Indians, whose hunting grounds were where the city of Omaha now stands.

"AMERICA'S HERITAGE."

"America's Heritage" is a picture that will show the parents of America what the Boy Scout movement is doing for America's men of to-morrow. Filled with action the picture takes the spectator on a trip from the Middle West, through the Great Lakes country, visiting the points of interest, including Niagara Falls and other wonders of the Northwestern part of the United States to Maine. The scouts then journey down the picturesque Maine Coast, stopping off at Kittery, across from which is Portsmouth, where one of Uncle Sam's largest navy yards is located.

The action of the picture is shown by the visualization of a series of letters sent by one of the scouts to his mother. As she reads her son's letters the scene of the home fades out to give place to scenes of the Boy Scouts disporting in the clear mountain streams, picking berries and camping out in the woods, under supervision of older men. The scouts are shown visiting points of historical note and carrying out their code—"Be prepared to lend a helping hand."

THE CANDY COURTSHIP.

Probably the most interesting industrial picture ever made will be ready for cutting and editing within the next week. It is entitled "The Candy Courtship" and is being produced by Harry Levey, general manager of the Universal Industrial and Educational Department. It is no exaggeration to say this picture contains "The sweetest story ever told."

The candy messenger boy is played by Andy Clark, who gained fame with the old Edison Company. But—ah! ah! ah! The wonderful blonde beauty, who presides at the candy counter. For this part, Mr. Levey selected Helen Weer, who first became known through the part she played in David Belasco's production of the "Music Master." Her first hit in pictures was made when she worked with Montagu Love in productions for the World Film Corporation. Paul Gilmore, the Bert in "The Better Ole" is the "father" of the beautiful blonde heroine of "The Candy Courtship." Wallace Ray plays opposite Miss Weer, and, according to Harry Forbes, cameraman, Mr. Ray knows all about the girls as well as candy.

"THE GOLDEN LEGEND."

"The Golden Legend" a romance of New Orleans will be released by the Universal Educational early in the new year. In this picture virtually the entire population of the city of New Orleans took part. Harry Fraser, director-writer-actor, plays the role of hero.

The demand at this time for educational pictures and industrial pictures of an entertainment and educational character is so great that an entirely new field has been opened for the employment of well known screen actors and actresses. In the making of Universal industrial and educational pictures now being put out, much pains been taken to fit each part with an artist of the first rank.

Among the many stars of the industrial and educational department of the Universal, May Irwin stands out prominently. As a portrayer of the pleasant and necessary tasks of the household she is without a peer.

Helen Weer in "Candy Courtship."

DON'T READ THIS IF YOUR POPULATION IS UNDER 300!

THIS EXHIBITOR WRITES—

"WE played it in our small town. Exhibitors in towns of EVEN 300 POPULATION can show this picture and make it PROFITABLE through proper advertising. They could charge a dollar or even considerably more and send their patrons away ENTIRELY SATISFIED.

Two Reel Century Animal Comedy Featuring Jimmy Adams and the Century Lions.

Directed by Fred C. Fishbach.

(Copyright 1920 by Century Motion Picture Company)

LOIS KILLSOME was so beseiged with suitors that she determined to give herself to the bravest lion hunter and in case he should be killed she would marry the best rabbit hunter. The trumpet for the hunt called them all to the lion field and while Fatty was hunting for rabbits, Jimmy the Fearless looked for lions. Both were successful but Jimmy soon became the hunted rather than the hunter and his agility alone saved him from becoming a lion lunch. As he attempted to escape from the jungle, however, he ran slam-bang into King Fadeum and for a time it looked as though Jimmy was destined to become the monarch of the jungle until Fadeum discovered that Jimmy's dice were crooked.

Summoning the Royal Chef he consigned Jimmy to the stew. Before Jimmy was quite ready to be served, however, Queen Bangle came along and shimmied him temporarily out of his predicament, but Lois and her lion hunters had so peeved the lions that the party was glad to join Jimmy in the stew while the lions licked the broth.

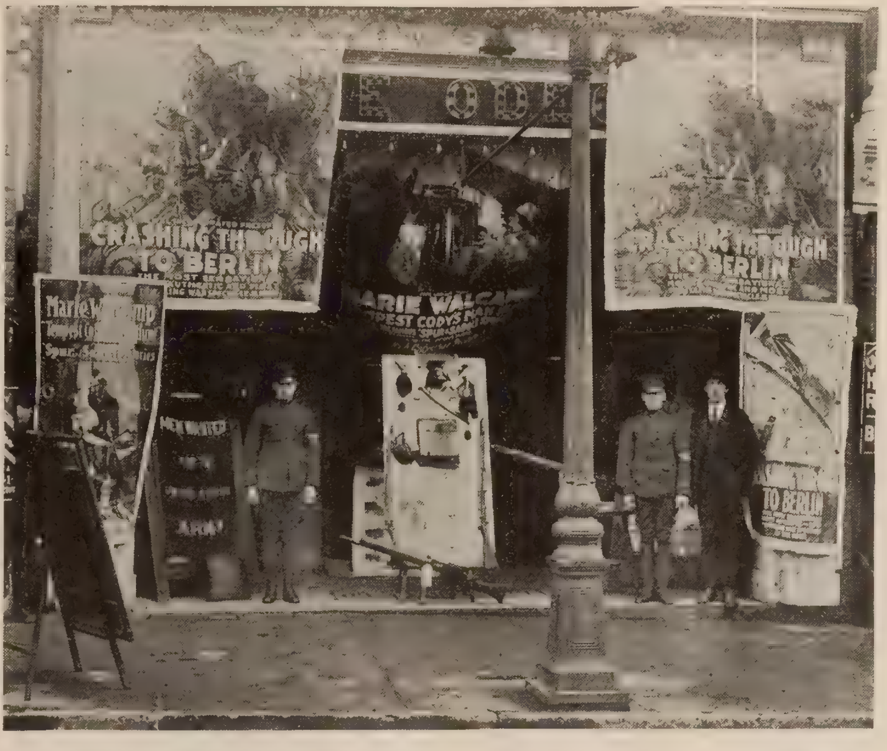
WHAT to do with a capsized canoe is the interesting first subject of this very interesting issue. The first thing is to keep cool and don't let the water dampen your spirits. If you paddle with your hands you can make two miles an hour. We then are introduced to John McIntyre, who, once a hobo, is devoting his life to reclaiming human driftwood as superintendent of the Whosoever Gospel Mission, Germantown, Philadelphia. He has righted the footsteps of more than 180,000 wanderers. Next, Dame Courtesy gives a lesson in "Watching your step" at a dance. The proper thing to do and say at all times is ably illustrated. In this day of chasing the old H. C. of L., Mr. P. A. Cimini, a Bucalo architect has invented a device which conserves precious space and makes one room serve as four. It is called a turn-table apartment. Landlords get many a smile out of letters from tenants, and some of these are included in this week's letter-laughs. This issue closes with a futurist movie of Secretary Lansing.

Who Said "No War Pictures"?



Odeon Theatre, Clarksburg, W. Va., playing "Crashing Through To Berlin."

Mr. Carl Laemmle, President. December 13, 1919.
Universal Film Company.
Dear Mr. Laemmle:—

Just a few words to say that I have often heard that exhibitors were skeptical about the booking of war pictures, including myself.

A representative of the Washington branch, through difficulty, sold me "CRASHING THROUGH TO BERLIN." I played this feature to the record business of the Odeon Theatre, and only wish the Universal Film Company had more of these money-makers.

I am enclosing a photo of the lobby display, in co-operation with the recruiting officer of the United States, thus proving that he could secure a number of recruits, and I certainly recruited patrons that never knew the Odeon Theatre was in existence.

Thanking you very kindly for producing this wonderful money-getter, I am most sincerely,

THE ODEON THEATRE, Clarksburg, W. Va.

AFTERMATH OF DRIVE.

ness, speak a kind word, boost for a Happier Holiday Season, and better Spirit and good will to those with whom we come in contact. This having been done in sincerity and truth we may rest assured that we have made some effort, however humble it may seem, to restore Law, Order, and Peace in this country, that which we all so much desire.

In witness, whereof I have hereunto set hand this 22nd December, 1919.

Elmer Dovel, Mayor.

Alameda, California,
December 11, 1919.

Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.,
San Francisco, Cal.

Dear Sirs:

Replying to your letter requesting an expression of opinion on your holiday season plan, permit me to say:

"By all means make Decembber of this year a universal holiday season. Infuse happines and contentment into every household throughout the land. Unrest and discontent among the people will then diminish, for in this country they ought not to exist. When good feelings prevail, the activities of the agitator and his co-disturbers will cease to be pernicious.

Very truly yours,
Frank Otis,
Mayor of Alameda.

Annapolis, Maryland,
December 12th, 1919.

Mr. Carl Laemmle, President,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
New York City, N. Y.

In reply to your letter of the 11th instant, I beg to advise you that your plans for covering the entire United States with posters, newspaper publiity and advertising advocating the idea of Universal peace, happiness, contentment and optimism, perhaps, may be the dreams of the Idealist, but I believe that the drive may do much to allay the present unrest: a large part being due to a mental state rather than to conditions.

I wish you success in your undertaking.

Emerson C. Harrington, Governor.

Hastings, Nebr.
December 15, 1919.

Universal Film Exchanges, Inc.,
Omaha, Nebraska.

We acknowledge receipt of yours of November 30th and December 12th.

We are in hearty accord with the sentiments expressed in both your letters. We think it a splendid idea. You have stated the matter in a very fine, patriotic and philosophical manner.

We will do our utmost to carry out the ideas and suggestions expressed.

CAST.

Cleo Rand (The Countess Nada)	Cleo Manison
Gloria Marston	Eileen Sedgwick
Bob Preston	Rob Reeves
The Buzzard	Bob Kortman
John Marston	Jeff Osborne
The Dove	Robert Gray

REALIZING it will mean certain death to herself and Bob, Gloria promises the Buzzard the radium and keys to the combination. As she is about to give it up, Bob manages to break his chains and pins the Buzzard in his iron clutch. Nada arrives at this time with the Mystedy Man and fastens the iron bracelets on the Buzzard, who tries to persuade Gloria and Bob that she is double-crossing them as she has double-crossed him, but Bob upholds Nada.

Being conducted out of the place, the Buzzard springs a trap leading to an underground passage and drops the two detectives, still handcuffed to him, down the trap door, holding them suspended as he calls for help. Nada enters the tunnel through another route and releases the two detectives from the handcuffs and suspends herself to the cuffs to keep up the weight. The Dove comes to the Buzzard's assistance and releases him by holding Nada up until the trap crushes her fingers, forcing her to let go.

Bob and Gloria, meanwhile, are on their way to Gloria's home, when the detectives meet Bob and tell him the Buzzard has escaped and secured a girl who looks like Gloria. With two thugs, he sends her into the woods trusting that when Mystery Man hears her cries, supposing her to be Gloria, he'll leave the tank to go to her rescue, which trick works out.

In the guise of the Mystery Man, the Buzzard enters the tank.

Gloria in the meantime is intent upon Bob leaving her and pursuing the Buzzard, but fearing for her safety, he insists upon her going with him, until they meet the Mystery Man, in reality the Buzzard and Bob turns her over to him while he starts on the trail of the Buzzard, never suspecting he has just turned her over to the criminal.

The real Mystery Man realizing he has been tricked, meets Bob and tells him of the Buzzard's strategy and together they head for his direction—they see him headed towards a Mexican village with Gloria in the tank. Nada and the secret service men join Bob and take him with them is their car.

In the guise of the Mystery Man the Buzzard informs Gloria he will place her in the care of a friend who will look out for her and starts to leave the village. He turns her over to the Dove who appears at the dive and the Buzzard sends out several yeggs to keep the detectives away from the place. These yeggs meet the secret service men and give them a battle. Bob being overtaken by two of the yeggs gives them a good fight and throwing them, takes off their clothes and in disguise enters the Mexican dive seeking Gloria.

Meanwhile Nada has donned the garb of a Salvation Army lass and enters the dive too. Bob is set upon by two yeggs left in charge of the outer chamber, while the Buzzard, having forced Gloria to tell him where the radium is and receiving it from her, makes known his real self to Gloria's amazement. Planning to do away with her once and for all, the Dove and the Buzzard, strap her into a hidden wall bed and leave her there to suffocate by pulling off the gas jet which will serve to cover his crime from the secret service men who in the meantime have joined Bob and Nada, in his dive, and fight their way to the rapidly suffocating Gloria.

"A Baby Doll Bandit."

Universal-Jewel featuring Mrs. Joe Martin and Jimmy Adams.

WEAZEL Tail Bend was so crooked it couldn't see straight. The sheriff and his deputy had the habits of Jesse James, and he also robbed the country by teaching school. The weekly train was the town's only sport. The engineer knew Weazel Bend—so he didn't even hesitated. They had a nice soft mattress on the station platform to catch the passengers that chanced that way. But one day the town was brightened considerably by the arrival of Miss Betsy Beautiful, whom the School Trustee sent to relieve the sheriff of one of his duties—teaching school. Her sweetheart Hiram Biff, had followed her, however, riding on his nerve and the engine rod.

"Big Kick Kitchen," was the place where society mixed soft drinks with hard fists. Even the bad guy, Pineapple Pete, didn't look so hard, sipping a soft drink. However, looks are not everything. Pineapple decided to pay the bank an unofficial visit to draw out some cash he had never deposited, but he was interrupted by our friend the Sheriff, who demanded half of the loot. Everything was going lovely, when who should appear but Hiram. He rounded up the crooks in fine shape, grabbed the money with one hand, his girl with the other and they both grabbed the first train going the other way.

On the following day, Enright and Celeste arrive in Topaz and are told of Stella. Celeste decides to drug her and then search her room for evidence. But Stella, who knows Celeste, is on her guard, and instead switches glasses with Celeste and dopes her.

Beaton, meanwhile, has gone to Westcott's cabin and is searching it as Westcott is in town. Stella, seeking Westcott, comes to his cabin and is caught by Beaton. Enright and Lacey, finding that Celeste's ruse has failed, start out after Stella.

Westcott, in town, is captured by two Mexicans and tied up. But with the aid of a small child whom he has befriended, he manages to escape.

Enright and Lacey arrive at Westcott's cabin, where Beaton has Stella tied up. They decide on a fiendish revenge. The lamp is filled with a high explosive, so that when it is lighted the cabin and those in it will be blown to pieces.

Westcott returns to his cabin, where Stella is tied and gagged. But just as he lights the lamp, a hand comes through the window—the hand of the Lion Man. He picks up the lamp, tosses it to the side of the cabin, where a terrific explosion occurs. tella and Westcott flee from the cabin to a mining shaft, into which Westcott lowers Stella. But a bullet from Lacey's gun strikes Westcott, and the episode ends with Stella, in the mining bucket, rapidly descending into the shaft.

OLD man Craven, of Red Gulch County, had two sons. He send Beverly east to be made into a gentleman, but Beverly went from Yale to New York and became a first-class lounge-lizzard. Tom, the younger, had steadily refused to be sent east. He was a gentleman of the ranges and as such was known and respected by Red Gulch and the neighboring counties.

When old man Craven died suddenly it was found that he had left his money to be divided between his sons, but that Harmony Ranch and the cattle had been left to Beverly, the elder. When Beverly received Tom's telegram he was entertaining a bunch of lovely ladies from the Cocoanut Grove. He conceived the idea of taking the ladies with him to view the West. All were willing except Susie de Larue who was a western girl. She loved the West but didn't want to go there. However, with persuasion she went.

When the party arrived the girls were escorted to the bunkhouse by the Chink. The girls found the bunkhouse full of half-dressed cowboys. The girls were annoyed but Tom arrived and rectified the error and the fun began. Tom fell for Susie hard, and had no idea of ever letting her go East again unless as his wife. So he fixed it with Bud Thomas to have a make-believe hold up, frighten the lives out of Beverly and his bunch and kidnap Susie until the others had fled Eastward.

It chanced that Ten-Spot Joe, a local badman, arranged a real holdup with his pal, Mike the Rat for the same night. Mike held up the saloon and with it Bud Thomas while Ten-Spot went to the ranch house and held up the bunch. Tom was waiting for Bud and he mistook Ten-Spot for Bud, so he helped with the holdup and was tickled when Ten-Spot abducted Susie and rode off with her. Tom followed to the saloon, expecting to find Bud and Susie. He found instead, Bud and Mike the Rat each covering the other. Then it dawned on Tom that he had helped the worst blackguard outside jail to run off with his girl. He made Mike the Rat guide him to Ten-Spot's cabin and by luck he got there in time. Susie agreed to stay West and be Mrs. Tom—and Beverly and his Cocoanut tribe were already on their way to Broadway.

"UNDER CRIMSON SKIES"

A Glorious Romance of Love and High-Seas Adventure

TRULY, a great picture. A rousing, stirring picture. A romantic picture. A story that sweeps you up out of your humdrum life and carries you off to sea—to fight with strong, silent Elmo Lincoln against the perls of mutiny on the high seas—to fall in love with a beautiful woman and sacrifice liberty for her sake—to make a miraculous escape from the fetid dungeon of a southern republic and became master of a colony of beach-combers, conquering them by might of fist and brain and then—to save the one woman from a terrible fate in the midst of red revolution. Splendidly acted by a great company in outdoor scenes of tempest and sunshine rarely equalled for their marvelous photography. One of the few big productons of the year.

THE STORY

FINDING himself lacking inspiration in his painting, Charles Howard, a young struggling artist, accepts an invitation to a week-end party at the Westchester mansion of Max Goldberg, a millionaire. There he meets and is captivated by Lita O'Farrell, in her costume of "Folly." Lita is engaged—"on and off"—to Goldberg, whose money she likes, but whose personality she finds it hard to accept. Howard, an aristocrat to the core, falls in love with the lovely butterfly.

Lita, too, for the first time in her life, knows what it really is to love a man. In fact, during that first evening, the infatuation is so complete, that Howard decides not to see the girl in the city again.

However, fate has it otherwise, and Howard finds himself restless and unhappy away from the girl. He takes her home one day, after he had met her accidentally, and they are followed by Goldberg, who demands that she make her choice between him and the struggling artist's vague attentions. Lita turns defiantly toward Howard and Howard, against cold reasoning, announces that he will marry her. They marry and enjoy a blissful honeymoon, but realization soon sets in and Howard begins to wonder if he had acted wisely in not marrying a girl of his own class with whom he had been previously in love. For Lita goes on living as before, mingling with her gay and frivolous friends, even meeting Goldberg at the parties which she attends. She does not fit it all with Howard's ideal of a wife, and when the bills begin to pile up and his work is refused, he grows very unhappy.

Lita realizes the state of his mind and bravely decides to let him have his freedom. She goes away—leaving a note that makes him think she has gone to Goldberg. He goes there armed with a revolver to find Goldy alone. And here it is that he learns his lesson. For Goldy takes him to task for his stupidity in failing to understand Lita and in judging her so relentlessly. Howard is humbled and it is then that Goldy tells him where Lita is. He goes to her, they have an understanding, and in the realization of that and in the depth of his love for her and in her love for him, the pair find a deep and lasting happiness.

Carmel Myers in "In Folly's Trail"

ADVANCE STORY

THEATREGOERS of this city who recall the youth, charm, beauty and acting of Carmel Myers in a number of screen dramas and who have missed her pleasing personality in the films of the past year, will doubtless be glad to welcome her back to the silent drama when she appears at the .... Theatre on ...., presenting "In Folly's Trail," a play of New York's seething Bohemia, directed by Rollin Sturgeon.

"In Folly's Trail," was selected by Universal from hundreds of scenarios proposed to mark Miss Myers' return to the creen. It is from the magazine story by Katherine Leiser Robbins, and its central figure, Lita O'Farrell, a gay butterfly of the modern Babylon, who finally realizes that life is not all froth and frivolity, gives the star an opportunity to display her broader talents.

Since her last appearance on the silver sheet Carmel Myers has captivated New York, where she has appeared for an entire year in a Broadway musical comedy. Then, proving that she could be just as successful on the legitimate stage, and acquiring many new dramatic tricks useful to her heart, she returned to her first love—the screen.

Universal, under whose banner Miss Myers is starring, is said to have "gone the limit" in making "In Folly's Trail" one of the big pictures of the year. Sumptuous settings, depicting life among New York's smart set; gay revels showing how the millionaires of Manhattan laugh at prohibition, and scenes of powerful intensity where the appeal to the heart is as strong as to the eye, mark the progress of the story. And Miss Myers has been surrounded by a company of unusual importance.

REGARDING THE MAKERS OF THE PICTURE

IT would be difficult to find a more interesting lot of people in any single gathering than the company of players and others who contributed to the making of "In Folly's Trail," the Universal photodrama starring Carmel Myers, which is now offered at the .... Theatre.

Miss Myers, for instance, is the daughter of an eminent rabbi and a learned scholar. She wrote verse for the papers and magazines at the age of 14, was a screen star at 16 and a success on the New York stage at 18. Now she is back in the films.

Rollin Sturgeon, director, was one of the first dramatic directors to sense the importance of the screen and has been producing photodramas for twelve years. He was the first scenario editor of the New York Vitagraph Company and has been with Universal for the past two years.

Thomas Holding, the leading man, has played with Henry Irving, Edith Terry and Maxine Elliott, and has been leading man with such screen stars as Nazimova, Clara Kimball Young, Pauline Frederick and Olga Petrova.

George B. Williams, who plays the wealthy dilettante, has played on the stages of three continents, and holds the record for long runs in Shakespearean roles.

Viola Lind, who is seen in the role of the New York chorus girl, is a grand niece of Jenny Lind, the famous Swedish nightingale of the last century.

B. H. Martin, who designed the settings, decorations and costumes for "In Folly's Trail," is one of California's most popular artists, who lends her talents on rare occasions to the production of photoplays.

CHAMPAGNE AND CARMEL

IF Claire Briggs, the cartoonist, wants to wonder what a quart of champaigne thinks about, he can get authentic information from Carmel Myers. The sparkling beauty gave an intoxicating imitation of the sparkling beverage at Universal City not long ago when she emerged from imprisonment in a giant bottle for a scene in 'In Folly's Trail."

Miss Carmel, be it known, is the Spirit of Folly—belled, capped with satin, and gowned in gossamer of elusive blue and pink chiffon.

A champagne bottle nine feet high, realistic in all but contents, is brought on to the dance floor at the height of a Bohemian revel. With a loud report the bottle bursts and discloses in bubbling exuberance (personal, not spiritual) Miss Carmel Myers, who, as Folly, allegorically enough emerges from the bottle. The guests are invited to visit the lower regions "In Folly's Trail," and such as take advantage of the invitation discover that the "lower regions" consist of a splendidly-stocked cellar.

Director Rollin Sturgeon caused a high wall to be erected about the set to keep back hordes of attaches and visitors who hankered to partake in olden scenes again.

"In Folly's Trail" was recently published in a popular magazine. It is from the pen of Katherine Leiser Robbins, picturized by Doris Schroeder. Carmey Myers has in her supporting cast Thomas Holding, George B. Williams, Beth Ivans, Viola Lind, Arthur Clayton and W. H. Bainbridge.

NOTES FOR "IN FOLLY'S TRAIL"

"In Folly's Trail," the spectacular drama of New York Bohemian life, which is to be shown at the .... Theatre next ...., marks the return to the screen of Carmel Myers, who was for several years one of Universal's most popular tars. After a year on the New York musical comedy stage, Miss Myers is again exercising her fascinating talents before the motion picture camera.

A Bacchanalian feast such as might have been staged in the princely halls of ancient Babylon comprises one of the several big scenes in Carmel Myers' Universal production, "In Folly's Trail," which is to be shown at the .... Theatre on .... From all accounts this is the most sumptuous scene of revelry produced on the screen in a long time.

Rollin Sturgeon, who was selected to direct Carmel Myers in the first feature upon her return to the screen, is recognized as one of the foremost authorities on motion picture production. He was one of the first dramatic stage directors to realize the coming importance of the silent drama, and helped develop the art of the film. He is directing Miss Myers in "In Folly's Trail," coming to the .... Theatre next ....

In the cabaret scene in "In Folly's Trail," to be seen at the .... Theatre on ...., Carmel Myers, the fascinating star, has an opportunity to display her skill in dancing, learned during the past season, when she was featured in a Broadway musical comedy. She introduced a number of steps which were new even to the up-to-date movie colony in California.

A Triumphant Return

CARMEL MYERS

THE mother of Carmel Myers, dainty young screen star, relates an incident concerning her talented daughter which illustrates the sincerity and perseverance which have made this slip of a girl a star of the silent drama and the musical comedy stage before she has reached her twentieth year.

When Miss Myers, a little over a year ago, decided that her education was not complete without at least a season on the speaking stage, she refused all offers for further film contracts, packed her trunks, and, accompanied by her mother, journeyed to New York. Here, although she was known as a film star, no one had ever heard of her work on the audible stage—for the very good reason that she had only appeared in the films up to that time.

Her popularity with the public, however, secured her a hearing from every prominent New York producer, and the engagement she finally accepted was that of the leading feminine role in "The Magic Melody," a Shubert production. But the part required an operatic voice and the ability to dance well—two accomplshments Miss Myers had never cultivated. Her mother tells that in the eight weeks the operetta was being rehearsed Carmel worked sixteen hours a day with a vocal instructor and with a dancing master, and by the time the piece was ready for its Broadway opening Miss Myers sang like a nightingale and danced like a butterfly. The New York newspapers were a unit in their praise of the little star, and every reviewer wondered at her extreme cleverness in the arts of the musical comedy stage.

And now, Carmel is returning to her first love, the screen, triumphant. She is the same dainty little actress, but with an art that has broadened considerably. The speaking stage has taught her a lot that will be useful to her on the screen and she is grateful for that season on Broadway. How successful is Carmel's return can be seen from her first picture of the season, 'In Folly's Trail," in which she depicts with a vidiness that is remarkable the rôle of a butterfly girl, light-hearted, unconventional, frivolous, yet of big and generous spirit and pure white at heart. Her leading man is Thomas Holding, and the love scenes between this handsome and accomplished actor and the beautiful little star are indeed exquisite. The rôle fits Carmel Myers like a glove and she has made the most of each and every opportunity which it has afforded her.

Rollin Sturgeon

—a purposeful Director with a big present and still bigger future.

IN the two years that Rollin Sturgeon has been at Universal City, he has been quietly and unostentatiously doing big things. He directed Monroe Salisbury in "Hugon the Mighty" and "Sundown Trail," and Priscilla Dean in "Pretty Smooth," a picturization of Bayard Veiller's "The Chatterbox." He directed Dorothy Phillips in "Destiny," and Tsuru Aoki in "The Breath of the Gods." His direction in this latter picture was flawless and noteworthy. But he did not rest on his laurels, but went right on and directed Carmel Myers in "In Folly's Trail," another excellent production, and now he is directing her in her forthcoming release, "The Gilded Dream."

Sturgeon was born in Rock Island, Illinois, some forty-two years ago. He attended grade school and high school at Rock Island and studied at Northwestern University and at Harvard. From school he entered his father's law office and worked there until 1909, when he was induced to enter the motion picture industry. He was successively a scenario editor, a studio manager, an author and a director, and he was instrumental in giving many now famous picture stars their start. He himself married a film star, Edna Fisher, formerly leading woman for Vitagraph. They make their home in Los Angeles and they are the proud parents of four healthy youngsters.

There is nothing of the high-brow about Rollin Sturgeon. He is an artistic director who can view his profession practically. He likes to fish and he likes to read, but most of all he likes to come home at night to his happy family. He is strong for Universal, and his faith in that organization doubtless has something to do with the general excellence of his work. And likewise Universal has faith in him and predict a vital and forceful career for him.

FRANK COTTER, UNIVERSAL'S NEW AUSTRALIAN REPRESENTATIVE

UNIVERSAL will have a forceful representative in Australia in the person of Frank J. Cotter, when he takes over the leadership of that branch of the Universal organization. For the past few months Mr. Cotter has been Mr. Bryson's assistant, but Mr. Bryson, having started the Sydney Exchange, and having seen it on the high road to success, is now on his way back to the United States preparatory to investigating another foreign field.

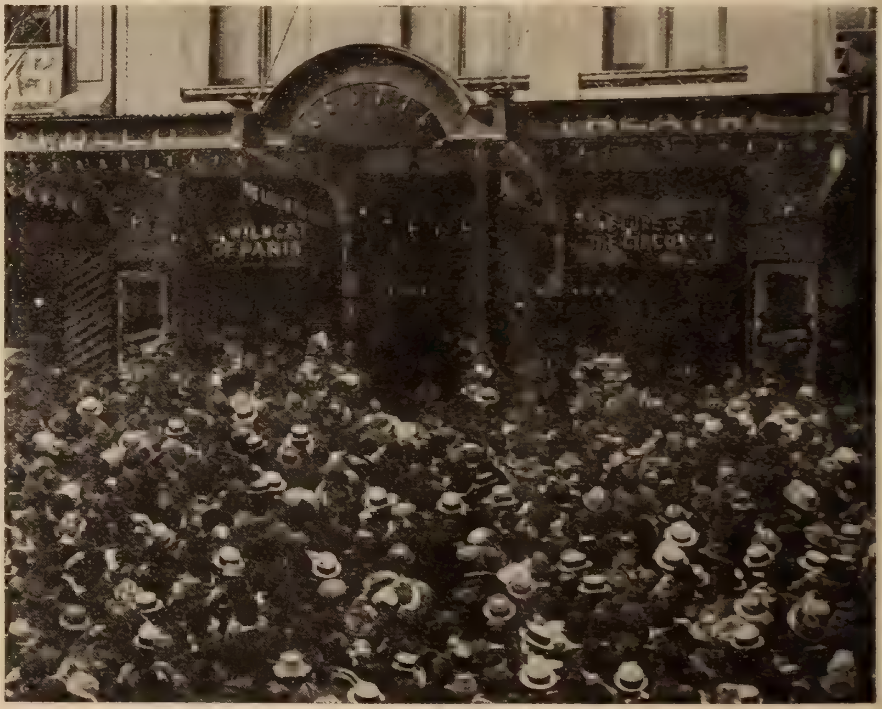
Cotter is better known in the newspaper world as Pat O'Cotter, which is the name he has used for the last twenty years in his writing. For Frank J. Cotter has already made a name for himself in newspaper and magazine circles. His journalistic career has been romantic and varied. He broke into the newspaper game with the well-known Dave King on the Morning Olympian at Olympia, Wash. Later he worked on the Tacoma Ledger and on the Seattle Post Intelligencer. Then the wanderlust gripped him and took him to China, where he wrote for some time on the China Mail at Shanghai, and later at Hong Kong. When he came back to America he got the gold fever and joined in the rush to Alaska, where he made and lost several good stacks in the placer mining game before he returned to his first love, the newspaper game, and hung his hat up in the office of the News of Fairbanks, Alaska. He worked in Alaska as a newspaper man for almost a dozen years. During his stay in Alaska he wrote many stories and poems. The most noted of these are "Tales of the Tanana," a book of Alaskan short stories, and "Rhymes of a Roughneck," a volume of Alaskan verse.

He left Alaska early this year with the idea of beating it to the South Seas and finally to South Africa. It was on this trip aboard the S. S. Sonoma that Mr. James Bryson, who was on the way to Australia to project a series of agencies for Universal, convinced Mr. Cotter that he should join forces with that outfit, and so it was that Mr. Cotter came to take over the leadership of Universal's Australian branch. His varied and rich experiences make him the proper man for the job, for they have given him a broad and progressive outlook and assuredly this is a necessity in building up a big and romantic industry in new territory that is equally big and romantic.

The Wildcat and the Circus

BELOW is a picture of the crowd which was surging for hours in front of the Apollo Theatre, Sydney, Australia, during the run of Priscilla Dean in "The Wildcat of Paris," and Eddie Polo in "The Lure of the Circus."

In Australia all of the theatres run from two to three features on a programme, and James V. Bryson, who represented Universal in Australia, was very fortunate in being able to supply so many excellent Universal features and serials for immediate showing. One of the largest theatres in Melbourne, Hoyt's De Luxe Theatre, has been running a series of Universals. A clipping from a Melbourne paper shows a two column advertisement of Hoyt's with nine-tenths of the space devoted to Frank Mayo in "The Brute Breaker," and the other tenth devoted to an American production which was advertised in this country as a superfeature.



Frank Mayo in "Hitchin' Posts"

"HITCHIN' POSTS" is a splenedid vehicle for Frank Mayo and it affords him a role not only romantic and alluring, but big and virile as well, admirably suited to his interesting personality. Mayo plays the rôle of Jefferson Todd, a gambler, but a gentleman withal, who is imbued with a deep sense of chivalry and honor and who is a man every inch. The story unrolls itself during the period immediately following the civil war, and it gives Mayo an opportunity to look very handsome indeed in the dashing clothes of that period. The story is from the pen of H. H. Shumate, and no expense has been spared to make the production an accurate and handsome one.

The star has excellent support in his leading lady, Beatrice Burnham, and a dainty one she is indeed, and the rest of the players include J. Farrell McDonald, Joseph Harris, Dagmar Godowsky, Mark Fenton, Duke Lee, Capt. Anderson and Mat Biddulph.

Universal City is Hard at Work

WITHIN the next few months, Universal will release a variety of special attractions, of sufficient range to suit all kinds of tastes.

Gladys Walton, the "find" who performed so creditably with Lyons and Moran in La La Lucille, will have one more leading role before attaining independent stardom. She will appear in a charming comedy drama now tentatively entitled "The Watchmaker" which concerns itself with the story of a wondrous friendship between two men. The cast is an all-star one and will include, in addition to the dainty leading lady, Lee Kohlmar, known to vaudevillians all over the country and Rudolph Christians. Miss Walton will then be starred together with Jack Perrin in "Pink Tights," a story of circus life and will probably follow this up with stardom in "White Youth" a romantic story from the prolific pens of Forrest Halsey and Clara Beranger.

From all reports "Sundown Slim," the next Carey picture, is the best picture that Carey has made yet. Even Carey himself feels that way about it for in a letter written recently to his mother from the Mojave desert where many of the scenes were being shot he says, "I have just finished the best scene I ever played in the best picture that was ever made—I think. This would sound 'ego' to anyone but you but I know you understand. This will be a short letter as I am hot and tired. Mr. H. H. Knibbs, the author of 'Sundown Slim' is out here with us and enjoying every minute." Assuredly with Carey feeling this way about the picture and with the man who wrote "Overland Red" for its author, the reports of the picture's excellent quality cannot be exaggerated. Much of a picture's success is due to the enthusiasm which its star feels for it and Carey is certainly enthusiastic about "Sundown Slim."

It has been many a moon since lovely Carmel Myers graced the silver sheet for the speaking stage has deprived moviegoers of her charming presence for a year. Now she is back and back strong in "In Folly's Trail" and she will shortly follow this up with "The Gilded Dream" in which the gay life is again portrayed.

Early September will bring with it the release of "Hitchin' Posts" in which Frank Mayo is said to have one of the best and most picturesque roles of his career but from all reports "Black Friday" by Frederick Isham, his next picture, is one to be looked forward to with eager anticipation. For this is a story not only of love, but of the lure and the romance of Wall street and Mayo in such a combination should certainly be a treat.

Eva Novak is not being neglected either. The little new star will disport her blonde loveliness soon in "Wanted At Headquarters" which is said to be a genuine thriller and from that she will put all her energy to a different kind of a role entirely in "Out of the Sunset" the story of a lovely romance. This only serves to prove the versatility of Eva Novak.

No mention of "Universal Special Attractions" is complete without a word about Lyons and Moran. Those two mirth-provokers are plugging away harder than ever. Two stupendous successes in "Everything but the Truth" and "La La Lucille" have not diminished their energy in the least and the next one to be looked for from them is entitled "Once A Plumber" in which they are said to have "the time of their lives." And it is already known that this will be followed up by "Fixed By George."

This certainly looks like a big program to be crowded into the next few months but Universal has by no means let up in its zeal in purchasing material for the stars in the special attractions.

Up-to-the-Minute Showmen Will Clean Up With This

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

If you are the sort of an exhibitor who cares to go in for exploitation on a large scale, who desires to vary his program with something out of the ordinary now and then, you can book this, make one large splurge and then sit down and count the sheckles as they roll into the box office. Start by promising them pictures of a strange and little explored land, explaining some of the habits of the people, but taking care not to tell them who or where they are.

After that, enlist the aid of the educational institutions—get your local school authorities to endorse it, starting meanwhile, a teaser campaign. Keep them guessing, getting them interested in exploration in the meantime. Arouse their curiosity and tell them that it is something they haven't seen before; the picture will bear you out.

If you can possibly arrange to play this in conjunction with a lecture, you can clean up heavily. If you can't get someone on the trip to talk about it, you can put it in and with judicious handling pocket the elusive dollars anyhow.

MONKEY STUFF-

WHEN it comes to the case of a screen that needs a lot of laughter to brighten it up—I'm the doctor—me and the Missus, I mean. It's a fact that our monkey stuff has been responsible for as many laughs as there are sprocket holes in five feature films. That's about 5,465,764,908—and if you don't believe it, count 'em yourself. But, on the level, our comedies are going over great. Through underground channels at the zoo here I hear that the exhibitors who are playing our offerings are cleaning up on them and are hollering for more. They must be good, eh? PRISCILLA DEAN

FEW stars have attained the degree of favor with fans reached by PRISCILLA DEAN. Meteoric as her rise has been, she proves her right to every last iota of the adoration bestowed upon her through her appearance in "The Virgin of Stamboul." As Sari, the hoydenish beggar maid of the Turkish city, she brings to the screen the epitome of elements that make for popularity. Beauty, talent, charm—all are hers, and through sheer appeal of the sort that wins its way into the heart of the multitude she captivates irresistibly.

box-office wonder

HERE is the picture that has made—and still is making—motion picture history. From the very moment of its release it shot up on a wave of popularity that still is rising. It swept before it the first run crowds—made the biggest houses in the biggest cities extend their runs or play return dates. It did the same in the smaller houses in the big cities and the biggest houses in the smaller cities, and to-day it's still on its record-breaking sweep in the smaller towns throughout the country. Showmanship argues and logic corroborates the statement that the exhibitor who has not yet played this box-office wonder actually is taking money out of his own pocket. No matter how small his house he is assured even before he arranges for a date that every seat will be sold for every performance, and that as the word goes 'round the town the crowds will get the bigger and bigger. Believe the thousands who have said so—here's truly a box-office wonder.

"Believe me, Bo, that lioness was hungry" --- said Eddie Polo.

"Don't kid yourself for one minute about the lioness being so old she couldn't chew chopped steak," said Eddie Polo when asked about the scrap he had with the wild beast for a thrill in "The Vanishing Dagger." "Believe me, Bo, that lioness was hungry, and I'm telling you that that scrap was one of the narrowest squeaks I ever had. I had figured on a tough deal for those scenes, but I never thought the cat would get the best of me for even a minute—I never thought she'd get me on my back that way. At that, though, I wouldn't have been so bad off if my hold hadn't slipped. I miscalculated by a fraction of an inch, and in a flash the cat had her forepaws on my shoulders. I'm telling you the fight began in earnest then. She was mad for fair. I tried to get a hold on her throat. My hand slipped right into her jaws. Boy, when I felt those teeth crushing down on my fingers I heard the hinges squeak on the Pearly Gates. I sure thought my one-way ticket had been bought and paid for, and I might as well be on the level and tell you that the fear that showed in my face wasn't all acting. But I was mad as well as scared, and by a streak of luck I got a hold on the big cat's jaws which is well known to animal men, and from then on it was just a case of nerve and strength. We struggled all over the lot until I finally gave her the lever-hold, which broke her jaw. I knocked off and called it a day. You can see for yourself just how near I came to pulling a vanishing act myself by getting a clip of the film and looking at it under a magnifying glass. However, that stuff is all in my day's work, and you can bet I wouldn't be doing it unless it paid me a lot of dough—and gave a lot of people a thrill."

EDDIE POLO IN THE SMASHING SEA-TO-SEA SERIAL

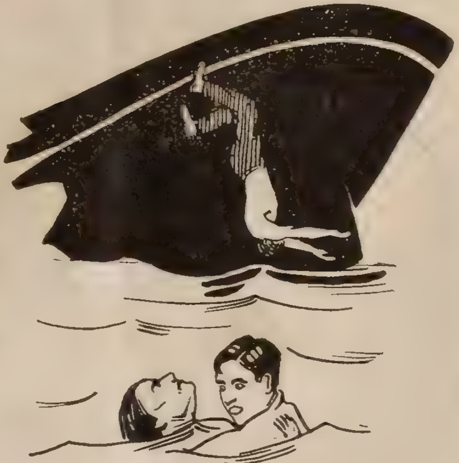
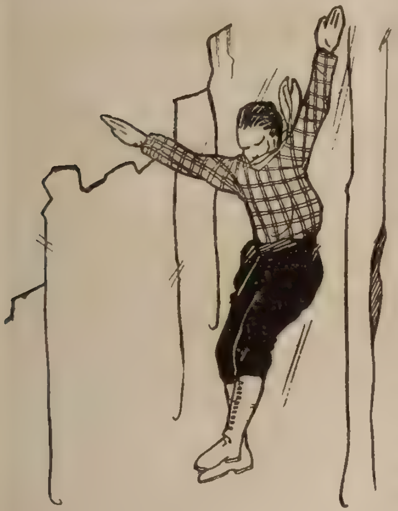
UNIVERSAL - MADE

"Take for instance, that sequence where I'm knocked off the side of a ship into the water—right on top of a couple of struggling men. Well, the baby who gave me the punch that sent me over the side that time was just a trifle too ambitious. I'll say he packs a wicked wallop. He clipped me one on the side of the jaw that was a beaut. I hadn't stopped counting the stars when I hit the water—just in time to get a rawhide boot in the nose. I always knew the ocean was wet, but I never before knew just how salty it was. I must have swallowed about a gallon before I came to the surface—and then I had to get right into the scrap. You can believe me when I say that I don't blame anybody for holding their breath when I make that leap on the screen—it sure was a breath-taker for me."





"I guess in 'The Vanishing Dagger' I jump over cliffs and that sort of thing several dozen times. I thought once that a leap like that was hardly worth the risk—that it wouldn't show up on the screen as a real thrill. So I went to a small house in San Diego where an episode with a darn good leap in it was running. I could scarcely believe what I saw. I was struggling on the brink of the cliff with two men. Tension among the crowd in that theatre was high. And when I had made the jump—more than forty feet—an audible groan and gasp could be heard around the house. A group of youngsters in the front seat were so excited that it looked as if they were going to jump with me. From then on I knew that the risk was worth while."

"But the risks I take don't always show up on the screen. Take, for instance, the time when I leaped from a cellar window to the under part of a speeding automobile. From the bottom of the car to the ground there was just room enough for my body. A miscalculation of an inch would have meant certain death. However, I rehearsed that bit several times before tackling it on a speeding car, and when the scene was taken I just did get away with it. The guy who was driving the car got rattled, though, and just after I had jumped he lost control and hit a water hydrant. The car turned over and I was thrown under the wreckage. In that case the wreck of the car was a bigger thrill than my leap, but I'm not particularly anxious to do that stunt with a crazy driver at the wheel again. The only thing that made me feel at all good about it was the way it registered on the screen. It certainly was a peach of a stunt—good enough to be a part of 'The Vanishing Dagger,' which, if I do say so myself, is some thriller!"

Grips like the claws of its own Deathly Devil-Men

THAT'S the keynote of the phenomenal success of "THE MOON RIDERS"---its unusual power to fascinate through fear as well as through thrill. It has this power because its elements are so proportioned and so put together as unfailingly to fire the imagination and hold curiosity captive. And the element that is largely responsible for this irresisstible fascination is its DEVIL-MEN. These weird characters give it just the right mixture of realism and unreality to make us shiver as we are thrilled. We hate these DEVIL-MEN, but like the bird hypnotized by the snake, we're hypnotized into coming to see them week after week. THE Dramatic Mirror is conducting a "Beauty and Ambition" contest, and the three fortunate girls who win this contest will each be awarded with a contract to appear in Universal pictures. The judges will be Coles Phillips, the well-known artist, Florenz Ziegfeld, producer of the "Ziegfeld Follies," famed for its beautiful women, W. A. Here's a chance to "get in" at last.

In the Mail Box of the Exchanges

HERE are three samples of what the postman brings in dozens to the Universal exchanges:

"It give me great pleasure to tell you that 'THE GREAT AIR ROBBERY' pulled the biggest business The Rose' has enjoyed since we ran The Heart of Humanity' two years ago. We put the publicity behind it; the pictureb backed it up. It is a different pictue. It attracts attention. A big picture, especially for small towns."

WM. C. McINTIRE,
Rose Theater,
Fayetteville, N. C.

"I wish to thank you for inducing me to run 'The Great Air Robbery,' and, believe me, it is some picture. Talk about action—I say there is plenty. It is the most daring picture of all times. I wish to say right here that every exhibitor in the country ought to show 'The Great Air Robbery,' to give his patrons the real picture of the hour. I have only a seating capacity of 150, in a town of 450, and made good on this picture, and every small town exhibitor can do the same."

G W. SCHWENN,
Rex Theatre,
Minden, Iowa.

"I AM dropping you a few lines about 'The Great Air Robbery,' which I played here June 22 and 23. I must say it is one of the best pictures I ever ran here and it went over strong both nights. Although I spent considerable money for advertising this picture, I cleaned up a nice bunch of money. I must say the Universal pictures I have been running are top notchers an dhard to beat."

TO call "Black" Jim Akin's bluff meant certain death or serious injury, as was attested when one of the participants in a game of chance had the audacity to upbraid him for his visible crookedness during a game. But when he seriously wounded Sheriff Lon Scott, who went to investigate the shot, he started a war of his own, for the sheriff's worldly treasures were his son and daughter. Jim Akin's prowess may have had the crowd cowed, but the sheriff's daughter lost no time in scathingly denouncing him and his methods ,also telling the crowd what cowards they were in leaving one man get the upper hand on all of them. She decides to take matters into her own hands and orders one of the crowd to telegraph to the "Sunrise Texas Rangers." The creed of the Rangers being "One man for one"—she is surprised to find that the only representative sent is one Buck Kirkland. This angers her, but her request that he return to his origin avails her little, for he decides to stay and convince her that it doesn't take more than one man to catch any one man.

Jim Akin is notified of the Ranger's presence, and Akin, having kidnapped the sheriff's small son as hostage in the event the sheriff's daughter succeeds in securing the upper hand over him, receives this news with an air of contempt. He sends back a note to Kirkland giving him warning to leave town on the next train. As the note is being put under Kirkland's door, he catches the intruder and forces him to tell him of the whereabouts of Akin. They come upon Akin just as he is leaving for town to see that Kirkland leaves. Kirkland misses this opportunity to kill Akin, having in mind the sheriff's son. As soon as Akin is out of sight, Kirkland bounds the intruder and overcomes the Indian guardian and leaves them both in the cabin. He takes the kid with him to town and leaves him near the railroad station to mind one of the horses. Akin, meanwhile, discovering that the Ranger is missing, decides that he has taken heed of his warning and is hiding in wait for the train to leave town. The crowd, all cowed by his appearance, urge him on with words of encouragement and all go down to the station to see the Ranger off. As the train approaches, the Ranger appears and Akin forces him to board the train. He arouses Akin's ire by some remarks he makes, and seeing an opportunity throws the gun from Akin's hand. Quick as a flash he fells Akin and they engage in a hand-to-hand struggle. The sheriff's daughter, who also thought that Akin had put fear into the Ranger, was at the station to see whether or not he left. As she witnessed Kirkland beat Akin into insensibility, her admiration for this Ranger had no bounds. But the climax came when her brother, who was an unknown witness to the fray, marches in after the horse, who had gotten away from him and walks over to the Ranger expecting a rebuke for his latest deed. But when the sister sees him she runs to embrace him, but he declines unless she embraces the Ranger, who is his "buddy.'

"Who's Crazy Now?"

One Reel Star Comedy

Featuring

BARTINE BURKETTE and AUSTIN HOWARD

FATHER is a "bug" on insanity symptoms and when he sees Howard fondling a kewpie doll he has given his Hazel, he ousts him, saying he is crazy for doing that and crazy for falling for Hazel. Hazel and Howard hatch a plot and Howard dresses up as Dr. Sarah Baker, insanity expert. Dr. Baker calls on father, and seeing him eating nuts, which, by the way, is father's chief pastime, tells him he is going nutty and puts him to bed. Even Hazel, the doctor says, acts like a little squirrel.

Napoleon, a real "nut," escapes from the asylum, though Howard does not knew he is a "nut," when he hires him as father's keeper. Then he and Hazel sneak off and get married, Howard still wearing his lady togs. When they return they find war in camp. Napoleon had been trying to feed father nuts, and father, wary of Dr. Baker's warnings, would not eat them. A mad chase was in process between father and Napoleon, which ended in Napoleon being captured finally by his guards, who have been looking frantically for him.

Dr. Baker then tells father that what is needed in the house to keep it running smoothly is a man of sense and that she knows just the man, namely Howard Smith. Whereupon Dr. Baker changes to his right clothes and comes on as Howard and all is peace in the household.

King Carson	Otto Lederer

JOHN CARLTON, financier, tells his daughter Marie that he has lost all his money. The only thing of value he possesses is a golden lotus leaf which a coolie had given him on his deathbed in China years ago, when Carlton had saved him from drowning. This he gives Marie.

Dr. Redding, supposed friend of the Carltons, is in reality an agent in the employ of Foo, high priest of Taoi, who has from the start suspected that Carlton has in his possession the golden lotus petal which is one of the eight which have been stolen from the sacred Taoi temple. The petals are priceless in that on them is written the elixir of life.

Dr. Redding takes Marie to the social event of the season, a great ball, but slips out on her unawares and with Foo steals off to Carlton's home. They murder him and overpower the butler, and then make a search for the golden petal, which they do not find. The butler recovers and calls up Marie, who has been enjoying the pleasant society of Harlan Keeler, a globe trotter. Redding, who has in the interim returned to the ball, takes the stunned girl to her home, where she is overcome at the sight of her dead father.

Shortly after, penniless and discouraged, Marie calls on Professor McVay, a friend of her father's, who her father had told her was interested in golden lotus petals. In reality, McVay is already in possession of five of the precious petals, but he appears not greatly concerned when Marie shows him her petal, and in this manner he magnanimously offers her three thousand dollars for it, after she had rejected his offer of a thousand, and gives her in addition a position as his private secretary.

A week later Marie learns the bitter truth. She overhears an interview between McVay and Keeler, in which the professor commissions Keeler to search for the other two petals. He gives the globe trotter a map which leads to a cave in which lies his dead servant. McVay had stuffed the petal in the throat of the servant in a fight following upon its theft. The eighth petal is also somewhere in the Orient. The quest, however, is a serious one, since the Taoist priests and their agents also seek the sacred petals. McVay offers Keeler $50,000 for each petal.

Keeler starts immediately for the Orient, followed by Marie. Redding, accompanied by King Carson, also employed by Foo, books passage on the same steamer. Keeler and Marie start a friendship and Redding and Carson, puzzled as to whether they are working together, decide to get rid of Marie. They seize her unawares, take her to a stateroom, bind her and place on her clothing the Fing Tong bug, which will sink its fangs into a certain liquid which they smear on Marie's face. The bite of this bug leaves no mark and means certain death. Slowly the fearful insect creeps over the body of the helpless girl. What will prevent this horrible kiss of death?

CAST

Grant	Eddie Polo
Zan	Karl Silvera
Sonia	Ruth Royce
Beth	Thelma Percy

THE charge in the cave where Grant is bound does not explode, however, and after a Herculean effort, he extricates himself, seriously wounded. The engineers help him away after he tells them his story.

Zan and Sonia, now in possession of the dagger, set out for Numidia, where Zan is to ascend the throne as next in line to the dead Prince Narr, with Sonia as queen.

Grant, upon recovering in London, reads a newspaper account of the impending coronation in Numidia, wherein is described the traditional coronation rite. This is the removal of a tattoo of the royal dagger from the arm of the heir to the throne by means of the fluid secreted in the hilt of the dagger and is a test of the genuineness of the heir and the dagger. Grant gets a perfect replica of the dagger made, with a vial of water in the hilt and sets out for Los Angeles.

In the meantime surgeons in Los Angeles have tried by an operation to eradicate the written confession from Beth Latimer's head and have failed. An interne, for blackmailing purposes presumably, takes a keen interest in the case.

In Numidia, Grant runs into Brown, an American, an old friend of his, who is in the Numidian guards. With his aid, Grant gets into the ranks of the guards and during the ceremony exchanges the daggers, but is accused and unmasked by Sonia. A terrific fight ensues in the process of which Grant throws his coat, in which is concealed the real dagger, to Brown, who has been waiting on horseback outside, and he dashes off with it. Grant is overpowered and made captive and Zan tries to torture him into telling what he has done with the dagger. When he remains silent, Zan orders his guards, armed with spears, to make Grant talk. The spearmen start to torture Grant to death.

THE Dragon Fly, sometimes called the darning needle, is harmless to man. The female hovers over the water and deposits her eggs in masses on the bottom, where they remain for several months. The larvae of the dragon fly are destructive in that they consume from eight hundred to two thousand young fish a day. When fully developed, the larvae come forth from the water, dry themselves usually on the trunk of a tree, shed the protecting armor plate and change to aerial insects. The wings develop rapidly and are twenty times the size of those of the ordinary fly.

JEFFERSON TODD, a Southern gentleman who has lost his lands through confiscation by the Yankees, has taken up gambling as a livelihood. In the card-room of a river steamboat he wins the last possession of a fellow Southerner, Colonel Marcus Brereton—four race horses. That night Brereton commits suicide. The captain of the boat asks Todd to break the news to Col. Brereton's daughter, Barbara.

Todd arrives at the Brereton plantation only to find ahead of him Louis Castiga, who had been a passenger on the steamboat and who had been entrusted with Col. Brereton's farewell message to Barbar. There is bad blood between Todd and Castiga, due to the latter's ill-treatment of his wife, who is Todd's sister. Todd has promised his sister, however, not to harm Castiga. There is a duel between the two men. Castiga fires before the signal, and Todd has the right to kill him, but he explains to the seconds that he reserves his shot for another time.

Barbara Brereton is left penniless by her father's death. She decides to seek her fortune in a new country being opened up in the West. Todd, unknown to her, comes to the same decision. Castiga likewise is attracted by the prospect of a speedy fortune. Both Todd and Castiga learn that one claim has tremendously valuable oil deposits on it. There is a race to gain possession of it. Todd and Barbara meet, and Barbara is glad to avail herself of Todd's protection. Todd's four race horses carry them to the coveted site before all others, but they find that Castiga's ruffians have slipped into the country ahead of time and are there awaiting them. Todd defeats the band and then engages in a thrilling hand-to-hand fight with Castiga, who has arrived during the battle. Castiga is thrown into the river and drowned.

Todd and Barbara acknowledge their love for each other.

Frank Mayo in "Hitchin' Posts"

ADVANCE STORY

FRANK MAYO, who has appeared on the local screen in a dozen big photoplays, is to be seen at the .... Theatre on .... in his newest feature, "Hitchin' Posts," from the story by H. M. Shumate.

Jack Ford, who directed this star in some of his former successes, is responsible for the production of "Hitchin' Posts," which will bring out a new side of this splendid actor's versatility. Here he appears as a Southern gentleman of the 70's, his inherited lands confiscated by a traitorous brother-in-law, forced by circumstances to take up gambling for a livelihood.

One night on a Mississippi River steamboat, winning from a fellow Southerner his last possession, four race-horses, and thus causing the old man to commit suicide, he realizes the ignominy of his calling. He takes it upon himself not only to break the news of the colonel's death to his young daughter, but to try and make amends for her loss.

Thus begins a romance that is rich in the atmosphere of the old southland, with the adventures and intrigues of a half century ago, and culminating in a three-sided race for a fortune in the newly discovered oil fields of the West.

Frank Mayo, always polished, manly and convincing in his characterizations, is said to set a high mark in his portrayal of the role of Jefferson Todd. Beatrice Burnham plays the role of Barbara Brereton and Dagmar Godowsky appears as a beautiful Creole. J. Farrell McDonald as an itinerant fiddler, Joseph Harris as the villain, and many others contribute to the success of the production.

REGARDING THE STAR

FRANK MAYO is one of those rare things of the stage or screen—an actor. There are thousands of character men, leading men, heavies, comedians, western types and all other sorts and conditions of players who compose the population of the mimic world; but the number of real actors is very few. And Frank Mayo is one of the few.

Perhaps all the credit for temperament and ability is not due to Mr. Mayo. He could no more help becoming an actor than the son of J. Pierpont Morgan could avoid the heights of finance. Frank is the scion of one of the aristocratic families of the American stage. The grandson of Frank Mayo the First, the popular idol of the public a generation ago, famous for such productions as "Davy Crockett," "Pudin' Head Wilson," "Nordeck" and "The Streets of New York," and the son of Edwin T. Mayo and Francis Graham, the present Frank Graham was destined for great histrionic achievements as surely as night follows day.

That is why Frank Mayo is not a type, but an actor. He is just as easy and natural in the faultless garb of a Chesterfield as in the boots and mackinaw of a lumber jack; in the style of Beau Brummel as in the chaps and spurs of the plainsman.

The scenario department at Universal does not have to worry about the type of story to secure for Frank Mayo. All that is required is that the story is good. For Frank Mayo can play any sort of a part and play it faultlessly. As the lumberman in "The Brute Breaker," the cattleman in "Lasca," the masquerading vagabond in "The Peddler," the playwright in "The Girl in Number 29," the revenue officer in "The Red Lane"—all are the same to Frank Mayo as that of the southern gambler in "Hitchin' Posts," his latest Universal production, in which he is to be seen at the .... Theatre next ....

STARS WHOSE ORBITS CROSS IN THE STUDIO

"Hitchin' Posts," Which Stars Frank Mayo, Brings Together Several Actors Who Worked Together in Former Photoplays

THE film world, just like the real world, is a very small place, and actors therein are continually running across each other's path. There may be certain players in the same studio for years who will never appear in the same cast, and still others, free-lancing in all the studios in filmdom, who will bob up in the same company time and again.

In "Hitchin' Posts," for instance, the Universal production starring Frank Mayo, and directed by Jack Ford, which is now playing at the .... Theatre, Dagmar Godowsky appears in support of the popular star. Nearly a year ago Miss Godowsky made her first real screen hit in support of Mr. Mayo in "The Peddler of Lies," and now she is playing in the same company once more.

About six months ago J. Farrell McDonald and Joseph Harris played the roles of the convicts with Harry Carey in "Marked Men," both scoring hits only second to the star. Now they are both appearing in "Hitchin' Posts," the former playing a character comedy role—that of an itinerant fiddler—and the other playing the part of the villain.

When Harry Carey produced "Bullet Proof" some months ago, Beatrice Burnham scored a triumph in the role of Jackie Boone, the tomboy daughter of the bandit chief, while Duke Lee appeared as one of the Boone gang. In "Hitchin' Posts" Miss Burnham appears as an aristocratic young lady of the south, while Lee is seen as a Mississippi River steamboat man.

Some of the players may appear in the same cast very soon, or years may pass before their orbits cross in the world of the silent drama.

NOTES FOR "HITCHIN' POSTS"

Beatrice Burnham, the dainty actress of the screen who scored such a sensation in the role of the tomboy, Jackie Boone, with Harry Carey in "Bullet Proof," will be seen in the role of a Southern miss in support of Frank Mayo in "Hitchin' Posts" when that photodrama comes to the .... Theatre on ....

Within the last year Frank Mayo has been seen as a rancher in "Lasca," a mystery in "The Peddler of Lies," an artist in "Burnt Wings," a playwright in "The Girl in Number 29," and a customs officer in "The Red Lane." Now he is coming to the .... Theatre on .... in the role of a Southern adventurer in a story by H. M. Shumate, entitled "Hitchin' Posts."

Dagmar Godowsky, one of the most exotic figures on the American screen, who has won renown quite apart from the fact that she is the daughter of the world renowned musician-composer Leopold Godowsky, has the role of a beautiful Creole in support of Frank Mayo in his latest Universal photodrama, "Hitchin' Posts," coming to the .... Theatre next ....

Jack Ford, one of the most brilliant of the younger motion picture directors, was behind the megaphone in the production of "Hitchin' Posts," in which Frank Mayo will be seen at the .... Theatre next .... Ford produced "Marked Men," with Harry Carey and Frank Mayo's success, 'The Girl in Number 29."

Frank Mayo Makes Comparison Between Two Post-War Periods to Show the Timeliness of "Hitchin' Posts"

By
Adele D. Topper

"ALMOST an exact parallel to present post-war conditions may be seen in 'Hitchin' Posts' " said Frank Mayo, discussing the film in which he is shortly to appear, and which is the best suited to his talents of any in which he has been cast.

"The period of time around which 'Hitchin' Posts' was written was after a great war—the Civil War—and to-day we are likewise endeavoring to recover from a war—the great World War. Then, as now, there was a general devitalization evident everywhere and a feverish struggle to get 'set right' again."

"The Civil War brought with it a horde of 'newly rich' men who profiteered in food and clothing and land and accumulated vast wealth from the misery of others. And to-day nothing is more conspicuous in this country than the numerous millionaires who with their sudden wealth spend money in a drunken and uneven fashion, thus helping materially to raise the cost of living for everyone. In 1870, the period of 'Hitchin' Posts,' there were thousands of jobless men, thousands of men who had to adjust themselves all over again to civil life as they are doing to-day."

"The most striking resemblance, perhaps, between these two periods is the sudden discovery of lands rich in natural resources. Directly after the Civil War there was a great rush to the oil fields of the West, and many a Southern gentleman whose estates had been devastated and ruined by the ravages of war betook himself and his household goods to the 'wild country' in an effort to recoup his shattered fortunes. There is a very graphic 'Government Land Rush' in 'Hitchin' Posts.' And right now we are in the midst of one of the most raging 'oil fevers' that has ever existed, and while we do not leave our happy homes exactly and transplant ourselves to the oil country in any great numbers, we do lay hands on all the money possible and gamble in oil stocks."

To make comparisons of this nature, tinged with a bit of the military, comes quite naturally to Frank Mayo, for part of his school years were spent in a military academy. It was quite the fashion, a number of years ago, for theatrical families in America to send their sons to the Peekskill Military Academy in Peekskill, New York, and it was there that young Mayo spent three years of his boyhood, working and playing under the strict discipline of the school and imbibing much that was military in nature. Frank Mayo is always making comparisons, however, whether military or otherwise, and he is always interesting himself in economic and public problems. Small wonder this, when his heritage and training are taken into consideration. A scion of an illustrious theatrical family, and himself an actor at the tender age of five, he was early accustomed to being in the public eye, to meeting people prominent in public life and to traveling from one continent to the other. It was a natural process for him to become attentive to live topics of current interest, the power of observation developed surely and gradually and with maturity came the habit of making thought-provoking comparisons.

In view of the existent similarity between 1870 and 1920, "Hitchin' Posts" should be an interesting picture to the moviegoer. But it has other ingredients besides that to recommend it. It has a corking good story, full of romance, adventure and suspense. Its hero is one of the most picturesque characters ever embodied in a photoplay. The cast is admirable and includes, besides the handsome and virile star, the dainty Beatrice Burnham, exotic Dagmar Godowsky and such seasoned actors as J. Farrell McDonald, Mark Fenton and Joseph Harris. The settings have been very accurately made, being true to all the details of the period and all the actors wear the picturesque and charming clothes of that time.

"Hitchin' Posts" is from the pen of H. H. Shumate, and according to critics, it is one of the best starring vehicles that Frank Mayo has ever had. It was directed by Jack Ford, who was responsible for many of Carey's successes.

CAREY THINKS "SUNDOWN SLIM" WILL BE HIS GREATEST PICTURE

"SUNDOWN SLIM," the latest Harry Carey feature, is nearing completion at Universal City. Universal officials affirm that this is the best picture Harry Carey has ever done. Carey himself is of the same opinion, as it will be seen upon reading an excerpt of a letter recently written by Carey to his mother while the company was on location in the Mojave desert. Carey said:

"I have just finished the best scene I ever played, in the best picture that was ever made. I think this would sound 'ego' to anyone but you, but I know you understand. This will be a short letter, as I am hot and tired. Mr. H. H. Knibbs, the author of 'Sundown Slim,' is out here with us and enjoying every moment. He 'belongs.'"

"Sundown Slim" is another tramp picture and is said to give Carey even better opportunities than he enjoyed in the role of "Overland Red," which he played several months ago and which was hailed as his greatest piece of work. "Sundown Slim" also is acceded by Knibbs, its author, a screen writer of great reputation, to be the best screen story ever turned out by him. He was so interested in the picturization of his story that he accompanied Carey on location during the filming of the picture, even during the several weeks in which the company camped out on the Great Mojave Desert.

"Sundown Slim" is being directed by Val Paul, well-known as a craftsman in the construction of pictures by the virile West. Supporting Carey are Charles Le Moyne, Geo. Harris, Ted Brooks and many others. Among them is Mignonne, a young actress "found" by Carey, and whose real identity is being kept secret until the first presentation of the picture.

HAGUE AND BENJAMIN VISIT THE HOME OFFICE

CLAIRE HAGUE, manager of Universal's Toronto exchange, visited New York last week to complete arrangements for the Canadian exploitation of Universal's three latest Jewel productions, "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," "The Breath of the Gods" and "Under Crimson Skies."

Many Canadian exhibitors already are demanding early bookings for these pictures, he said. Universal's intention of exploiting the three together throughout the Dominion has aroused unusual interest in every province, he says.

Ok. Benjamin is also in New York this week and brought a tale which we will unfold in detail to you next week in this magazine. Watch for it.

MILLIONAIRE TITLE WRITER AT WORK ON UNIVERSAL FILM

TECHNICAL data on the Johannesburgh gold mines, lost in the train wreck in which William Stowell and Dr. J. F. Armstrong of the Universal African expedition lost their lives, is being replaced by Gus S. Holmes, Jr., known as "the millionaire metallurgist" in mining circles. Mr. Holmes is now in Los Angeles writing the sub-titles for films detailing the operations in the Rand mining district. He is probably the only millionaire sub-title writer in the film game.

Mr. Holmes has lately been acting as consulting engineer in Prescott, Arizona, for Chicago mining interests. Previously he operated simultaneously three mines at Chloride. He owns 1,000 acres of gold and silver mining property in Mexico, now unworkable because of the depredation of roaming bandit bands. He has owned and operated in fourteen years most of the larger Arizona mines, including the Keystone, the Midnight and the Hackberry. The latter is now owned by his father, Gus Holmes, Sr., formerly the proprietor of the Angelus Hotel in Los Angeles, and now operating the Semloh Hotel in Salt Lake City.

The motion picture negatives of the mills, dumps, shaft-heads, and other details of the Johannesburg mines miraculously escaped destruction in the wreck in which Stowell was killed, as did the thousands of feet of scenic African subjects that had already been filmed. The reference matter for the descriptive titles was kept in notebooks by Stowell and Dr. Armstrong and was lost in the wreck. Therefore Universal has secured to supply the missing data not only the best authority on the subject, but has obtained the services of the only "millionaire sub-title writer" in America.

"Kansas City, a nice little town," says Chief Umbo of the Kia Kias

"WE didn't know just how our show as going to take in the corn-belt on account of Kansas' big crop this year," said Chief Umbo, head of the head-hunters who were lately brought to this country by Edward Laemmle and William Alder (in a can) "but—take it from me—those people turned out to see us in shoals. We cram-jammed the DORIC in little old K.C. and they did more business than ever before. The town was crazy about us, just as they were in New York, Chicago, Boston and other places. Seems like the minute they get a sight of me on those big 20 by 68 oil paintings you can't stop 'em from piling in. Of course, it isn't for me—a poor ignorant South Seas cannibal—to tell a showman what to do but if he'll play up those oil painting lobby displays he'll net more real hard cash on my show than he will on a dozen features that cost him three times as much."

"Civilized women are poor judges of dress," is Madam Umbo's opinion

"WHILE we were playing Boston, New York and Chcago," says Madame Umbo, reigning belle of New Guinea, "I could not help but notice the style of dress affected by the ladies of these cities. Why they should wish to cover up their bodies I'm sure I can't understand. My own, as you see, I keep almost entirely nude, as we are very strong on dress conservation in New Guinea, a trait which, I may say, our husbands strongly encourage. Of course, we go in for ornament but I have yet to see anywhere in the North anything so chic as the decorations on my own fair form. These beautiful flower-like creases are made by digging the flesh open with a clam shell and then filling in the sore place with salt and ashes and dirt and anything else that will make a good big strong welt that will stick out and be beautiful. Examine me closely in all my close-ups and you'll agree that dear old Paris has nothing on me."

"I feel very sorry for American children," says little Gum-Gum

"THEY kept Papa and Mama and me so busy in Philadelphia," said little Gum-Gum, "that I had no time to play, like the American children who came every day to see us. But I don't know what I should have played with as I had to leave all my beloved skulls at home. I simply adore playing with skulls, especially those of Papa's enemies and Mama knows them all by heart and teaches me every day about them. That's why I feel so sorry for the little American children like myself. What do they do for excitement? How can they learn how to treat their enemies if they don't play with skulls? As for myself, I can sit all day long in the sand under a palm tree without a stitch on and move my pretty white skulls around and play I've killed 'em all, and if I lose one all I have to do is to tell Papa and he goes right out and kills a man and gives me a nice new one."

“Catarrhal troubles almost unknown in our jungle” says Bongo, the Man-eater

““IN San Francisco, while playing at the FROLIC, where we did a bigger Sunday business than any picture ever did before, many people” says Bongo, the Man-eater,” wondered why I wear those very large white bones in my nose. I want to say that the bones and the holes are about as large in diameter as a four-bit piece—or fifty cents in New York money—and effectually diminish the discomforts of catarrh. The bones, of course, are to make me look ferocious but you'll admit that they're also very fetching and when I put on my big long Saturday night bones there isn't a cutie in the jungle but will fall for me. Did you read about me in the Philadelphia Inquirer? It said “So realistically are these ferocious beings shown that the picture may be put down as an achievement in cinema art.”

Says Manager S. H. Goldberg

"THERE are so many ordinary productions made nowadays and called super-specials that we believe it proper to give credit to those concerns which really make a picture that is special in every way—including the box office. This we believe 'THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL' to be. It most assuredly pleased our patrons and did what's necessary to every showman—produced a very handsome profit for us on the week's business.

"Keep on making pictures like 'THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL' and we feel sure that all exhibitors, like ourselves, will keep on exhibiting your pictures."

CARL LAEMMLE presents

Von Stroheim's UNIVERSAL JEWEL

MASTERPIECE

"THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY"

NOW PLAYING

HE'S DONE IT AGAIN!

The New York AMERICAN says

"Unusual, intelligently handled, sumptuously staged, it marks another step forward in cinema performance. Mr. Von Stroheim has given us two remarkable pictures in this one and "Blind Husbands." You will find a visit to the Capitol well worth your time."

The New York EVENING SUN says

"Erich Von Stroheim has made a high-class production for Universal in 'The Devil's Passkey.' He has proved that a picture can have dramatic elements of the legitimate drama and yet be an effective picture as well. The picture is marked by decided realism. It's well worth seeing."

The New York TIMES says

"Erich Von Stroheim, whose 'Blind Husbands' was one of the outstanding cinema works of last year, has done another photoplay of exceptional quality. His story is unfolded forcefully and his characters are definite and comprehensible individuals. It is a Work in moving pictures."

The New York EVENING TELEGRAM says

"Paris of the boulevards, the theatre and the race-track is the setting of 'The Devil Passkey.' Beautiful women of the modiste parlors, well-groomed Parisians, uniformed military attaches, the opening of the racing season at Longchamps, all remind that it is a picture of high society."

The New York GLOBE says

"The picture presents a departure in the field of lighting, has several ingenious tricks of plot and is exceptionally well acted. The scene is Paris, and the film was obviously taken there. (That's where Von Stroheim fooled the Globe. The picture was made at Universal City—Editor.)

The New York TELEGRAPH says

'An exceptional production. Erich Von Stroheim has dressed his play and his players in true Parisian style. He has achieved effects seen in few pictures, simply by his knowledge of how such folk act and how they dress and how they live."

Priscilla Dean in Role of Teacher

VERSATILE STAR AND HER DIRECTOR TAKE EDUCATION OF A MEMBER OF THE CAST OF "OUTSIDE THE LAW" INTO THEIR OWN HANDS.

Stanley Goethals, Priscilla Dean and Tod Browning.

IF Stanley Goethals does not develop into one of the best actors on the screen it will not be for lack of excellent training. And as Stanley is but three years old, his education is not being delayed.

When Tod Browning wrote "Outside the Law" for Priscilla Dean he needed a means whereby two divergent minds could be brought together by a comman interest, and decided to make use of a child's influence to gain the desired dramatic effect. While he wrote the part of the child his mind unconsciously strayed to the person of Stanley, a youngster of three years, who lived in the same block with the author-director, and who came to visit the Browning collies once in a while. Stanley is a 100 per cent. boy—manly, playful mischievous and born with innate gallantry. When he finished the story Browning wanted Stanley for the part more than ever. But there was the difficult task of broaching the subject to Mrs. Goethals, the youngster's mother.

Mr. and Mrs. Browning at first suggested the matter to Mrs. Goethals in the way of a joke; then the idea took root and developed. Finally Miss Dean and her mother called on the youngster, and the result was that Mrs. Goethals decided to let Stanley try the part.

Both Tod Browning, the director, and Miss Dean, the star, are giving young Stanley their personal care and attention. He is being given patient instruction in every scene, and the picture above shows both Miss Dean and Director Browning assisting Stanley in "putting it over." Stanley, however, takes to it like a fish to water, and Tod Browning claims that the scenes with the child will be a revelation in the matter of natural and unconscious acting and will be one of the hits of "Outside the Law."

Work on "Outside the Law" is progressing rapidly now at Universal City. This is the first picture that Priscilla Dean has done since "The Virgin of Stamboul," and naturally it is being awaited with eager anticipation. It is a story dealing with the mysterious doings of the underworld and of San Francisco's inscrutable Chinatown. Tod Browning is sparing no expense and effort in making its details and atmosphere absolutely correct. In fact, the scenario was reviewed and O. K.'d by two men who probably know more about the subject matter than any other individuals in America; men who have dealt with criminals from Vermont to Vladivostock, and who know every corner and cranny of that Oriental labyrinth in the heart of San Francisco. These men are William J. Burns, head of the international detective agency which bears his name, and George K. Home, the terror of evil-doers who heads the los Angeles police department. And as far as the dress and manners of the Chinese characters of the picture are concerned, Browning has had the able advice and assistance in these details of Thomas Harrington Gubbins, who spent his early years in old China, grew to adolescence in the vicinity of the Chinese district in San Francisco and has lately been assistant and interpreter to Henry McRae, when he took the Marie Walcamp Company to the Orient to film "The Dragon's Net."

Supporting Miss Dean in this new crook drama, in addition to little Stanley Goethals, will be Wheeler Oakman, Lon Chaney, Ralph Lewis, E. A. Warren and others. All of these are well-known figures in the film world, with successes a-plenty to their credit.

"Outside the Law" will be a "Jewel."

"Blind Husbands" Reaches England

Censor gives this Erich Von Stroheim classic an unusual compliment in assuming that it was made in the Alps.

"BLIND HUSBANDS," the first big von Stroheim picture, has been royally received in Great Britain, word has reached the Universal office from George Kann, the Universal export manager, now in Europe. Only one objection was raised to the feature. Mr. Hussey, one of the leading censors of the English film world, worried over the picture because he thought the British public might be cool towards a photoplay they supposed to have been taken in Austria, so recently an enemy country. The censor was astounded beyond measure when he was assured that every scene in the big Alpine picture had been filmed in California, and his objections vanished in a broad smile.

The initial showing in England was held in the Alhambra, one of the largest theatres in London. A representative audience was present and loudly acclaimed the feature. British critics were unanimous in praising the film. "In my view," said one, "it shows an advance in method over "The Miracle Man," although its theme is less ambitious. Certainly there has been no more remarkable example of the importance of continuity and timing; not a thought of the characters is missed, and I cannot recall an instance of faulty pose. The principle of developing a theme logically according to its dramatic value and without any regard to film length is obviously sound. Stroheim's method is remarkably successful."

Another voiced his opinion that Stroheim's originality has achieved something remarkably like a masterpiece. "'Blind Husbands' grips," he said. "It creates the illusion of reality as do very few photoplays, save the best of Griffith's; it's individual scenes are powerful, 'suspense' value is very marked."

BILLY LANE, who plies his trade of lying more out of habit than desire, is conceded the championship over all fabricators in eastern Wyoming. Jane Branch, who holds undisputed sway in Billy's desires for a co-partner through life, loves Billy far more than she would let him know, which only tends to increase Billy's desire to make her his wife. Billy is at the height of his glory one morning as he is relating to Jane a supposedly brave deed, when she upbraids him for his perpetual lying and asks him why he did not keep his engagement with her the night previous. Billy, with an eye for peace, tells her of his experiences with an old lady who made her living by washing other people's clothes and how he happened along and assisted her on the night he was supposed to call on Jane. When he finished washing the clothes it was too late to call on Jane, so he went home. Just as Billy finishes narrating his latest lie, he is confronted by the small brother of the girl on whom Billy had called the night he was supposed to have played gallant for the old lady. The boy had been sent by his sister to deliver to Billy the gloves he left at the house. This latest deceit on Billy's part "queers" him with Jane, and she leaves him in a huff.

Things would have worked themselves out more smoothly had not the Rev. J. Arthur Middlehorn arrived on one of his circuit rides to visit the various ranches in the district. Jane devotes all of her attention to the Reverend, much to the discomfort of Billy, who is left in the cold. Billy, suddenly hitting upon an idea, makes love to Ola, the cook, while Jane is in the next room dressing for a picnic. She overhears his pleadings and enters the kitchen as Ola, mistaking Billy's intentions, throws her arms around him.

Rev. Middlehorn and Jane, having made preparations for a little outing of their own, the Parson asks Billy where he can find a good spot for a picnic. Billy, planning to have some fun, directs him far out into the desert, where he finally loses his way. When Jane misses the Parson she questions Billy, who tells her of his prank. She immediately mounts her horse to locate the Reverend. Curly O'Brien, who was madly in love with Jane, but whose love was not reciprocated, sees Jane leave and follows her. Jane locates Rev. Middlehorn, when she is confronted by Curly, who forces his attentions on her, which she resents. They engage in a struggle, but the Parson is unable to assist Jane. Billy, discovering the girl's absence, goes in search of her. He arrives in time to see the girl and Curly struggling, gives Curly an awful thrashing, and Jane, who can no longer disguise her true feelings for Billy, forgives him for his past faults as they embrace.

Grant, with hands tied, by a superhuman effort of strength, pushes against the wall; a weak spot gives way and he flees through a hole, hotly pursued. He is overtaken and a fight ensues, in which he is aided by Brown, and they flee, Grant finding refuge in a tower and Brown riding out to the desert to obtain the help of an outlaw band. When the tower is attacked, Grant escapes by means of a ladder, but Brown, who has returned with the outlaw band, is shot from his horse and killed. Grant gets away to the desert in possession of the dagger.

Meanwhile in Los Angeles, Beth is making an inventory of a patient's belongings when the interne comes in and makes advances to her, which she repulses. However, she is compelled to give him the patient's money when he threatens her with disclosure to the police, and she has to replace this with her own in order to avoid trouble with the hospital authorities.

While this is going on Grant, far out on the desert, becomes a victim of thirst, hunger and exhaustion. Zan and Sonia, in the Numidian capital, prepare again to trail the dagger, without which Zan cannot gain the throne. As they set out Grant, now horseless, collapses in the blistering sand.

SOME people think that a news scoop is solely the result of enterprise. This is only partly true. Scoops are not a matter of chance. They are the result of organization—the result of co-ordinating hundreds of elements, only one of which is Enterprise.

The organization behind International News is perfected to the point where a certain number of scoops a year are assured even before the year begins. This is merely the working out of the Law of Averages—the identical law upon which insurance companies figure their rates. Just as insurance companies know before the year begins how many persons are apt to collect insurance that year, so does International News know beforehand that the service is going to score a certain number of "beats."

Carol II. of Rumania. "Prince of Romance," Arrives in America. San Francisco, Cal.

Sub-titles.—The Prince, who gave up his right to a throne, to marry a poor girl. Exiled from his bride, the Prince yearns for "sympathy"—and gets it.

Sub-titles.—A few unexpected delegates arrive. And more are due. One, two, three and four weeks old. Their morning dip. Veteran homers. "I sent a letter to my love—" In the Spring, (Summer, Fall and Winter) the young dove's fancy . Good-bye.

England's King Races His Own Yacht, Brittania, to Victory in Big Regatta.—Cowes, England.

Sub-Titles.—King George in oilskins—and his crew. First is the mainsail of the Brittania. View of the race won by the King's cutter by about two minutes. Regatta glimpses from a super-marine flying boat.

First Pictures of the Battle for Kiev in the Great Russian-Polish War.

Sub-Titles.—The Nikolai Bridge destined for destruction. After the Polish occupation—thousands at the market place clamor in vain for food. And money meaning nothing, articles of all descriptions are offered as currency. Even baby's clothes. A month after the Polish victory, Soviet artillery begins shelling the outskirts of the city. Refugees begin swarming out of the besieged city with American Red Cross train helping them to safety. Polish infantry is rushed to the front lines. But Kiev is doomed—the Soviet artillery starts a dozen great fires. The fires creep nearer to the main city. And the Poles themselves blow up the city's last defence—the great Nikolai bridge. With Kiev again in Soviet hands, the Red Cross cares for orphans behind the Polish lines.

THE popular notion that mountains are the result of volcanic upheavals is erroneous. They are caused by glaciers, which, when they slowly plow the earth's surface, push up before them great masses of earth, rock and mineral. There are volcanic mountains, however, which are built up from the constant deposit of lava and dust from the crater. But volcanic formations on a mountain are not always an evidence that the mountain itself is a volcano. In the deserted silver mining town of Calico, the mountain is no longer active but man has not taken up his habitat there again.

The Rev. Albert Warriner, a minister of Terre Haute, Indiana, has some antidotes for the High Cost of Living. He makes all the clothes for himself and his family and still finds time to save souls in addition to saving money.

Frederick Keating of the Society of American Magicians shows once again how easy it is to fool the "sucker" with cards.

Apple flapjacks are a delicious dish, not too expensive, and in this issue of the magazine there is an interesting exposition on how to make them.

The magazine closes with a collection of jokes entitled "laughographs."

Carl Laemmle presents Elmo Lincoln in

"Under Crimson Skies"

IN the CHICAGO EVENING AMERICAN, Rob Reel, the well-known critic, says; "There is no dull moment in it. The story is interesting to lovers of romance with more than a tinge of thrill and danger in particular. But the picture is remarkable chiefly for its spectacular settings; a terrific storm at night, and on the sea a revolutionary battle, marine views like wonderful paintings. Lincoln, himself, has a role that exactly fits his ability as a modern Hercules."

IN EXHIBITORS HERALD we read: "The picture never drags and the ending isn't obvious. The story is strong without being brutal. 'Under Crimson Skies' is a picture for the theatres whose patrons like action, thrill and adventure. Elmo Lincoln is the hero and has the role of an iron-fisted captain of a sailing vessel. 'Under Crimson Skies' can be rated as a very good production. Elmo Lincoln's name should draw and the title of the story is attractive.

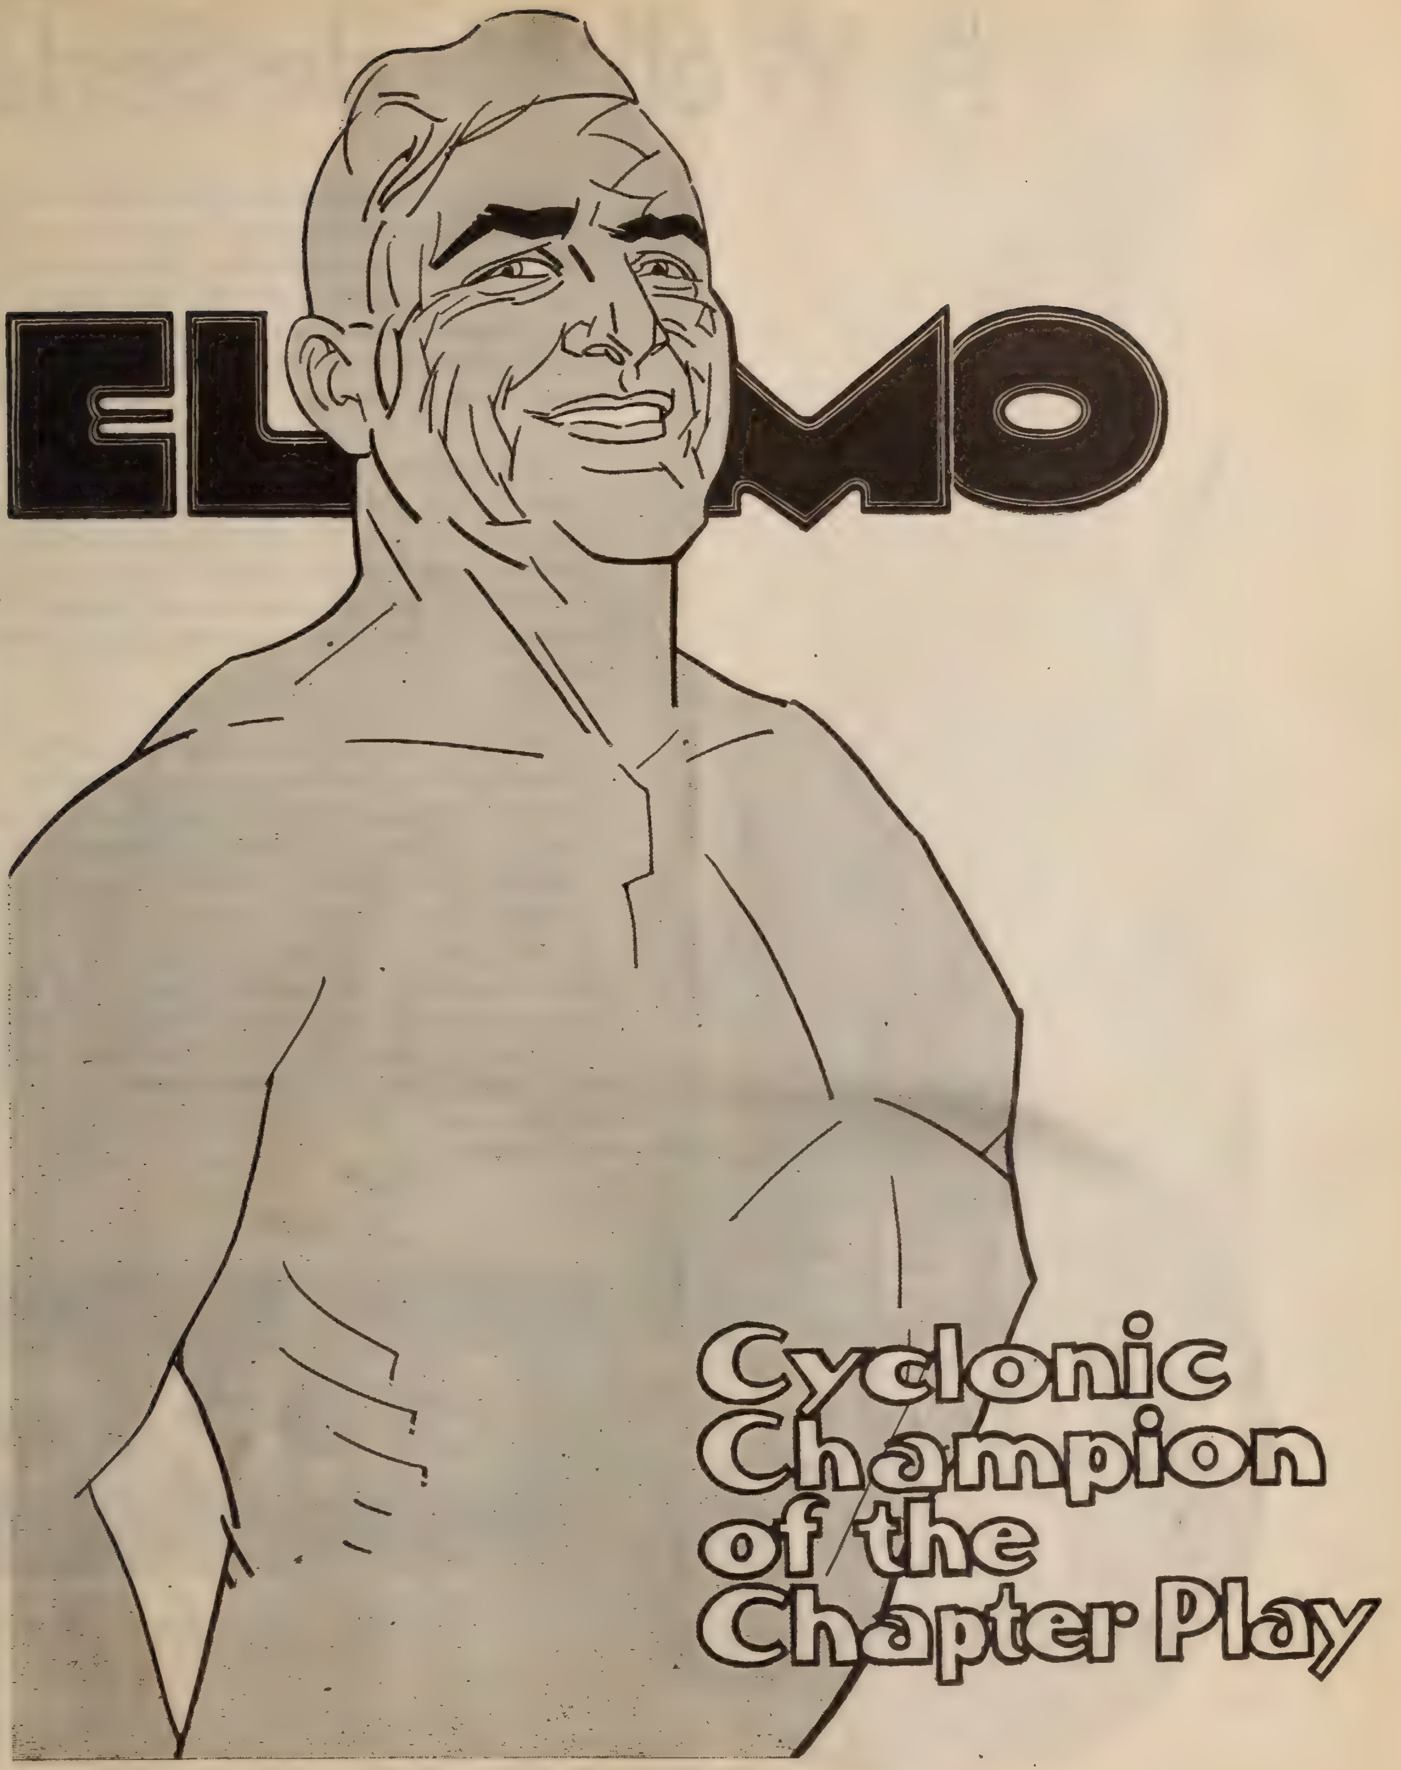
Universal's New Wonder Serial



ELMO
Cyclonic Champion of the Chapter Play

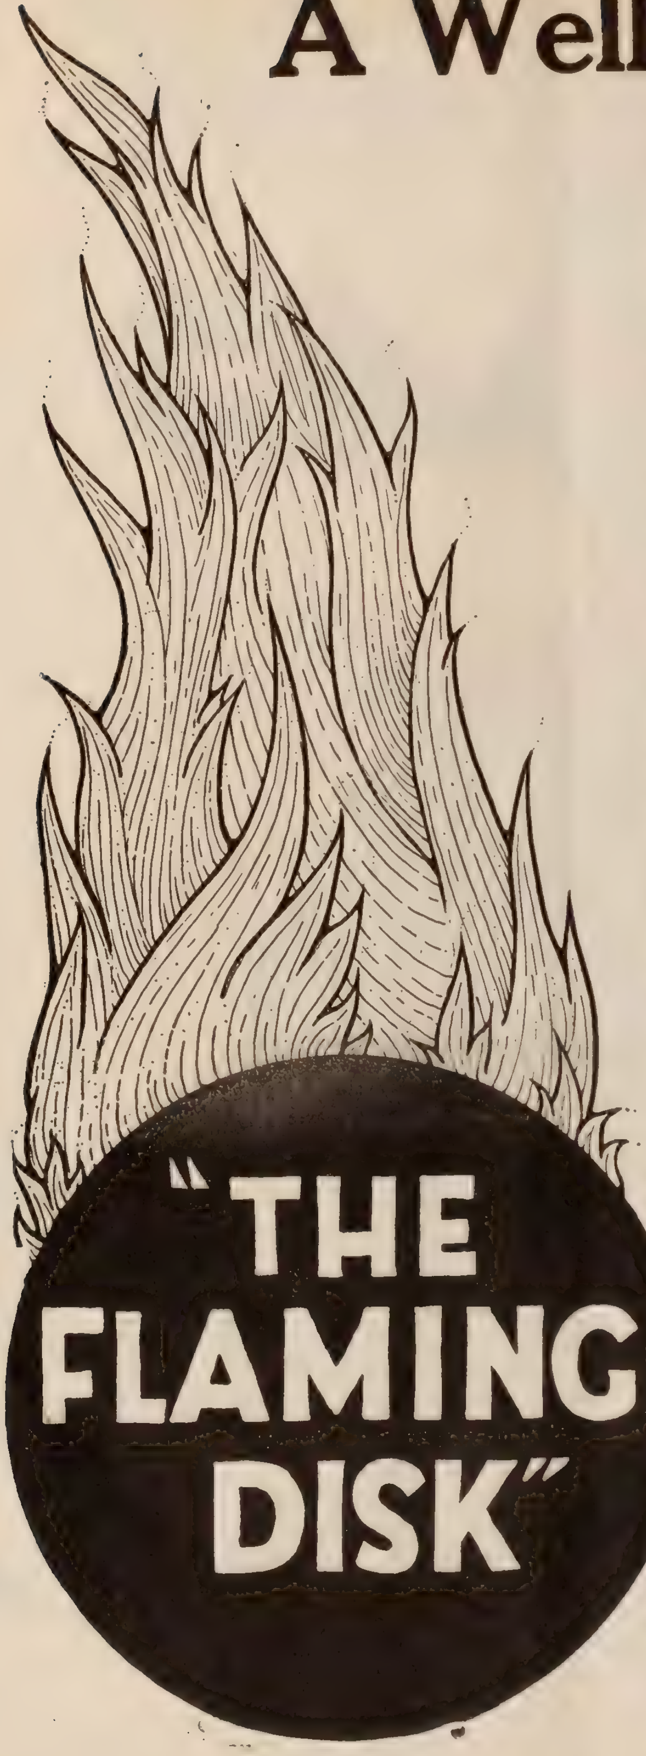
A Well-Made Seria

THE element of chance does not enter into th serial proposition with Universal, for the history of the business shows that a well-mad serial always makes money for the exhibitor. Th best proof of this is the simple fact that increasing millions of fans are spending their money t see Universal serials.

And with the increasing favor of serials Universal is increasing its serial output every yea We could not afford to do this unless serials wer making more and more money for more and mor exhibitors. We are doing it only because of th healthy, growing demand for quality chapte plays.

Isn't it reasonable for us to believe that thi growing demand reaches into your theatre? W think so—and we believe it equally sound business on our part to produce the kind of serial that make that demand stronger every day.

Think this over—and remember that good serials—Universal serials—go further than merely make a profit on themselves. They build up patronage by attracting to your house new busines and making steady customers of those attracte by the serial.



ELMO

UNIVERSAL'S LATES

Always Makes Money

THE success of a serial depends on its power to attract men and women in every walk of life, as well as children. And years of experience in serial-making have taught Universal that, in addition to a popular star, a compelling story and intelligent direction, many other elements must be present in the highest degree.

One of the chief virtues of a serial is Suspense—the factor that makes people come back time and time again "to see what happens." You've felt the pull of some sort of suspended interest yourself—and have spent money to gratify the desire that was aroused.

In good serials—Universal serials—Suspense is sustained largely through MYSTERY, ACTION and THRILLS. Those are the prime requisites, but there are many other swift changes of scene, from the palaces of the wealthy to the slums of the poor deep human interest—"Heart throbs" and love interest, dramatic contrasts and conflicts—all logically constructed and powerfully presented. When you get a Universal serial you get a serial with everything in it that experience has shown must be in a successful chapter play.

THIS is the serial that's going to thrill and mystify millions—the chapter play that's going to prove one of the biggest money-getters in serial history. We know that's a large contract to fill, but we also know what serial fans want—and we know that they get it in "The Flaming Disk," because into this serial have been put only known box-office values.

And because we know this we are just as enthusiastic over Elmo Lincoln's latest smasher as you and your fans are going to be. You can understand our enthusiasm when you realize that "The Flaming Disk" is even better than "Elmo, the Fearless."

Better, because Elmo Lincoln has increased his following enormously through his last serial, and because he outdoes anything he has even done before—while the support, headed by Louise Lorraine, is such as makes for perfection in a serial cast.

IN "The Flaming Disk," are THRILLS by the score—real thrills that get right under your shirt; there's MYSTERY—deep, legitimate mystery that is a gripping part of a powerful story; there's ACTION—that pounds its way through the tale like a pneumatic hammer; there's SUSPENSE—that reaches an apex at the end of each episode and continues to climb in the next. In short, there is every element that is known to appeal besides some new stuff that is going to set fans crazy.

Production values also are of a higher standard than ever before set in a serial—photography, lightings, continuity—every detail of production has received intelligent and compelling treatment under the direction of Robert F. Hill, the man who directed "The Great Radium Mystery." That fact in itself should be sufficient indication of Mr. Hill's ability to produce your kind of a serial, but in this he sets a new mark—he has injected into "The Flaming Disk" qualities such as to make it a serial of startling surprises.

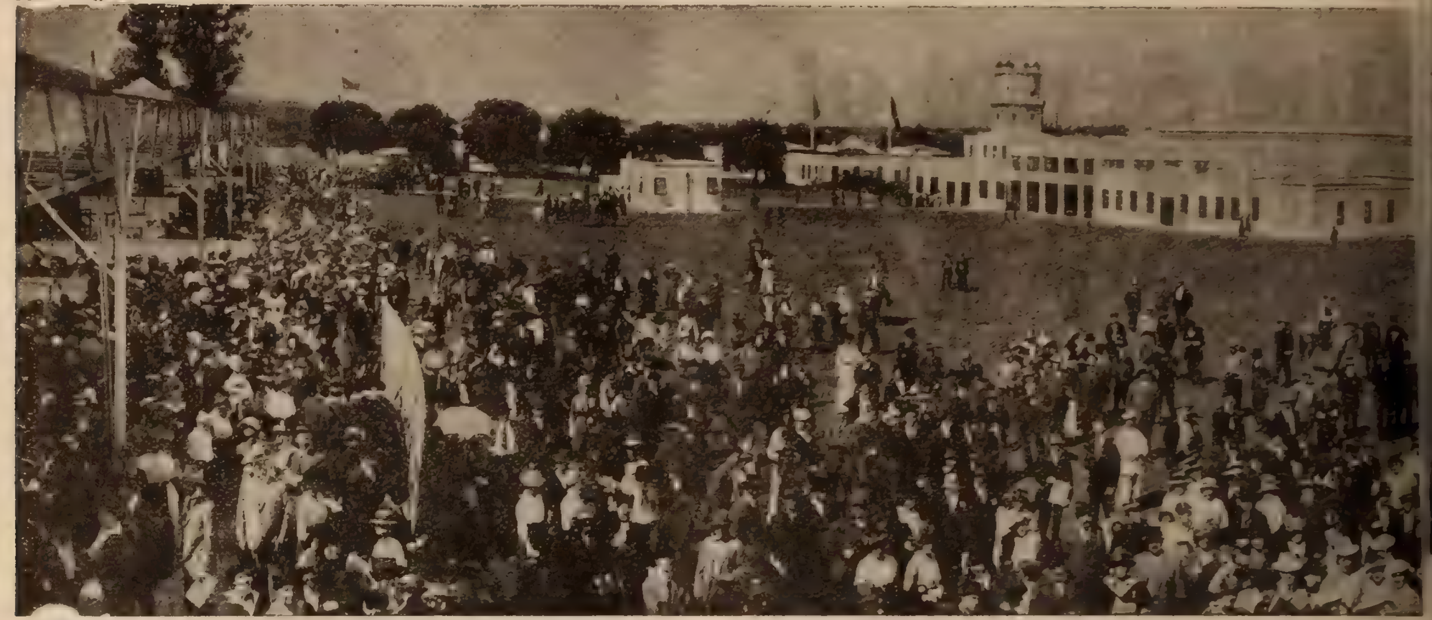
UNIVERSAL CITY --- THE



HERE you see at a glance why Universal knows how to make good serials—you see part of Universal City with its serial-making population—a population that is growing every day, just as Universal's serial-making facilities grow every day as the demand for more and better serials expands.

Universal stops at nothing to meet a serial need. Here at the Capital of the Serial World can be found everything that is a part of serial-making—everything from a likeness of the Queen of Sheba to manufactured weather that can be moved anywhere; everything from a hen with a brood of chicks to a gun that shoots around corners.

But even vast as is the acreage shown in the bird's-eye view at the top of the page, the picture does not give a complete idea of the extent of activity sometimes reached during the filming of serials. Often the big space shown in the middle foreground is completely covered with massive and minature sets—towns, villages, palaces, hovels, streets, and the like.

HOME OF SERIAL FACILITIES

At the left you see just the edge of the big stages. These permanent stages, which are equipped with every modern lighting device, themselves cover several acres.

In the background you see the buildings that are the hub around which Universal's activities revolve. In the Executive Building, where serial problems are solved, directors, leading players and writers meet and confer before and during the filming of a serial. In the group of buildings also are the Post-office, where serial stars get their letters from admiring fans, and the cafeteria, where the stars often enjoy their letters during luncheon hour.

In addition there is the hospital, a scarcely popular but sometimes necessary part of serial making. Here every possible attention and care is given a serial player who meets with a mishap in furnishing a thrill. Then there are the laboratories, armory, store-room, scene-docks—in short, every facility that helps make Universal serials the best serials in the world is to be found at Universal City.

THERE is nothing that so completely captures the human mind as Mystery. And when Mystery is presented in entertainment its pulling power is multiplied. In "The Flaming Disk" you have mystery which increases as the story unfolds—mystery that baffles—mystery that becomes more deep, more powerful, more entertaining as the plot sweeps on. One moment you see Elmo Lincoln slinking on the screen as Jim Gray, dastardly cat's-paw for a master criminal who has him under hypnotic control; the next moment you see him crashing his way through as Jim's twin brother, Elmo Gray, Secret Service agent and champion of right. Marvels of double-exposure have resulted in striking scenes showing Elmo as both men—scenes that almost make you refuse to believe that both characters are played by the same man. ..And besides the mystery surrounding the characters played by Elmo, the story itself carries a spell. It's the kind of a story that entangles your interest with its mystic and magnetic threads. And don't forget that

"ELMO was fighting at bay. On all sides of him the burly thugs were closing in, their wicked eyes gleaming and their greedy faces gloating over the belief that they had him cornered at last. Swirling his giant arm in a murderous arc, Elmo crashed the jaw of the first, knocking him cold. The second rushed in only to meet a steely fist and a sickening shove to the floor. The biggest of the gang jumped at Elmo, his corded fingers clutching at Elmo's throat. With a mighty heave Elmo freed himself from the clutching hands, lifted his heavy assailant over his head, and flung the struggling form on top of the two he had downed—"

ACTION is to a serial what water is to cement—the absolutely necessary element to make it worth anything at all. Universal knows that—has known it ever since the first serial was made, and into each new serial Universal has been cramming more and more action. You'll find that "The Flaming Disk"—the newest wonder serial—has been given more action to the square inch than could be found in a fallen tree filled with angry ants on roller skates. Moreover, the action is of the vivid, flashing sort that streaks through the story with a sweep that strikes the eye and sticks to the memory. And the fact that the fans can't forget what they saw is why they'll keep coming and coming to see this marvelous chapter play.

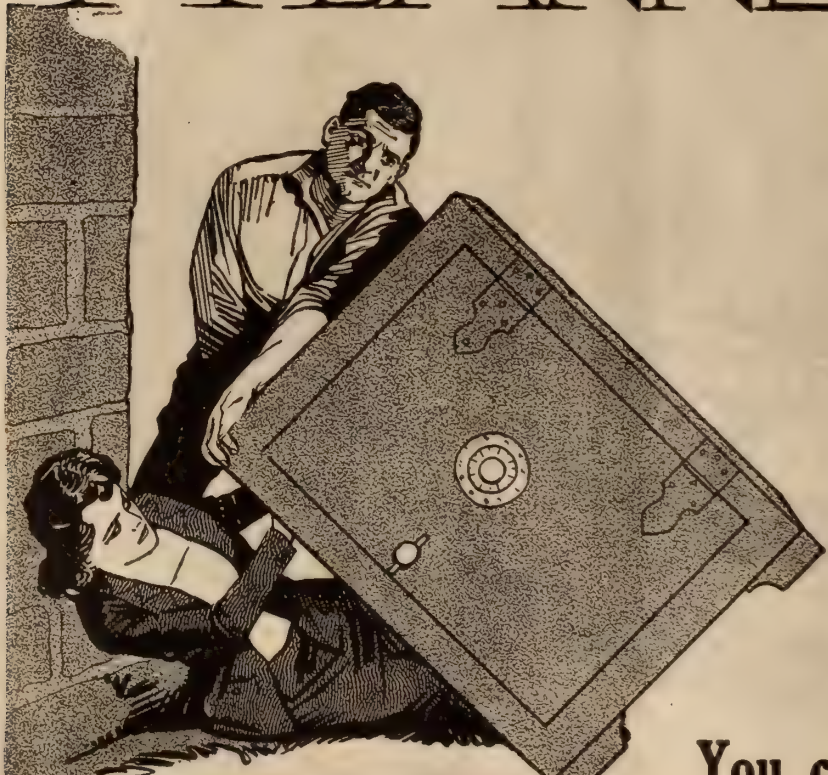
A BANNER WITH



TO many a new exhibitor, we suppose, the design of a Serial Banner seems relatively unimportant—but not so with the experienced showman. The man of experience knows that some Banners pull and some don't. He knows that his banner must be simple but strong—strong in design and strong in color. And in the design must be three things. These three things are—the Title of the serial—the Name of the star—and a Picture which plays up the particular talents or drawing powers of that star. If we can work in something additional which adds to the pull of the Title, so much the better. Examine this Banner and note how completely these requirements have been carried out.

The Title stands out—you can read it blocks away—the Name is equally strong—and you know the pulling power of Elmo Lincoln's name—the picture personifies precisely those qualities that have made this Star one of the greatest attractions that the serial screen has ever known. To add to that, the Disk itself has been given a certain amount of mystery to add to the drawing power of the title. The COLORS are blue and yellow—known through years of experiment to be the best known of all advertising color combinations.

"Don't be a Doubting Thomas" says Carl Laemmle

President

Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

"DON'T be a Doubting Thomas—take my word that what Universal serials are doing for thousands of other exhibitors they will do for you," says Mr. Laemmle.

"I am in this business to make money, just as you are in this business to make money. And I can't make money unless you make money. I know that serials make money for exhibitors—that's why Universal is making more and more serials all the time.

"You are making a big mistake if you don't run serials. You are passing up the chance to assure yourself big house regularly—you are cheating yourself of a lot of new business. That's been proved time and time again.

"Some exhibitors persist in believing that serials entertain only children. That is not true. But even if serials were liked only by children, they would make money for the exhibitor—for it is the children who bring the grownups with them, thereby often making firm fans of grownups who were not in the habit of going to your house before.

"Consider this—are the big national magazines bought only by children? If not, why is it that they run continued stories? Simply because everybody likes them—everybody buys the next week's copy just the same as everybody—man, woman and child—is anxious to see the newest episode of a serial.

"And to the man who has never run a serial I say that he could not find a better serial to start a profitable serial career than 'The Flaming Disk.' It's good enough to make a faithful follower out of any Doubting Thomas—it's a serial that's going to make money for every exhibitor who books it—and no serial can be asked to do more than that."

"It Pays to be Healthy" says Gladys Walton

Gladys illustrates the heading of this article and at the same time an important scene in "Pink Tights," with Jack Perrin.

Two close-up views of Gladys Walton, who is featured with Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians in "The Secret Gift."

IT seems that every film actress who rises to the position of leading lady with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the Universal comedy stars, is sure to find it a stepping-stone to stellar prominence. Many of today's brightest feminine stars of the silver sheet played their first leading roles in a Lyons and Moran comedy. Take, for instance, Priscilla Dean, Edith Roberts, Louise Glaum, Juanita Hansen, Anne Cornwall, Billy Rhodes, Rosemary Theby and many others.

All of which is apropos of the fact that Gladys Walton, the golden-haired beauty who recently came to Universal City to play a leading role in a Lyons and Moran comedy feature, "La La Lucille," has just signed a contract with that producing company, by which she may eventually arrive at stardom. Since playing her part with Eddie and Lee, and convincing the directors that she possessed stellar timber, she played the leading feminine role in "The Secret Gift" and was co-featured with Jack Perrin in "Pink Tights," both recent productions, the first of which is just about to be released.

Miss Walton is a Boston girl, but she has traveled ever since she was seven years old. She was educated in the schools of St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Seattle and Portland, and came to Los Angeles to visit relatives about a year ago. Her first screen work was in comedies.

Miss Walton is only seventeen, but she has a clear idea of values. At that it frequently happens that out the mouths of babes one get the truth. Many prominent stars have given their various opinions as to what constitues the most important factor towards success on the screen. They have discussed art. skill, soul, temperament and personality. Now comes Gladys Walton and declares that so far as she is concerned good health is her best ally, and the fact that she has always kept in the best physical condition has helped her make good from the start.

When Miss Walton first visited a California motion picture studio a little over a year ago her vital youthfulness and natural vivacity attracted the attention of a director, and she was soon playing in popular comedies. Here her ability to run, hike, row and dive soon placed her in real parts. Her spirited buoyancy, due to splendid health, won her the first leading role, with Lyons and Moran, and from that she stepped into the principal feminine role in "The Secret Gift" in which she is featured with Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians in a story of exquisite human interest and entertaining quality. The real pathos of "The Secret Gift" is carried by Lee Kohlmar but Miss Walton is most ingenuous and engaging in the role of a Miss who fell in love outside of her own charmed circle and who had her own ideas about the propriety of marrying where her own heart dictated. You'll like Gladys. She's there.

Mutual Welfare Association Organized by Universal Employees

A MUTUAL welfare organization of great scope and promise has been started by employees of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. It is known as the "Universal Mutual Welfare Association" and its purpose is to aid Universal employees who are sick or otherwise in distress.

Although the organization had its origin among the members of the night force at the Universal laboratories, Fort Lee, the idea has spread rapidly through the rest of the factory and through the Universal Home Office, the Big U Exchange and Universal's Industrial and Educational Department. Strongly backed by R. H. Cochrane, the First Vice-President of Universal and other Universal officials it is expected to become a world-wide organization with active branches in every part of the globe where Universal agencies are located. Already steps have been taken to organize branches of the Universal Mutual Welfare Association in the fifty odd Universal Exchanges throughout the United States and Canada.

A. L. Mohan, the night superintendent at the Universal Fort Lee factory, is president of the new organization. Other officials all members of the factory night force, who organized the association, are W. T. Richards, vice-president; F. Stocklian, Recording-secretary; J. O'Toole, Financial Secretary; J. Roth, Treasurer and H. Truax, Sergeant-at-Arms. The trustees are H. Quall, H. Webber and B. Aubry.

The association has elected four honorary members as follows: Mr. Carl Laemmle, President of Universal, Mr. R. H. Cochrane, First vice-president, Mr. E. H. Goldstein, assistant to the President, and Mr. E. F. Murphy, General Superintendent of Universal's Fort Lee factory.

The association in many respects is similar to other sick and death benefit associations, but has many other phases which link it particularly with the Universal organization and which will make it an important body in the film world.

One aspect of the association is its club and social possibilities. Wherever a branch of the Universal Mutual Welfare Association exists there will be regular meetings and social activities to weld Universal employees together. Universal already has turned over one of the large buildings at its Fort Lee factory to the organizers and it is being fitted as a club room and assembly hall where the members will have the opportunity of hearing noted educators, financiers, men of affairs, and moving picture authorities on subjects of efficiency and general interest.

The first social event of the new organization will be a clam chowder party to be held on September 4th. This will be followed shortly by a mass meeting of Universal employees, at which New Jersey notables will speak.

Notice of new organization and his election has been cabled to Mr. Laemmle, who is now in Europe. In accepting the honorary membership, R. H. Cochrane expressed himself in glowing terms as to the future of the movement, which he thinks can become a tremendous power for good and which he assures the members will have the best wishes and active assistance of the Universal Company. He was particularly delighted that the originators of the idea threw open the membership to all Universal employees. An example of the immediate benefits of the Universal Mutual Welfare organization came to light when the Association was less than a week old. One of its charter members, Leslie Coffey, a film inspector at the factory, was killed in an automobile accident. The association extended every possible aid to Coffey's family, and the boy's body was accompanied to his home at Auburn, New York, by a committee headed by A. L. Mohan, the President of the Association.

The Mutual Welfare idea has spread to employees of other film companies also.

Half page advertisement in the Daily Oklahoman which announced Benjamin's great stunt in Oklahoma City.

How Benjamin Put It Over

Remarkable Stunt Which Sam Benjamin, Universal Exchange Manager, Pulled Off With the Assistance of Oklahoma City Exhibitors.

LAST week we promised that we would tell you in this Weekly all about Sam Benjamin's Universal Week stunt in Oklahoma City. So here goes. Sam is a quiet appearing man. He doesn't beat up the air with his hands and he is not given to the use of superlatives or expletives but after he has talked with you a short time you find yourself naturally believing everything he says as though it could not possible be otherwise. That seems to be the cornerstone on which he has erected a wonderful business for the Universal in the Oklahoma Exchange and a tremendous personal popularity and reputation for square dealing in the territory.

To hear Mr. Benjamin tell it, the stunt he pulled seems easy as can be and you get the impression that the only brilliant part of the performance was the conceiving of the idea. But just stop for a minute and think of the amazing effrontery of the man who would alone and single handed put on a week of Universal pictures in a city of nine big houses, do the booking and the advertising and advance work necessary, when another great moving picture company took an entire month of advance preparation and planning, and even then came no nearer to the 100 per cent. goal than Sam Benjamin. By "alone and single handed" we do not mean that Sam is the whole office force of Oklahoma Exchange, for Sam has a very efficient force of salesmen and assistants, and if it had not been for the organization it is doubtful if he could have come as near as he did to making Oklahoma City all Universal for one week.

"How did you get this idea of a Universal Yeek?" Sam was asked.

"Why, the idea isn't new and it has been tried many times," said Sam in his velvety way. "Paramount was having a week and that started me to think of it. In fact, it was one of my smallest accounts that put the idea into my head by asking if I could give him enough film for a whole week like the Paramount was doing. I thought if this man could do it, why couldn't all of the theatres using the service do it. So I got together the whole force and we talked it over and in no time at all we decided to do it. I had to fight for some of the dates and fight hard, and if I had wanted to injure a good customer I could have jimmied into the only other theatre in the city that was not running a Universal film on every day of the week of August 8 to 14. But no stunt is a good stunt unless it builds up business for the future, and that is the part of this stunt that I liked so much. I got full price for all of the film that I booked that week and I did not attempt to book anything that would not be appropriate to the type of audience that each house catered to. Everyone was pleased and Universal films got a great big boost. One of the most amazing things that happened was the number of requests from out-of-town exhibitors for me to pull another of these Universal weeks. You see, the out-of-town exhibitors had been using this concentration of Universal film as a barometer. They had a fine opportunity to see how an audience would take a good many of the films that they already had booked or were thinking of booking. So I may have another party soon."

THE STORY

IN 1890 two young men, Peter Harlingen and Jan Saxe, came to New York from Holland. The same ship brought Bertha Kruger, a pretty little orphan girl who was going to live with her aunt. Both young men fell in love with her on the ship. Bertha found her aunt was going blind. The boys were both sympathetic, but Jan secretly gave the doctor $500 for an operation by a specialist, extracting a promise of secrecy.

Soon Jan secured work in a little jewelry shop and Peter became a chemist in a drug store. The operation was successful and Bertha, supposing that the money came from Peter, was quite ready to listen to him when he proposed marriage. Jan was on the point of proposing also, when Peter told him of his own happiness and Jan loaned him the rest of the money he had brought to America, so that the two could get married, although Jan's heart was broken.

Twenty years later Jan is still the watchmaker of Paradise Alley, while Peter is at the head of a great wholesale drug firm. The two men are still very close friends, however, Peter's daughter Winifred greatly resembled her mother, who had died at her birth. Peter's ambitions plans require a large sum of money, and it has become so necessary for him to have it that he is urging Winifred to marry the son of a banker, who will advance the money under no other consideration. but Winifred has become acquainted with Larry McTeague, one of Jan's proteges, and Jan finds it necessary to expose the fact that he, too, was in love with Peter's wife before Peter will consent to permit his daughter to conduct her own romance.

The faint perfumed memory of his only romance lay between the leaves of his grandfather's bible until a younger romance brought happiness to the heart of the watchmaker.

The watchmaker's funny little spy glass saw other things than cogs and springs—two hearts came into its focus and Jan Saxe helped fuse them into happiness.

Two of the old world came to the new. After twenty years one had gained the love of a slum alley and the other had nothing but gold. What is success, anyhow?

Her gilded lover was neither bad, brave nor brainy—so she married the young boss of paradise alley—and in their happiness the watchmaker was happy too.

There were few gold watches in the Little Jewelry Shop, but the kiddies thought the kindest heart in paradise alley beat under the vest of the watchmaker.

ADVANCE STORY

THE coming of "The Secret Gift" to the ——— Theatre next ——— is unusually interesting, for this is the photodrama which won the Carl Laemmle $1,000 bonus for containing the most human note and being the farthest removed from the ordinary screen drama of modern vintage.

"The Secret Gift" treats of just plain folks, the sort that everyone knows, and not simply figures in fiction or on a strip of celluloid. George Hull, the author, is said to have taken a page from everyday life, peopled with characters that are familiar to the human family, and adapted the story for presentation on the screen.

The featured players in this drama are just as interesting as the story itself, for they are recent recruits from the speaking stage—actors who have thrilled and amused the theatregoers of two continents. The part of the watchmaker is played by Lee Kohlmar, who has given principal support to David Warfield and others of the legitimate stage, and Rudolph Christians, who plays the role of his comrade, was for years the stage idol of Continental Europe.

The story opens with the arrival of two young emigrants to America, tells of their early struggles and of the sacrifice of the one that the other might reach his goal. Twenty years pass. Peter has prospered beyond his early dreams, while Jan still finds happiness in repairing old watches and healing wounded hearts. Then comes the big punch of the story. Peter is ambitious that his daughter should marry a social light. Jan reads her heart and knows that it belongs to a self-made man who is worthy of her. The final sacrifice of Jan to secure the happiness of the girl whose mother he loved furnishes a note that is distinctly new in the drama of the screen.

TWO STAGE STARS

THE names of Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians, two of the stars of "The Secret Gift," may not be very familiar to the average motion picture patron; but on the legitimate stage the records of these actors stand for the finest achievements in comedy and drama. Both these players are comparatively new to the screen, having played a few roles before the camera in order to familiarize themselves with the techniue of the silent drama before permitting their names to be used in a featured sense. In "The Secret Gift," in which these sterling players are to combine their talents, skill and personality, lovers of the highest art in film plays will have an opportunity to enjoy acting that is real by two dramatic stars who have swayed audiences in every large city in America and Europe.

Ten years ago Rudolph Christians was the most popular dramatic star in Central Europe, playing annual engagements in Vienna, Amsterdam, Berlin, Petrograd, Paris and London. Then he came to America for a special engagement of eight weeks at the Irving Place Theatre, New York. There his triumph was so emphatic that he was persuaded to remain as permanent star and stage director.

Lee Kohlmar played in the famous New York Casino musical comedies in his early youth, with LaSalle Theatre musical shows in Chicago, and then made his debut in the drama by playing the leading juvenile role with David Warfield in "The Music Master." He has played a number of leading comedy roles in Broadway productions, especially that of the salesman in "Potash and Perlmutter" for three seasons in New York. His last work on the stage was as headliner in vaudeville, which brought him to California, where he decided to remain for a series of screen productions.

FOR THE HERALD

MAKER of watches and dreamer of dreams, Jan Saxe is the idol of Paradise Alley. Urchins press freckled noses against Jan's shop window and peer with awe at the shining instruments under the little glass cages. They laugh when Jan screws his funny "spy glass" in his eye.

There aren't many gold watches in Paradise Alley, but old Jan cares for thick, pewter-cased timepieces with the loving skill he would bestow on a movement cased in platinum and set with a myriad jewels. To Jan a watch is a watch, just as a heart is a heart.

Jan mends other things than watches. Crippled dolls. Hunger-pinched bellies. Wounded little feelings. Sometimes broken hearts. And the East Side loves him for it.

Jan came to America when Peter did twenty years before. Peter is rich now, but the two are still comrades. Jan had more money than Peter at first, but he gave it unquestioningly to make those he loved happy. He went without money, just as he went without love. For Peter married the girl of Jan's only romance.

Now come two hearts under Jan's funny "spy glass." The heart of his only sweetheart's daughter—and Peter's daughter. And the heart of a young lawyer, a son of the slums. Peter opposes the match as unworthy. But to the maker of watches a heart is a heart, and in "The Secret Gift," when it comes to the ——— Theatre next ———, you may see what kindly old Jan Saxe did about it—what his final sacrifice was for those he loved. Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians, actors of international fame, are featured as the two life comrades in George Hull's story, which Harry Franklin has produced for Universal.

NOTES ON "THE SECRET GIFT"

A merry boating party on Long Island Sound, a sudden squall, an overturned craft and a speedy rescue by a motor boat form one of the interesting scenes in "The Secret Gift," to be shown at the ——— Theatre on ———. The story is by George Hull and was produced by Harry Franklin, with Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians featured.

Two stars of the dramatic stage are being featured in the newest photodrama produced by Universal, "The Secret Gift." The actors are Lee Kohlmar and Rudolph Christians, and although they are not as yet well known to the patrons of the silent drama, the chances are they will be prime favorites after "The Secret Gift" has been shown at the ——— Theatre on ———.

Gladys Walton, who plays the original feminine role in "The Secret Gift," appearing first as the emigrant girl, and in later scenes as the child of the wealthy chemist, is soon to be starred in Universal screen productions. Miss Walton is said to be one of the great discoveries of the year, as will be realized by those who see her work in "The Secret Gift" at the ——— Theatre next ———.

THE STORY

Warren Goodwright, an American residing in Paris, is an author, but a dreamer, and has never had much success. His beautiful young wife, Grace, loves him but believes that she keeps his love by reason of her beauty. She buys the most expensive costumes and easily falls a victim to Madame Malot, an unscrupulous modiste.

The modiste tells Grace that she knows a rich American who will loan her the money to cancel the bill and that Warren can later repay the amount. Rex Strong is an American army officer living a gay life in Paris, but he is kind of heart, and when he sees that Grace is innocent and unsophisticated, he tells her that he cannot let her have the money. He advises her to confide in her husband and gives her his own card, telling her that if Madame Malot becomes threatening to call on him. Rex drops his card case in the room. Madame Malot finds it later and sees that it contains letters from the Countess de Trouvere. She gets the help of Odera, a Spanish dancer, who has had an affair with Rex, and together they plan to blackmail the Countess. She is not lacking in courage, however, and goes direct to Rex, who secures the help of a detective. They trap Mme. Malot, and Rex forces the modiste to give Grace a receipted bill and to return the letters of the countess. But in doing this Grace, through the duplicity of Mme. Malot, has become more deeply involved than ever.

A scandalous society paper publishes an account of the affair, without mentioning names. Grace is suspected of being the woman in the case. Her husband reads the article and insists upon using it as the plot for a play. The play is a success, but the author and his wife are cut by their friends, who believe Warren knows of her indiscretions and is profiting by them. When Goodwright learns the truth he will not listen to explanations and a tragedy becomes imminent. Grace and Rex plead in vain for Warren to believe in them. Later, however, in a scene of tremendous power, the husband and wife are reunited.

How can she wear such clothes on her husband's income? Someone always asks that question and then smiles knowingly. But they were mistaken about the pretty, foolish, innocent wife in "The Devil's Passkey."

Eric von Stroheim, the creator of "Blind Husbands," one of the season's photodramatic gems produced "The Devil's Passkey," a picturesque story of love and intrigue in Paris.

She was afraid to tell her husband of her debts—afraid not to. She spurned the customary "Way Out" of Paris. Her door to happiness was finally opened—but not by the Devil's Passkey."

He capitalized his wife's indiscretions by dramatizing them—so his friends thought. Yet he and his wife were both innocent. A truly Parisian situation in Von Stroheim's paragon, "The Devil's Passkey."

ADVANCE STORY NO. 1

Scenes of gay Parisian life, produced with unusual realism, are features of Eric von Stroheim's latest Universal-Jewel production, "The Devil's Pass Key," which comes to the ——— Theatre on ———. Mr. von Stroheim was the author and director of "Blind Husbands," the recent Universal success, said to be one of the best photoplays of several seasons.

The reproduction in "The Devil's Pass Key" of life in Paris, where the story is laid, is genuine in every detail. Mr. Von Stroheim has spent a good deal of time there himself and much of the local color of the scenes in the French capital is the result of his own experience.

The story concerns an American author living in Paris with his extravagant wife, who becomes hopelessly in debt at the shop of an unscrupulous modiste. Expecting the woman to follow the Parisian method of getting a rich lover to pay her bills, the modiste introduces her to an American army officer. This turns out to be the most fortunate thing that could have happened to the young wife.

Sam de Grasse, who played the part of the husband in "Blind Husbands," is the husband in "The Devil's Pass Key," and Una Trevelyn is his wife. Clyde Fillmore portrays the American officer. Others in the cast are Maude George, Leo White, Mae Busch, Ruth King and Jack Matheis.

CONCERNING ERIC VON STROHEIM

The career of Eric von Stroheim and his meteoric rise is a story of interest. Born of the Austrian nobility, his father a colonel in the army of Franz Joseph, his mother a lady-in-waiting to the queen, and himself the heir to a high title, he renounced his affiliations when he attained his majority and came to America.

For a time he was a reporter on a Boston newspaper; later he sold bonds in Baltimore; next he dug for oil in Kansas; was a boatman on Lake Tahoe, and finally wrote and acted in a vaudeville sketch.

Five years ago he visited the studios in Los Angeles in the hope of securing work as an extra. "Old Heidelberg" was being filled. "The uniforms are all wrong," von Stroheim remarked to an assistant director.

"What do you know about Heidelberg?" the latter inquired.

"I graduated from the university there seven years ago," was the reply.

The producer heard the conversation and engaged von Stroheim as technical adviser on the production.

That was the screen introduction of the young foreigner who recently flashed upon the theatrical horizon as the producing genius of "Blind Husbands," and whose second masterpiece, "The Devil's Pass Key," is to be shown at the ——— Theatre on ———.

FOR THE HERALD

All Paris is talking about the latest scandal. A young woman of fashion led to extravagance in clothes beyond her husband's income and fearing to tell him of the threatened suit by the scheming modiste, accepts the latter's proposition that she permit a dashing young American officer to pay her bill.

The names of the principal parties are not used in the society sheet, but everyone in the fashionable set knows that the woman in the case can be none other than the pretty wife of the American playwright, Warren Goodwright, and that the man is Captain Rex Strong, a military attache.

Goodwright, who is an idealist, and whose latest play was rejected by the managers because it was not true to life, decides to use the story printed in the newspaper as the plot for his next drama. Of course, the idea that his wife was involved never entered his head.

When Goodwright's play is presented all the living characters in the story are present and everyone believes Goodwright knows that his wife is the central figure in the story. Yet there she sits by his side, the playwright's admiring gaze divided between her and the stage.

This is a true Parisian situation, and it is told in true Parisian fashion by Eric von Stroheim, the genius of the screen, in his latest Universal-Jewel production, "The Devil's Pass Key," coming to the ——— Theatre on ———.

NOTES FOR USE PRECEDING THE SHOWING

Eric von Stroheim, who produced "Blind Husbands," is also responsible for the production of "The Devil's Pass Key," the Universal-Jewel masterpiece to be seen at the ——— Theature next ———. This photodrama is based on "Clothes and Treachery," a story of Parisian life by Baroness De Meyer, and is enacted by an all-star cast.

Mae Busch, the Australian musical comedy artist, who has won success on the English and American stage, has the role of Odera, the Spanish dancer, an important role in Eric von Stroheim's latest production, "The Devil's Pass Key," coming to the ——— Theatre on ———. She is one of a dozen star players engaged for this Universal-Jewel feature.

"The Devil's Pass Key," the latest production by Eric von Stroheim, the man who directed "Blind Husbands," is announced for next ——— at the ——— Theatre. Aside from the brilliant direction of von Stroheim, the production has the advantage of a cast which includes San de Grasse, Clyde Fillmore, Una Trevelyn, Maude George, Mae Busch, Ruth King, Leo White, Jack Matheis, and others of equal prominence.

One of the remarkable features of "The Devil's Pass Key," the newest Universal-Jewel production under the direction of Eric von Stroheim, offered at the ——— Theatre next ———, is the seemingly endless series of tremendure scenes which figure in the story. One of these, a reproduction of the Grand Prix in Paris, the European racing classic, is declared to mark the limit of screen realism.

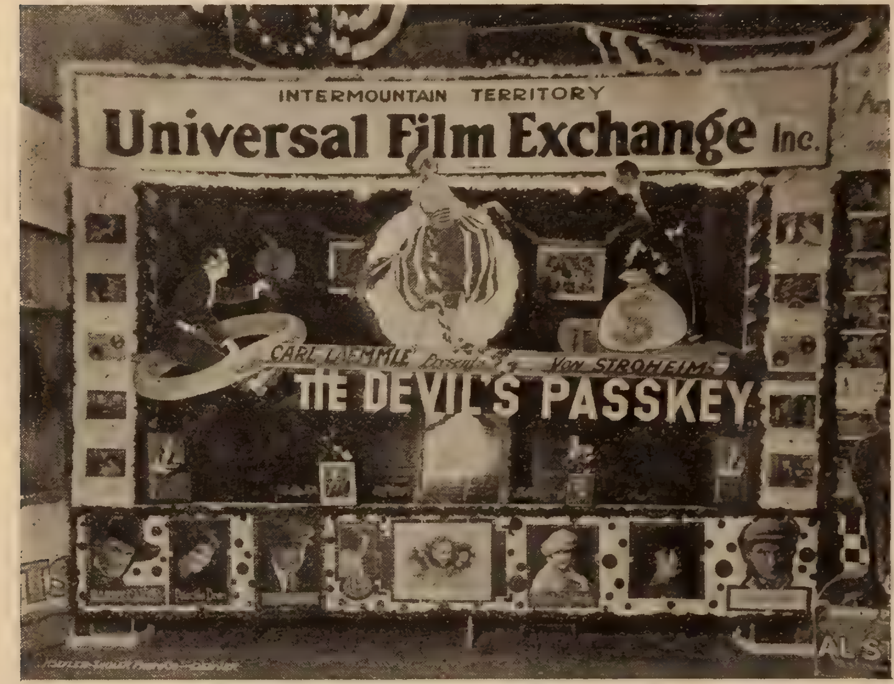
The exact reproduction of the Theatre Francais in Paris, with its lobby, auditorium, orchestra, boxes, stage and dressing rooms, was constructed for several scenes in "The Devil's Pass Key," the latest von Stroheim production offered by Universal-Jewel at the ——— Theatre next ———.

Ever since the phenomenal success scored by Eric von Stroheim's film sensation, "Blind Husbands," the publis has been awaiting the next production by this screen genius. These anticipations will be realized next ——— when "The Devil's Pass Key" will be shown at the ——— Theatre. Von Stroheim's latest feature is declared to be even more striking than his earlier offering.

Sam de Grasse, who will be remembered as the husband in Eric von Stroheim's "Blind Husbands," again has the role of an American husband in von Stroheim's latest production, "The Devil's Pass Key," to be shown at the ——— Theatre on

EXPLOITATION

A page of suggestions for putting over "The Devil's Passkey"



Interesting Booth Display of the Universal Denver Exchange at Convention of the Rocky Mt. Screen Club, held at Denver in July.

EXHIBITORS will undoubtedly find teaser campaigns most effective in exploiting "The Devil's Pass Key." In such case, the "teasers" should make their first appearance at least two weeks in advance of the picture.

"What is the Devil's Pass Key?"

That is the question which should be played up. Is it vanity? Is it extravagance? Is it suspicion? Is it deceit? Is it falsehood? Is it selfishness?

Newspaper headlines could be changed daily, in this respect. Placards and handbills may also be used to spread the question and its suggested answers. Essays can be written, various contests arranged, after which a prize can be given the person who writes the best letter on the subject.

It should not be difficult to persuade some minister to preach on the subject the Sunday preceding the first showing of the picture. Keys and devils, of course, can always be used with good effect.

Fashion Shop.

It should not be very expensive to stage a fashion show, either a la mode or representing different periods in history, each one revealing the fact that woman loves to dress and has always been given to self-adornment since the days of Mother Eve.

H. C. of L.

The idea of extravagance can be well tied up with the high cost of living. This idea would lend itself to display of placards.

"Resist the devil and he will flee from you."

"Reduce the cost of living—be economical.

Beat the profiteer—wear your old clothes.

Unique Suggestions

Special tickets printed on pasteboard cut to represent a key, would be a novelty.

Prior to the showing arouse local interest by procuring an old and interesting chest, fastened with a queer and intricate lock. Circulate the story that the box has been found at the bottom of a well, buried in someone's cellar, or was dug up when excavations were being made in the city streets. Place the chest on exhibition. Request that at a certain time and place everyone bring any keys that will be likely to unlock the box. Guarantee that whoever succeeds in unlocking the box may have whatever it is found to contain. Make sure beforehand that no key will unlock the box until the right person (who has previously been supplied with the right key), joins the crowd and, after trying several other keys, finally unlocks the box. Its contents can be dozens of small souvenir pasteboard keys of bright red with the words "The Devil's Pass Key" printed on each one. These will, of course, be eagerly circulated among the crowd. Or the box might contain dodgers, announcing the showing of the picture in the printed form of a key, as follows:

"Addressed" to Convent, Mae Busch arrives at Universal City, Cal.

Mae Busch, the interesting actress who plays the rôle of the dancer in "The Devil's Passkey."

SEVERAL years ago an eight-year-old miss was carefully wrapped up and addressed to St. Elizabeth's Convent, Madison, N. J. This almost commercial statement takes on considerable interest when one is further informed that the human baggage was wrapped up in Melbourne, Australia. and was sent to New Jersey alone. And now this far-travelled miss has arrived at Universal City and a very enviable position in the screen world. The name of this actress is Mae Busch, and the name is already known to a great many people and will be known to a great many more when her work in "The Devil's Pass Key" becomes better known.

When Eric von Stroheim engaged Miss Busch to appear as the coquettish French dancer in his photoplay of Parisian Life, "The Devil's Pass Key," which will soon be released all over the country, he remembered seeing her play a similar role in a musical comedy about five years ago—with Eddie Foy in "Over the River."

"Play it just as you did that part on the stage, only remember you are in Paris instead of New York, moving in a set that is broad on views and short on morals."

These were von Stroheim's directions to the clever young actress, and knowing ones who have had a pre-release view of "The Devil's Pass Kay" agree that Missu Busch gives a performance that conveys the idea of Paris as it is supposed to be.

Miss Busch's father and mother were both prominently associated with the professional life of Melbourne and Sydney, her mother as a prominent opera singer and her father was conductor of the Australian Symphony Orchestra. Mae came to America by herself at the age of eight, "addressed" to St. Elizabeth's Convent, Madison, New Jersey, where she received her education. It was an unusual journey, but little Mae made it safely. At the age of sixteen she was starred in vaudeville at the head of one of the Jesse Lasky "girl" acts, and later appeared in a number of musical productions.

While she was playing at the Orpheum in Los Angeles, Mack Sennett saw her and her first motion picture work was in Keystone comedies, but henceforth she will devote her talents to the more serious work in the silent drama. In "The Devil's Pass Key" Miss Busch has a role which could be easily overplayed or left inconspicuous. Miss Busch does neither. She is a thorough artist and she makes the temperamental and tempestuous Spanish dancer in her lavish and ornate setting a sparkling diamond of dramatic triumph. Von Stroheim was so pleased with her work that he immediately cast her for his next feature, "Foolish Wives," though that was six months away.

In the meantime, and just to keep her hand in, Mae Busch played in one Western photoplay. She regarded it as something of a lark, but the vivacious manner and unusual coiffure were as much in evidence as ever and made a big hit. But Mae Busch's special talents shine brightest in just the environment in which "The Devil's Pass Key" was conceived by Baroness de Meyer, who wrote the original story, "Clothes and Treachery," and von Stroheim, who put the story into the wonderful dramatic form in which it now appears.

One of the things that Mr. Benjamin did that he did not tell anyone about was to run a big half-page advertisement in all of the papers announcing the Week and giving a calendar of dates and films. He paid for this himself and the investment was well worth while. He did not tell any of the exhibitors about it because he did not want them to slight their own advertisements, and in the same paper that contained the big announcement that is reproduced at the top of this page there was a great deal of extra space bought by each theatre. Here is the way that the Daily Oklahoman starts its lead story on theatricals the Sunday of the Universal Week:

Universal Stars Are Featured at Local Playhouses

Big Numbers Scheduled, Supplemented by Vaudeville and and Light Musical Comedy.

Big numbers on the screen one or two notable acts in vaudeville and light musical comedy appear to be the amusement magnets this week. A glance at the screen will convey the impression that this is Universal week, almost every playhouse in town playing the products of that mammoth concern.

Priscilla Dean, one of the most brilliant stars of a peculiarly individualistic type and a "natural-born" actress, is at the Empress in undoubtedly her biggest effort, "The Virgin of Stamboul." Eric von Stroheim, who most of us learned during the war to hate most cordially, because of his German portrayals, is featured in his own enormous production, "Blind Husbands," at the New Folly, and the other theatres have Universal pictures also.

Those who were fortunate enough to see "The Music Master" played by David Warfield during its original run of nearly three years in New York, will recall Lee Kohlmar. who played the leading juvenile role of Poons, the young German musician. It is the same Lee Kohlmar, now a star, who is featured with Rudolph Christians in "The Secret Gift," a drama of life to be shown at the ——— Theatre on ———.

elaborate scenes enter vitally into the warp and woof of this Parisian story.

There is the famous race track in Paris where the Grand Prix, the French turf classic, is run. The audience sees the races, the grand stand filled with the wealth and fashion of Europe, and the boxes containing royalty and the nobility.

There is a panorama of Paris, the city of light and gayety, showing every familiar landmark from the Garre Du Nord to the Eiffel Tower—the bright streets, the smart shops and the cosmopolitan crowds.

A view of the beautiful gardens on the Seine, with its semi-military gathering following the war—with its refreshment tables in the open air, and the orchestra delighting the crowds with its American jazz selections.

An exact reproduction of the Theatre Francais, showing the beautiful auditorium with its huge audience in correct evening attire; for it is the premiere of a new play, and the wealth of Paris is in attendance. The stage is also shown, with its company of players, and the dressing rooms and green rooms where the actors congregate.

One of the scenes showing the fashionable establishment of Mme. Malot, modiste extraordinary, with its score of manequins who display the extravagant designs for which the shop is famous.

There are also views of the most popular restaurants and cafes of Paris, with their gay cabarets and beautiful women.

Episode No. 3

"A Watery Grave"

KEELER comes on the scene just in time to rescue her. At length they arrive in Yokohama and put up at the Grand Hotel. Carson and Redding trail Keeler and Marie. The two do some sightseeing in Yokohama, then leave for Tokyo, where Carson and Redding follow them. Marie and Keeler visit several places of interest and when in Sheba Park they are attacked by Carson and Redding. Keeler is knocked senseless, after which Carson searches him and finds the map. Marie puts up a good fight with Carson, but he overpowers her, gags and binds her, puts her into a 'ricksha and hurries to the marsh with her. Redding joins him there, the coolie who owns the ricksha following them. Carsoon fights the coolie as Redding leaves with Marie. Redding carries Marie to the shore, Carson following, and they put her into a sampan which was moored there. They tow the sampan out on the water, knock a hole in the boat, and leave Marie there to sink in the boat.

Two Reel Century Comedy

Featuring
MERTA STERLING and EDDIE LAMBERT

TWO brides and two grooms venture forth to find abodes but rent is high and dwellings scarce and all they find is a room in a lodging house big enough for one little fellow to hang on to a rope in the room and Merta's husband, a little fellow, attempts to fall asleep hanging on to the rope, but someone's shoes hanging alongside, prevent him from sleeping. Even the park would not harbor any of them, for when they had attempted to find refuge there, a copper had chased them, taking them for spooners.

However, Merta leaves her little husband in the little room and sallies forth with her brother and his bride. They find quarters in an outdoor hotel—50c. an hour to sleep in a hammock and be bothered to death all night by roosters and other things. When little hubby is thrown out of the lodging house he finds his way to the outdoor hotel and almost causes a big rumpus by falling on his wife when attempting to climb into the hammock over her.

Brother's wife had a "sweetie" who would never say "die" and he returns to steal the bride. He does, but hubby gives him the chase of his life.

But all troubles must end some time, but Merta and her husband start building their home. Their happiness is complete and five years later Merta and her hubby and the five little Mertas are still billing and cooing in the little home they call their own.

"Into the Chasm"

KEELER has revived and followed the two men, being put on their trail by the coolie. The owner of the sinking boat stops Carson and Redding as they reach the shore, demanding payment for his boat. Redding leaves Carson to pay the man and Carson accidentally draws the stolen map from his pocket with the money, dropping it on the stones at his feet. Keeler reaches the shore in time to engage men to pole him out to the sinking boat, thereby saving Marie. Carson and Redding hurry away, and when Marie is brought ashore she finds the map which Carson dropped. She is unable to decipher the Chinese writing and the next morning gets the interpreter at the hotel to read it to her. Redding and Foo are near and after Marie leaves they question the interpreter who gives them the desired information.

The map shows the location of a cave near the Daibutsu and Marie visits the Idol in the guise of a pilgrim. Carson follows also disguised as a pilgrim. She sees him and gets rid of him by denouncing him to the Japs as a white man who plans to destroy the Idol. Her plan works and he is driven from the place while Marie is acclaimed as the savior of their Idol and is escorted by the cheering crowd to her hotel.

She then hastens to the cave where she hopes to find the Petal. Keeler also goes to the cave and follows her into it. Inside the cave Marie finds a Lotus Flower covered with mystic writing and takes it with her. Keeler is attacked by Carson, who has trailed him to the cave. Finding her way blocked, Marie turns and leaves through another opening of the cave. She finds herself on the brink of an immense cliff, her only way of escape a rope of vine which spans the chasm above the sea. Carson leaves Keeler with Redding outside the cave, then re-enters the cave and follows Marie to the cave. She starts to cross the chasm on the vine and after he has tried unsuccessfully to dislodge her by swaying the vine, he fires repeatedly at the vine, which falls, and Marie drops into the water below.

BILLY HALL, having deserted Bud Kirkland's post, and suspected of desertion, Kirkland goes after him to straighten the matter out, following up a clue in a letter from a girl found in Billy's effects.

He comes upon Billy on the girl's ranch the next morning, seeking to leave the girl against her protests. He goes, and Kirkland, thinking that she is Billy's sweetheart, offers his assistance as a friend of Billy's. He finds out that she will not be able to pay a sum she owes because of the thieving of her cattle. Billy has gone off to try to find the thieves.

In town, Billy gets into a card game with Thorne, to whom the girl is indebted, in the hope of squaring the debt, but he loses. Thorne laughs at Billy, and Billy follows him in an ill-humor. Kirkland, fearing trouble, follows the two and the girl, when she learns that the two have met, seeks the sheriff and rides off to Thorne's range.

Billy, morally certain that Thorne is at the bottom of the thieving, starts to drive away his cattle, in an effort to ruin him and is overseen by Kirkland. Billy is killed by Thorne and one of his men. Thorne gets the drop on Kirkland and forces him to leave, claiming that he killed a man whom he found stealing cattle. Kirkland, slinking in the underbrushes, finds Thorne branding one of the girl's cows. A fight follows, in which Thorne and his man are killer. Knowing that on the face of things Billy is a rustler, Kirkland puts the empty gun in Billy's hands and makes it appear as if Billy had been killed in discharge of his duty.

When the girl arrives, her grief at Billy's death is softened by her pride in him. Kirkland learns then that she is Billy's sister. He leaves for his post, carrying back with him the story of Billy's bravery as he has made it himself, leaving the reward to go to Betty. He is happy in the thought that he has kept the reputation of the rangers spotless and has saved the girl's faith in her brother. And then he can come back some time.

Whereupon Bartine grew jealous of Trixie and one fine day she and mother and Mrs. Brown betook themselves to Trixie's dressing room, where Brown and Jack were really in conference, but the men eluded them. They got back safely to their offices all right, only to be bombarded by the women, to whom they declared they had never been out of the office. Sonia	Ruth Royce

GRANT is saved by a passing caravan and returns to America, where he learns that Beth has been spirited away. He does not learn, however, that she is in a hospital, but Zan and Sonia, who come to America to get the dagger from Grant, discover this, and have Beth sent out on a fake case.

Grant, as a member of the United Detective Agency, invades a nest of whisky smugglers, hoping to get a trace of Beth. They are led by Jean, who has come from England with the news of Mike's death. Jean overcomes Grant in a terrific fight, binds him and sets fire to the place, but Grant is rescued and passes unknown into the hospital just as Beth is coming out on the fake case.

In the hospital the surgeon discovers the dagger in Grant's effects, and recalling Beth's strange story to him, he places it in the safe. He tells Grant that Beth is in the hospital, but out on a case, and Grant scents foul play. Just as they go to the safe to get the dagger, they encounter the interne endeavoring to extract it and a fight follows, during which the dagger is hurled by the interne into a drain pipe. It is picked up by a man who flees with it, but he is overtaken by Grant, who recaptures it. Grant returns to the hospital just as Jean, who has seen Grant's rescue from the fire and told Zan of his whereabouts, arrives with a note demanding the dagger for Beth.

When Grant goes to Zan's den, he is seized, robbed of the dagger, bound and suspended from his wrists against a wall directly in the path of a huge pendulum, with which Zan plans to kill him in order to avenge Prince Narr's death. Zan and Sonia then leave with Beth as Grant is about to be crushed to death by the great pendulum as it swings closer and closer to him.

STORY ...... Very realistic; holds interest steadily because of its true situations
DIRECTION .... Very good

LIGHTINGS .... Some striking effects
CAMERA WORK .... Commendable
STAR .... Creates unusual and appealing character; beauty offset to best advantage

DETAIL .... Excellent
CHARACTER OF STORY ...... Incompatibility of husband and wife who come from totally different sets
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION .... 4,825 feet

More and more it seems producers are realizing the value of the little human story, that small but strikingly dramatic "slice of life" that is so difficult to communicate to the film but which, once communicated, is fit matter to rival the far more pretentious production in entertainment value.

Of course these stories are very hard to find. It's easy enough to point out that there is drama in the life of the milkman and the family in the flat downstairs but there are comparitively few authors willing to search for it. C. Gardner Sullivan did, and found it, in "Stepping Out" and "Hairpins" and now Katherine Leiser Robbins has accomplished the feat in "In Folly's Trail."

Here is a simple little story, the central characters of which are a flighty little show girl, with small education and tastes that fairly lacerate finer sensibilities, and an artist whose refinement and culture are just a bit over-developed.

Their marriage occurs after a brief and glamorous courtship and then the incompatibility of the two temperaments begins to reveal itself. Lita is careless, eager for the companionship of her former roustabout friends, Howard seeks a quiet existence and devotion to his art—every act of his wife, the simple soul and heart of whom he loves dearly, grates on him.

Finally his inability to meet her half way results in a breach and it is only through the severe lecture read Howard by Lita's erstwhile suitor, Goldberg, a man of big purse and big heart, that he wakes to his selfishness and begs forgiveness.

The detail of this is splendid, the scenes between husband and wife being enriched by expression, acts and bits of business that give them the indelible stamp of reality. Nor has the director forgotton his production values. There are a number of extravagent and lavish scenes in the Goldberg home with revelry at its height that afford remarkable balance to the less spectacular level of the main action.

Carmel Myers creates an unusual and appealing character in Lita. She appears to live the part. Her beauty, too, is offset to its full advantage. O'Farrell is the last name they gave her which seems to strike a very minor discordant note. Thomas Holding plays the selfish husband excellently. George B. Williams as Goldberg does some delightful character work while others are Arthur Clayton, Viola Lind, W. H. Bainbridge and Beth Ivans.

Can Stand a Lot of Boosting; They'll Love It

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"In Folly's Trail" is another little "human document," to employ a rather bromidic description. And like the other pictures that have confined themselves to the realities of life, in which there is a world of drama, it is bound to highly satisfy all audiences. It's drama is never clashing but always potent, coursing along beneath the surface and making itself felt at all times.

Certainly Miss Myers could not have wished for a better picture in which to be re-introduced to her fans. And she seems to

HARRY CAREY

IN these super-strenuous days it's a positive treat to have some one like Harry Carey to bring us back to sanity—he's so lazily, laughingly human. Harry doesn't take life as seriously as most of us. He suspects it's pretty much of a big joke, anyway, and he'd rather trip up the lean and hungry Cassius in his picture and make him bust his nose than plug the poor villain with a six-shooter. Easy and natural, full of seemingly unconscious mannerisms that make you laugh, is it any wonder that human Harry Carey has come to be the best liked of all Western character players? See him in "Sundown Slim," rightful successor to that delightful scamp, "Overland Red," and you'll see one of the best pictures the screen has ever known.

SAYS MOTION PICTURE NEWS: "Universal has provided FRANK MAYO with a splendid story, a capable cast and praiseworthy direction in this feature and the result is a picture that should interest in any house regardless of locality. Romance, thrills, dramatic moments and heart interest are all here and mixed in the correct formula. The locale is laid along the Mississippi River and in Texas in the 70's. The former scenes are entrancing indeed, as we see the old steamboat with its side paddles come into sight on the lazy river. The big scenes are laid in Texas at the time when the country was opened. Excitement predominates. And the director has not failed to keep it up. The picture is strong in love interest and is balanced with dramatic moments.

OUT WITH IT AT LAST!

THE best part of a secret is the pleasure that can be derived when it is fitting to finally disclose that secret to others.

Universal has been having any amount of good sport with the little "Once To Every Woman" riddles with which it has been teasing and tantalizing its friends for weeks past in the pages of the Moving Picture Weekly. Letters have poured in asking the "Whys and Wherefores" of it all and endeavoring to answer the cryptic question. To all of which Universal has maintained a smiling silence.

But all secrets must out sometime, and Universal has been looking forward with particular pleasure to a time fitting to divulge something about this one.

"Once to Every Woman" is the very apt title of the big Jewel production starring Dorothy Phillips which will be released sometime in October. It promises to be one of the biggest "Jewels" ever put over by Universal, and that is saying a lot, for Universal has recently "put over" such tremendous Jewel hits as "The Virgin of Stamboul," "The Breath of the Gods," "Under Crimson Skies" and "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals." Months in preparation, "Once to Every Woman" was skilfully guided to completion by no less a director than Allen Holubar, husband of Miss Phillips and the author and director of so many of those arresting productions in which she has recently startled screendom.

"Once to Every Woman" contains not only a big story and a vital story, but a "heart" story as well. And as such it will have a universal appeal. It portrays with telling force the life of a small town girl, blessed at birth with a golden gift, who sets out to conquer continents and who sees only herself, unconscious that others are living and loving and suffering near her.

The scenes are varied. The spectator is shown the uneventful life in a small Western town, the glamour of musical Rome, the splendor of high society life in New York, with its brilliant operatic season, its gorgeous gowns and beautiful women.

Dorothy Phillips, the star of "Once to Every Woman," needs no introduction to Universalites. She made screen history in "The Heart of Humanity," and she has to her credit in addition such phenomenal successes as "Destiny," "The Right to Happiness," "Paid in Advance," etc., all of them Universal productions.

"Once to Every Woman" is a vehicle well suited to the calm and the fire of Dorothy Phillips's artistic temperament, for it depicts the soul of a woman, a woman whose life was eventful, full of crises, full of emotions, both tender and fierce.

It is not, however, a picture for women only. It is a picture for everybody. It contains a plot abounding in intensity, action and suspense, and some big scenes that are thrilling indeed.

That is the gist of what Universal has to divulge of "Once to Every Woman" for the present. In seeing what really does happen "once" to Aurora Meredith in the picture-Aurora, who in reality typifies "Every Woman," in spite of her tinsel and and glitter, those who "hit" the Universal trail will find a rare treat.

"ONCE

TO EVERY WOMAN"

IN this lastest and greatest of all DOROTHY PHILLIPS productions Carl Laemmle presents the exhibitors of the country with a picture which is certain to prove one of the biggest money-makers of the year.

Look back over the past two years. What stands out among the really great pictures of that period? "THE HEART OF HUMANITY—directed by Allen Holubar and starring Dorothy Phillips—a picture that swept the country, crowding houses to absolute capacity no matter what the locality, a Universal-Jewel which, in its heart-appeal, its drama, its story, its acting and its staging, set a new mark for producers to equal.

And now, in the fall of 1920, with the hot weather stowed away, the nation prosperous and everybody eager for entertainment comes just another such marvelous PHILLIPS picture, directed by the same genius, starring the same dazzling star, produced in the same lavish way, certain to draw the same crowds as the great war-play of recent memory.

Book "ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN" right now, today, as one bet you can count on this fall as a sure thing. Story, star, director—they're all here. All you have to do is to avail yourself of an opportunity that may not come again in a long time. Take our advice and see your Universal Exchange as to this great photodrama immediately.

In "Civilian Clothes" Was Screen Officer

DURING the eighteen weeks that Eric von Stroheim was occupied in filming the Universal-Jewel production, "The Devil's Pass Key," which is to be shown at the ———— Theatre on ————, there was only one member of his star cast who was busier than the producer. That man was Clyde Fillmore, who plays the role of Captain Rex Strong in this enthralling story of modern Parisian life.

Throughout the making of "The Devil's Pass Key," Mr. Fillmore was playing a double role. From eight in the morning till sundown he was playing the screen hero in Von Stroheim's production at Universal City, and every evening, to say nothing of matinees on Wednesday and Saturday, he was playing the leading role in "Civilian Clothes" at the Morosco Theatre in Los Angeles.

Von Stroheim arranged that on the afternoons of the matinee days Mr. Fillmore would be excused, using those hours for scenes in which the matinee idol did not appear. Just when he slept during those eighteen weeks is still a mystery to his fellow players.

Fillmore was born in Morgan County, Ohio, but the family moved to Oregon in his early youth. He graduated from the University of Oregon, attended the Johns Hopkins University at Baltimore and was saved from a career in medicine when he was given an opportunity to act in a Washington stock company. His seven years on the stage were spent in companies managed by the late Charles Frohman, Belasco ,Morosco and Cohan and Harris. He entered the motion picture field in 1918 and has remained in film work ever since.

Smiles and Dimples Hide Devil's Design

ONE of the most important roles in Von Stroheim's latest Universal-Jewel production, "The Devil's Pass Key," announced for appearance at the ———— Theatre on ————, is that of Mme. Malot, a fashionable Parisian modiste, who trades on the folly and vanity of her patrons and leads them to extravagances far beyond their means.

This role required that the actress cast for the character of Mme. Malot must be young, attractive, able to wear the smartest gowns, must rise to dramatic heights and at the same time possess a keen sense of humor.

After interviewing many actresses Mr. von Stroheim finally selected Maude George for this role. In "The Devil's Pass Key" Miss George gives a character portrait of the Parisian modiste that ranks with the finest screen achievements. In the hands of any but the most skilful player the role would become coarse. As played by Miss George, it is typically Parisienne.

Maude George has been a well known figure on the metropolitan dramatic stage, playing two seasons with Nat C. Goodwin. When that famous comedian was engaged to play in several photodramas he insisted that Miss George be in his support, and thus she made her screen debut. She has remained in the films ever since ,appearing in such productions as "The Midnight Stage" with Frank Keenan, "Even As You and I" and "Idle Wives" with Lois Weber, "The Frame Up" with George Fawcett, and "Blue Blazes Rawden" with William S. Hart. According to Miss George, however, her present role is the most interesting she ever attempted.

Two Color Block Posters for "The Devil's Passkey"

EXHIBITORS can always look to Universal for novelties and the accompanying illustrations show something "different" in the way of posters.

Reports of the reception of "The Devil's Passkey" have been so glowing, that Universal is backing up the picture with all possible advertising facilities, and in addition to the regular five-color lithograph posters, exquisite as they are, Universal is putting in use special two color block posters such as illustrated here in connection with this picture. These posters are novel and attractive and can be used not only conveniently but extensively as well. In fact they could be artistically plastered over a whole town without being anything but harmonious, striking and pleasing to the eye. Exhibitors therefore will find it well worth their while to take advantage of these posters.

"The Devil's Passkey" is a Jewel production, made under the capable and talented direction of Eric von Stroheim, who was responsible for "Blind Husbands." It is a picture rich in story, in setting and in the variety of talents displayed by the actors who take part in it.

As Marie swings her way across the slender vine, Carson shoots; the vine snaps and Marie drops to the waters below but manages to swim to shore, where a passing automobile takes her to Nara, most famous of Japanese resorts.

Carson has captured her pocketbook and later when he and Redding search the unconscious Harlan, they find the map in addition and also a letter from McVay telling Harlan to proceed to Shanghai.

Carson and Redding go to Nara to meet Mitwer, another confederate and as Carson and Mitwer are discussing their plans, Marie, disguised as a coolie, overhears them and discovers the whereabouts of her purse. Carson feels that, dead or alive, Marie is helpless without the purse. Marie feels that way too, and at night she enters Carson's room and steals the purse from him. He pursues her, but she manages to elude him. The next morning Carson and Redding set out for Kobe and board the boat for Shanghai and Marie, heavily veiled, does likewise.

Harlan is also on the boat and recognizes Marie. Marie overhears Carson and Redding planning to send a telegram telling the Taoist confederates to waylay her when she leaves the boat at Shanghai, for they know now, through the theft of the purse, that she is alive, and they suspect her presence on the boat. However, the telegram canot go off for half an hour, as the wires are out of order and this gives Marie an inspiration. Bribing the electrician who had been repairing the wires, she dons his suit and then scales the p[illegible] pole. High up in the air she succeeds in damaging the wires, but not before she has been noticed. She swings herself along on the wire from one side to the next in a daring attempt to elude the officials, and then when she realizes that her action means imprisonment, she descends and makes a thrilling leap overboard.

Will the angry sea claim her for its victim?

Billy Reeves, foreman of the Flying-M outfit, has an irresistible way with the ladies. His mates, jealous of his prowess and aiming to take him down a peg, are prompted by Slow Evans, Billy's pal, to take advantage of a column of matrimonial ads to fasten a man-hunting woman on Billy's trail. They frame a letter to the most formidable of the advertisers, a widow by the name of Schwartz, and they duplicate this letter to a number of others.

Baron, the owner of the ranch, is expecting a woman buyer from a firm in Omaha, with whom Baron wants to do business. Billy is deputied to meet the buyer and be nice to her, but the boss does not want the boys to know.

Slow and the boys are watching for the replies to their letters. On the way home they find on reading the mail that the Widow Schwartz has swallowed the bait and is on her way to town. To repair the damage they have wrought Slow is sent back to receive her and the plan is that the rest of the boys are to hold her up and give her a scare that will discourage her from going to the ranch. At the same time, a little way behind them, Billy is on his way to meet the lady buyer. On his way into town he lets fall information of his errand and the leader of a gang of bad men overhears it and passes the word along to his men. The widow is the first one off the train and calls for Billy, who, thinking she is the buyer, puts her in the buckboard and starts for the ranch. Slow keeps under cover until Billy has got out of sight and finds a pretty young girl looking for Billy. Slow supposes this is the matrimonial bet and mounts her on a horse. The bandits hold up Billy and the widow, carrying off the widow and leaving Billy tied up. The boys stop Slow and the girl and do their best to frighten her without effect. Billy gets the horses started and meets the boys and the girl. He marshals them to follow the bandits and the widow. They pick up the trail which leads to Chimney Rock Canyon, an inaccessible and impregnable retreat. Billy leaves the girl while he makes a circuit of the canyon rim, looking for the best place to make a drop into the bandit's camp. From an opposite place he sees the girl buyer seized by a bandit. He crosses to a tree and creeps upon the bandits, rescuing the girl and the widow. Slow, to make peace with the widow, promises to marry her, while Billy realizes that the girl is the mate he has been waiting all his life for.

SONIA, Zan and Beth hasten to the wharf to catch a liner leaving for the Asiatic seas, but Sonia forces Zan to release Beth since she is jealous of Zan's attentions to Beth. Beth makes her escape, but Sonia follows her.

Grant, meanwhile, has freed himself of his bonds, and believing that Beth and Sonia have departed with Zan, he prepares to take the next steamer.

Beth, thinking Grant dead, wanders despondently in a park, followed by Sonia and her henchman. She attempts to commit suicide in the lake, when the reflection from the water shows her that the confession has not disappeared from her forehead, but she is saved and captured by Sonia.

Grant reads in a newspaper of the sinking of the steamer in which Zan has sailed, but the list of fatalities includes Zan's name only and not that of Beth and Sonia. Grant believes, therefore, that Beth is being held captive by Sonia and sets detectives on her trail. He himself organizes a salvage expedition and goes to the scene of the wreckage to recover the dagger from the sea, but, unknown to him, his crew is composed of Zan in disguise and some of his henchmen, all of whom had escaped from the wreckage.

Grant and Zan dive down into the sea, Zan wearing a faulty diver's suit intended for Grant. There is a fight for the dagger below sea and Zan's air hose breaks, but Grant, ripping open his diver's suit, saves Zan, bringing him to the surface, but drops the dagger, which falls to the bottom of the sea again. Grant, despite the warnings of all, dives to the bottom of the sea again after the dagger, this time without a diver's suit, since both are out of commission. He finds the dagger, but is surrounded and attacked by a school of great sharks. A desperate battle with these sea monsters is begun, with Grant apparently doomed to a horrible fate.

"Shipwrecked Among CANNIBALS"

Five-Reel Special

WILLIAM F. ALDER and Edward Laemmle, two Universal cameramen, set out on an expedition to the Orient and the South Seas to film unusual scenes and peoples. They arrive in Siam and take part in a native tiger hunt in which Alder narrowly escapes death when attacked by the tiger as he films the charging beast.

From Siam they go to Meraukee, a Dutch trading port, and set sail along the southern New Guinea coast. They are shipwrecked and forced to land on a cannibal coast. They placate the cannibals, Kia Kias, with trinkets and gifts of tobacco.

The cannibals are photographed doing their war dances, in their homes, preparing for the chase and for the war-path, and in their pasttimes.

One of the savages dies. The tribe thinks the camera-men are to blame. That night a terrific storm sweeps over the island, destroying the village. This also is blamed upon the intruders. The witch-women spur the warriors into preparing for a head-dance, the orgie which precedes the head-dance and human sacrifice.

Little suspecting their danger, the camera-men ask for permission to film the spectacle. They are rebuffed, but manage to photograph the weird dance from a camouflaged position. They are discovered and chased to the beach.

A Dutch rescuing party, sent out because of the expedition's long absence, arrives opportunely and repulses the cannibals in the nick of time. Peace is made between the adventurers and the savages, and the home journey is made without mishap.

After screening "The Devil's Passkey" I am most anxious to express to you my great enthusiasm for Erich Von Stroheim's Master-production. Not only do I think that this, his second picture, its better than the first but I am frank to say I believe it to be a master picture of all past and recent pictures. The story is handled in the picture unusually well. Every detail has been carefully noted so that not a single thought is missing to do its part in entertaining. Each member of the cast seems to have been born for the role. I am sure that no exhibitor will make a mistake in going strong on this really massive production. THE STORY

JOE BLYNN and William Wilson are owners of the plumbing shop in the village of Olmford. Joe and Will are balancing their books for the past year, when they are interrupted by Samuel Topp, the baker, a criminally inquisitive soul, who attempts to find out just how much the two young men have made. Topp is disposed of, and Joe announces with glee that they have cleared twenty-two hundred dollars each out of their business. The news does not seem to fill Will with joy. He is looking at the palatial home home of Hoban, the millionaire, and he informs Joe that they should have the same chance to make money that Hoban has. Joe is engaged to marry Mary Foster, and will is pledged to Kate Beard. They are pretty village girls. They come to to the shop, and Joe tells them how Blynn and Wilson are on the road to success. Will is still peevish. When the girls are gone Hoban drives up to the shop. He tells the boys that a pipe has burst in his home and the place is being flooded. After some argument, Joe and Will agree to go and fix the pipe. Hoban drives them in his car. There are two men on the Hoban lawn and two beautiful girls. The girls attract the attention of Will.

While the pipe is being repaired Will gives Joe the benefit of his views. He is overheard by Hoban, who, far from being displeased, tells the boys he will give them a chance to become millionaires. Joe begs Will to leave the place at once as he fears a trap. Will is in his element, however. Hoban calls a valet and has the boys dressed in suits of his two sons, who are in Europe. Hoban then turns them over to the two young ladies, who proceed to vamp them. Will falls at once for Gertrude Parker, but Joe, thinking of Mary, does not respond to the advances of Ethelyn Fenelon, niece and daughter respectively of Hoban's two friends. Mary and Kate hear that the boys are stopping with Hoban. They come to the place as maids and seek an opportunity to vent their scorn upon Will and Joe. Hoban makes Will president and Joe treasurer of the Sandia Copper Co. He has them sign papers and letters, and upon the arrival of Federal officers, who are after Parker and Fenelon, Will and Joe are taken into custody instead. The boys ask leave to change their clothes, and lock the Federal men in the bathroom while they make their escape. They cannot leave the grounds, however, as the place is surrounded by the robust male relatives of Mary and Kate, who are bent on vengeance. Fenelon and Parker attempt to make their getaway. Will decides to go back to the house and kill Hoban. He attacks Hoban and makes him explain. Hoban is overheard by the Federal officers, who have captured Parker and Fenelon. The villagers attack the house, and there is a merry fight. Later in the hospital Will and Joe explain to Kate and Mary.

ADVANCE STORY

When "Once a Plumber——" comes to the —— Theatre on ——, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will be seen in the overalls of honest toil. They are two plumbers who are anxious to find a quicker way of getting rich than by plumbing (if such is possible). They think they find it when they are elected president and secretary of a copper mining company. They find that the duties of the president and secretary consist of wearing jazzy sport clothes, drinking lots of gin rickeys and being vamped by a duo of pleasing experts. A little later some detectives arrive, and they find that another of their duties is to be the goats for the fraudulent promoters of a fake company. Instead of finding a quick way to get in a palace, they find it a quick way to get in jail.

"Once a Plumber——" is Lyons and Moran's third big comedy feature for Universal. Like the first one, "Everything but the Truth," it was written by Edgar Franklin. The scenario is by C. B. Hoadley, while Lyons and Moran are their own directors.

The comedy team has four pulchritudinous leading ladies in the delectable persons of Lillian Hackett, Edna Mae Wilson, Jane Elliott and Ethel Ritchie. Important comedy parts are played by George B. Williams, Sidney Deane and Jeff Osborne.

WELL-KNOWN ACTRESSES IN CAST OF "ONCE A PLUMBER—"

Of the four leading ladies in support of Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in their comedy feature, "Once a Plumber——," now on view at the —— Theatre, there are two who have gained considerable prominence on the dramatic stage.

Edna Mae Wilson, who plays opposite Lee Moran in the role of the village maiden, made her debut in films at the age of three in D. W. Griffith's company presenting "The Ruling Passion." At the age of four she made her first stage appearance in "The Sign of the Rose," in which she played the child opposite George Beban. She then supported Arnold Daly in "The Things That Count," the title role in "The Bachelor's Baby" with Francis Wilson, Claudia in "The Prince Chap," and was selected to play Puck in Reginald Pole's London production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," at the age of eight.

Jane Elliott, who plays opposite Eddie Lyons, made her stage debut in the La Salle Theatre musical comedies in Chicago. She then appeared in "Nobody Home," and played the roles of Frivolity, Beauty and Passion for three seasons in "Experience." She also played in such New York successes as "The Wanderer" and "Chu Chin Chow." Her role in "Once a Plumber——" is her first on the screen.

There are two other talented leading ladies in support of Eddie and Lee. Ethel Ritchie, who plays a vampish person, has appeared in a number of Universal features, especially in the role of the favorite wife of the sheik in "The Virgin of Stamboul." Lillian Hackett, who plays the role of Eddie Lyon's country sweetheart, is also well known to the majority of screen fans.

THEY GET THEM FIGHTING AS WELL AS LAUGHING

On a warm day last July Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran were staging a lively fight for one of the finishing scenes of their comedy feature, "Once a Plumber——," announced for next ——at the —— Theatre. Some fifty or sixty people were to take part in this free-for-all battle. The scene was a millionaire's mansion; Eddie and Lee were appearing as two young plumbers masquerading as plutocrats, and the combatants were the outraged populace of a small town intent on avenging an assumed insult to its municipal dignity.

On that same afternoon William J. Burns, famous detective, passing through Los Angeles, expressed a desire to visit the studios at Universal City, and he was accompanied to the film capital by George K. Home, chief of police of Los Angeles, and Stephen A. Connell of the United States Department of Justice. The distinguished visitors were being shown about the vast picture plant by an attendant, and finally they were led to the stage where Lyons and Moran were staging their private war. From within the enclosure came the din of battle. Faces were being punched, teeth were being loosened, ribs were being staved in. The sumptuous furnishings of a millionaire's drawing-room were being reduced to shreds and kindling wood.

The instincts of the guardians of the law quickly asserted themselves. The king of detectives and the chief of police rushed on the set, threw themselves in the midst of the fracas and succeedd in spoiling several hundred feet of realistic film. Then the visitors were introduced to Lyons and Moran, enjoyed a hearty laugh and watched as non-combatants while the scene was retaken.

NOTES—FOR "ONCE A PLUMBER—"

Screen history records no more emphatic success than the comedy features recently produced by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. Their first production, "Everything But The Truth," was a riot; their second feature, "La La Lucille," was even better, and their third comedy, "Once a Plumber," which is coming to the —— theatre ——, is said to be the funniest farce they have yet produced.

Edgar Franklin, well-known magazine and screen humorist, who wrote "Everything but the Truth," Lyons and Moran's first big comedy feature, is also the author of "Once a Plumber——," the hilarious farce which these comedy stars have just finished and which will be shown at the —— Theatre on —. In this comedy Eddie and Lee appear as small town steam fitters who break into society.

The ordinary photoplay has but one leading feminine role, but there are four leading ladies in Lyons and Moran's latest comedy feature, "Once a Plumber——," which is announced for —— at the —— Theatre. Playing opposite Eddie Lyons are Lillian Hackett and Ethel Ritchie, while Edna Mae Wilson and Jane Elliott make love to Lee Moran.

In "Once a Plumber——," the comedy feature in which Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will appear at the —— Theatre next ——, the comedy stars are called upon to repair a burst water pipe in full view of the audience. Eddie and Lee spent several days with the chief plumber at Universal City, who finally declared them eligible to membership in the steam fitters union.

LYONS--

A Combinati

Pro

LEE MORAN

MOST people think that "stars" walk right into the studio and are "made" overnight. Naturally this does happen once in a while, but for the most part stardom, like everything else, is atttained by real honest endeavor, coupled, of course, with an amount of natural ability.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran are excellent examples of the persevering actors. Eight years ago they cast their lot with the movies, after a number of years of "legitimate" experience, and for most of that time they have been funmakers for Universal. They started in in an inconspicuous way to make comedies—one-reelers—and though they made folks laugh they were as earnest in their desire to provide good entertainment as they possibly could be. Naturally they progressed, and soon they were making two-reelers. Four hundred and sixty short comedies they had to their credit, when Universal rewarded them with a long-time contract to make five-reelers. That indeed was a momentous day for screendom, for Lyons and Moran kept right on persevering, and the several five-reel comedies that they have produced are among the most excellent light entertainment which the movie world has this year offered its public. "Everything but the Truth" was a winner, acclaimed so by everybody; but "La La Lucille" was a KNOCKOUT. And now there is "Once a Plumber," threatening to outrival them all.

And what is more, Lyons-Moran are versatile in other branches of their "game" besides acting. They are the capable directors of their own pictures; they cut them and title them and help edit them, and they have written dozens of scenarios. And many a well-known film actress to-day owes a good bit of her success to the excellent training she received in the Lyons-Moran comedies, with Lyons and Moran always there to advise and correct and encourage. In fact, it is almost a password at Universal City, when an actress throws her lot in with the funmakers, that eventual stardom will come her way. Priscilla Dean was a member of their comedy companies, as was Edith Roberts, both of them real luminaries of the screen to-day, and Mildred Moore, leading woman with Art Acord in the thrilling serial, "The Moon Riders," owes much of her progress to "the boys." And Universal's newest luminary, Gladys Walton, who will soon be starred in an enchanting picture called "Pink Tights," got her big chance when "the boys" gave her an ingenue lead in "La La Lucille," and thus helped her on the way to success.

EDDIE LYONS

Illinois is the birthplace of both Eddie and Lee, and Illinois may well be proud of them. Big men they are, with never a squabble to dim the radiance of a beautiful friendship and comraderie. Big actors they are, persevering and progressive — full of PERSONALITY. They will be names to be reckoned with in the future, in the very near future, and Universal is backing them up with the very best that there is to be had in the way of light comedies with force and snap.

THE headline means exactly what it says. Here is a picture on which you can bet your bottom dollar, mortgage your theatre, hock the flivver and borrow a few on the old home.

Here is a picture—not a great, big, brass-band super-production but just a simple, human story perfectly produced—which has in it every single thing that old showmen know is sure to make for the very widest popularity.

We're not going to tell you its story. We're simply going to make a statement and let it stand, confident that you realize what it means to us to give our iron-clad guarantee to an unheralded picture which is only one in a series. We are going to say that never—get that? never—in the whole story of Universal have we made a picture which, we felt, was so absolutely certain to please every soul in every audience everywhere it is shown.

"PINK TIGHTS," is not a sensational picture. It's something better than that. It's a clean, wholesome, small-town circus drama packed with heart-throbs, smiles and thrills —a little world-beater of a human document just cram-jam full of life and love and tears and laughter. Take this from us—if "PINK TIGHTS" doesn't make good with you and everybody in your house to the very limit we'll sell Universal City and go out of business. And our name goes right smack at the bottom of this statement.

Who Wants To "Get In" That You Know?

The Dramatic Mirror, a screen and stage weekly, is conducting a beauty and ambition contest in conjunction with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and to the three girls who prove winners contracts are guaranteed to appear in Universal pictures at Universal City, California, with traveling expenses from their home to Universal City. In addition there are many other handsome prizes for those not among the first three but receiving a certain amount of votes. The judges will be Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr., producer of "The Follies"; Coles Phillips, famous for his pictures of beautiful girls; Frank Mayo, the handsome Universal star, and H. A. Wyckoff, Pres. of Dramatic Mirror.

This contest should prove an excellent opportunity for girls who feel that the screen is their proper medium. It is through just such a contest as this that Virginia Faire, leading lady of the recent Universal Special Attraction, "Under Northern Lights," was introduced to moviegoers, and there are numerous other girls in filmdom who "got in" in just that way. Gertrude Olmstead, who will soon be seen in Universal pictures, is also a "winner" of a beauty contest, and she, like Virginia Faire, will be given all possible encouragement by the Company's staff.

There are numerous regulations connected with the contest, and all information can best be had by applying to The Dramatic Mirror, 133 West 44th Street, New York City. The contest starts immediately.

Universal is very favorably inclined towards contests of this sort, for it feels that there are numerous attractive girls who would make excellent screen material, and there is no more effective way of getting in touch with them than through such a medium, and no more just way of making decisions as to their respective possibilities, for the judges are men of long and wide experience in work along these lines.

A "Jewel" That Shines With Undimmed Brilliancy

Universal officials are still a little dazed by the phenomenal success of "The Virgin of Stamboul." Letters and telegrams of praise and congratulation continue to pour in from exhibitors in such a constant stream that Universal has not had time to accept the picture's popularity as a matter of course and say "We told you so."

N. Rosen of the Park Theatre, Pittsburgh, has written in to the Universal home office to state that he made 50 per cent. more money with "The Virgin of Stamboul" than with any other picture he ever played, and he says he runs the largest productions produced.

Earle W. Forsythe of the Star Theatre, Canonsburg, Pa., wrote in, loudly calling for more pictures like the big Oriental photoplay. He explained that Canonsburg is a small town, but that no picture is too big for him to play. He asked for a return engagement for the Priscilla Dean picture.

From the Liberty Theatre in Sacramento, California, and the New Garrick, Minneapolis, have come word that "The Virgin of Stamboul" opened in these cities in competition with the season's greatest activity on the part of Old Sol. The high-flying mercury, however, had no effect on the crowds that poured into the two playhouses where the big Universal-Jewel production was being shown.

Just:
"ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN"

In Rockingham, N. C., the picture played date and date with a heavy rainstorm and came out in the lead. W. Atkinson, manager of the theatre in that place, sent word that "The Virgin of Stamboul" was by far the best picture that ever had been shown there.

"Another "Virgin" booster was Horace W. Kruse, manager of the Welfare Department of the St. Louis, Rocky Mountain and Pacific Company, who booked it for all of that company's construction camps in the Southwest.

JOE MARTIN

JOE MARTIN and his talented wife have made some mighty good comedies in the past, but Joe certainly has outdone himself in his latest. Honestly, this one is so good that all of the usual descriptions sound weak and flat in trying to describe it. Mr. Exhibitor, this one has a comedy wallop that's going to tip the scales over almost any feature! Book it—laugh—and grow fat in the box office!

The Plunge into the Icy Lake

HERE is a new series of sterling short subjects that must, by the very virtue of their entertainment value, leap into instant popularity. They are a real find for the man who wants to lend a balance to his show by presenting two-reelers of feature quality.

Clean, strong and vigorous, these sweeping two-reelers fairly breathe the spirit of romance and adventure in the Great Outdoors. You know yourself how popular tales of the Northwest Mounted Police always have been. And here are six such stories filmed with a virile action and punch that make them stand out as the finest examples of short screen entertainment.

There's a refreshing difference about this series. The pictures are not "Westerns" in the ordinarily accepted sense. Somehow the clean-limbed sons of the forest seem more likeable; there is an almost noble appeal about the scenic playground of the Gods that lies in Northwest America. And beautiful crystallline photography helps makes these fast-moving little dramas truly appealing pictures of the deeds of strong men and loyal women in a real man's country.

As Wid's so truly says, "Northwestern two-reelers are not very plentiful at present, but a few of the type of those being turned out by Universal by Jacques Jaccard will always be welcomed by picture patrons." Let your convictions be your guide. Act NOW.

Help the Girl Contestants of Your Town—and They'll Help You!

In its issue of August 7th, THE DRAMATIC MIRROR, the nationally known screen-and-stage weekly, opened in conjunction with Universal, a great country-wide Subscription Contest—which will result in the selection of three of the winning girl contestants for engagement by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company to appear in its productions at a generous salary.

A GREAT OFFER

In addition to the above offer of the UNIVERSAL to engage three of the winners of this Contest, The DRAMATIC MIRROR will present every girl securing more than a certain number of subscriptions with a strand of beautiful Nataline pearls, whose regular value is $25.00 in any retail jewelry store. Thus, every contestant who puts forth a reasonable amount of effort in advancing the circulation of this prominent screen-and-stage publication is sure of a return in addition to her commission on the subscriptions secured, while three of the winners will win, through their beauty and natural talent, opportunity to appear in UNIVERSAL pictures.

THEY CAN'T LOSE!

Here, at last, is the right kind of a contest—one in which every girl who really works, will win a prize—and here, as you, yourself, will be the first to see, is a contest to which you can lend your aid and know that every bit of encouragement you give will come back to you like bread on the waters in the form of increased interest in moving pictures and in your theatre.

HOW TO HELP YOURSELF BY HELPING THEM

Write today to The DRAMATIC MIRROR, 133 West 44th St., New York City for full particulars. Without a doubt, a great many ways of utilizing this contest will immediately suggest themselves to yourself and to your publicity man. One of the first will be the use of a slide encouraging girls who are anxious to make money, or secure a strand of pearls, or appear in UNIVERSAL productions, to write The DRAMATIC MIRROR at the above address and secure the particulars of the Subscription Contest. We make no further suggestions for the reason that the encouragement of this Contest is a purely local proposition and should be handled in those ways best suited to your own community.

FFERENT kinds of pictures need different kinds of exploitation. You wouldn't circus a society drama written around a sweet young thing but, by the same reasoning, you wouldn't exploit a picture of the most ferocious savages ever known with an engraved card of invitation. "SHIPWRECKED AMONG CANNIBALS" is a sensational picture if there ever was one and you need to tell the world just how sensational it is. You can go the limit with adjectives but adjectives alone won't do it justice. That's why we had these big oil paintings made—to give every passer-by a true idea of exactly what they'll see inside. Do they pull? We'll say they do!

TWO TO THREE!

"Thanks for your co-operation. The house record on 'SHIPWRECKED' went sky-high! I did more business on the two days I played the Cannibal picture than I ever did on the biggest pictures that I have played for three days, at other tmes. And I did this big business at advanced admission, too."

A "Scoop" That Every Exhibitor Can Cash On

FOR the first time in history, moving pictures have been taken of the Pope Benedict XV, the head of the Roman Catholic Church. Remarkable "shots" of the pontiff in his famous home, the Vatican, and in the grounds and chapels nearby, recently were taken by Captain Ariel Varges, dean of camera-men, and now the general European representative of the International News. The films were rushed to this country and have just arrived, it is announced by Universal, through which the International News Reels are released.

The first and exclusive pictures of the Pope will be released without delay, in two installments, of which the first has been incorporated in International News No. 61, released September 14th. Additional views of the supreme prelate will be included in International News Reel No. 62, released several days later.

The obtainment of these pictures marks one of the greatest feats in the history of film news. It will serve to put the news reel on a higher plane than ever before, as it not only marks the screen introduction of the most beloved and most notable Church dignitary in the world, but it marks the breaking of an age-old precedent which heretofore has kept the head of the Roman Catholic Church from in front of the moving picture camera's eye.

For many months International had striven to unbar the way into the Vatican for its camera men. E. B. Hatrick, general news manager of the International Film Service Company, finally saw his chance when it was announced that unusual honors would be accorded to Americans at the Vatican upon the arrival and presentation of the Knights of Columbus delegation visiting Europe.

After considerable parleying with James A. Flaherty, Supreme Knight for the Knights of Columbus, and John Kennedy, general publicity representative of the K. of C., Hatrick gained the attention of the Vatican and won the coveted privilege.

International at once put its most trusted foreign representative on the job; Captain Varges already was known as the most intrepid and successful camera-man in the game. World famous as a globe-trotter and camera-man, he had filmed the most famous people in the world, including the King and Queen of Belgium, during the war, the rulers of France and England, the present rulers of Germany, an dalso the Russian dictators, Lenine and Trotsky.

The International moving pictures show the Knights of Columbus arriving at the Vatican headed by Supreme Knight Flaherty and Edward L. Hearn. The Knights also are shown at St. Peter's. Then the interior of the sacred chapel of Our Lady of Lourdes was taken—the first pictures ever filmed of that holy spot. The arrival of the celebrated Vatican Choir was caught by the camera.

The arrival of the Pope with all the ceremony of the occasion next came before the camera and the procedure of investing the Holy Father with his sacred vestments. There followed the most sacred scene ever filmed—the celebration of Mass by the Pope himself. After the religious rites pertinent to the occasion, the Pope smilingly posed for Captain Varges, permitting excellent close-ups of himself surrounded by some of his Cardinals, by Supreme Knight Flaherty and the other Knights. Scenes of the Pope's historic Swiss guards also are included in the International prize.

This recent concession on the part of Pope Benedict to the motion picture world, a great step in the relationship between the Pope and his people, is in line with the liberal views of the present Pontiff. Almost from the time he was elevated, shortly after the beginning of the great war, he became noted for the far-sightedness and modern view-point of his edicts.

Two-Reel Century Comedy

Featuring

BROWNIE, THE WONDER DOG

MR. RYE still retained his bottle habit of baby days, but the contents were a little bit stronger than milk. His wife spent lonely nights waiting up until all hours for hubby to come home. Their dog, Brownie, escorted his master on his wild escapades and usually smuggled his master into bed before the wife discovered his return. Mr. Rock, their next door neighbor also suffered from that same affliction, but his wife was a modern "Tarzan" and her hubby quivered and shrunk when he entered the house. His dog was not as clever as the Rye dog—he usually made some noise and awoke Mrs. Rock—then the fun began—bricka-brac, rolling pins, etc., were in flying order for quite a while until friend hubby was rocked to sleep with some missile.

Messrs. Rock and Rye were "boozem" friends. They start off to business one morning, but stray to the roof of a nearby house for a little nip —the nip was not sufficient, so they seclude themselves in an empty house where they find a perfectly lovely "still." However, the Federal agent has seen them enter and calls for the reserves, thinking Rock and Rye owned the still and the wives also arrive on the scene. In the meantime, the dog-catchers are after Brownie who eludes them and follows his master. His master ties him to the gate of the empty house while he goes inside. The dog catcher discovers the dog; the dog makes a strenuous effort to get away and pulls the front side of the house with him. A rip-roaring hilarious chase follows.

Finally husbands and wives make up and promise to be good to one another, while Brownie looks on with a wise old grin.

Two Reel Western Drama

CAST

'Happy" Newton	Hoot Gibson
Steve (Yellow Slicker)	Jim Corey
June Burton	Dorothy Wood
Sheriff	Harry Jackson
Rawhide Burton	Chick Morrison

"HAPPY" NEWTON, a good-natured "boomer" cowpuncher, leaves the range and heads West. He fall in with a pair of cowpunchers, and, succumbing to his usual weakness, gambling, he loses his hat, shirt, horse and saddle.

In the meantime the stage has been robbed by the Yellow Slicker, so-called because of the oilskin garment he wears. After robbing the stage, the Yellow Sticker betakes himself to an isolated cabin, where he leaves his hat, slicker and horse and hurries for the Burton ranch, where, as a cover for his outlawry, he is employed as foreman.

Happy, hatless, coatless and horseless, passes the outlaw's cabin, where he borrows the slicker, hat and horse, leaving a note behind to explain. Naturally, in town, he is taken for the Yellow Slicker and he has to beat a retreat, and, throwing his dice, he decides with their help on the Burton ranch. There things are in bad shape. June, the daughter, is running the ranch for her invalided father. They owe money to Steve Irons (really the Yellow Slicker), and he demands immediate payment or he will foreclose. The brokers have disappointed June, and the money will not arrive until a later stage, before which time Steve has threatened to foreclose. And to make matters worse, Steve insists on marrying June, but is rebuffed.

In applying for work at the ranch, June assumes that Happy is the Slicker and induces him to hold up the midnight stage so that she can get the money to meet her debt. Happy decides to do so, but Steve interferes, having overheard the plan. However, Happy makes a getaway, pursued by the sheriff's posse, which has been directed by Steve, but the girl, by a clever ruse, leads the posse finally in the opposite direction. She loses the posse and is imprisoned by Steve in his cabin. Steve starts out then to grab the midnight stage, but Happy has already accomplished the feat and makes for the cabin. Inside he is captured by Steve. Finally he is taken by the posse. He tries to tell his story, but is not believed. Fortunately, he remembers the note he left in the cabin which provides his alibi.

Who is the Slicker, however? Happy gets a flash in noting Steve's uneasiness, and taking out his trustworthy dice, he rolls them to decide whether Steve is the Slicker. They tell him the truth; there is a fight, and some of the stuff lost on the earlier stage which Steve had held up is uncovered.

The posse leaves with Steve, and Happy is blissful in the thought that with his reward money he can buy an interest in the Burton ranch and be near the dearest girl in the world —June.

Sonia	Ruth Royce
Beth	Thelma Percy

GRANT is victor in his undersea battle with the sharks and reaches the surface with the dagger. But on the raft he is overpowered by Zan and his men, robbed of the dagger (from which, however, he has secretly extracted the vial of magic fluid) and cast adrift on the sea. The captain of the tug, who has not witnessed Zan's villainy, believes Grant the victim of sharks and returns to port.

In Los Angeles, the first mate, unsatisfied with his pay, robs Zan of the dagger. Sonia, meantime, has been holding Beth Latimer a prisoner. By means of mysticism, Sonia locates Zan and they get together again, reconciled, still holding Beth prisoner. From a newspaper Sonia has left on the table, Beth learns Grant is alive, but she knows nothing beyond his departure on the salvage expedition, in quest of the dagger. Zan sends forth his men to comb the city for the first mate.

Meantime, Grant has drifted to an unchartered smugglers' island off the coast of California. Jean, now a member of the smugglers' band, recognizes him. Grant is seized as a spy. Determined to destroy him for their own protection, the smugglers carry him into the jungle, tie him to the limb of a tree, and leave him a prey to the wild beasts at night. Grant is attacked by a leopard, but succeeds in freeing his hands and chokes it to death in a fight in which he hangs suspended from his feet from the tree limb. Getting his feet free, Grant seeks refuge in a cave, only to be attacked by a great lion.

The stabbing tongues of the puritanical prudes of Pleasantown wagged viciously when they saw the circus girl in tights. They said that such a woman was eternally damned. They demanded of the young preacher that he make the Sheriff run her out of town.

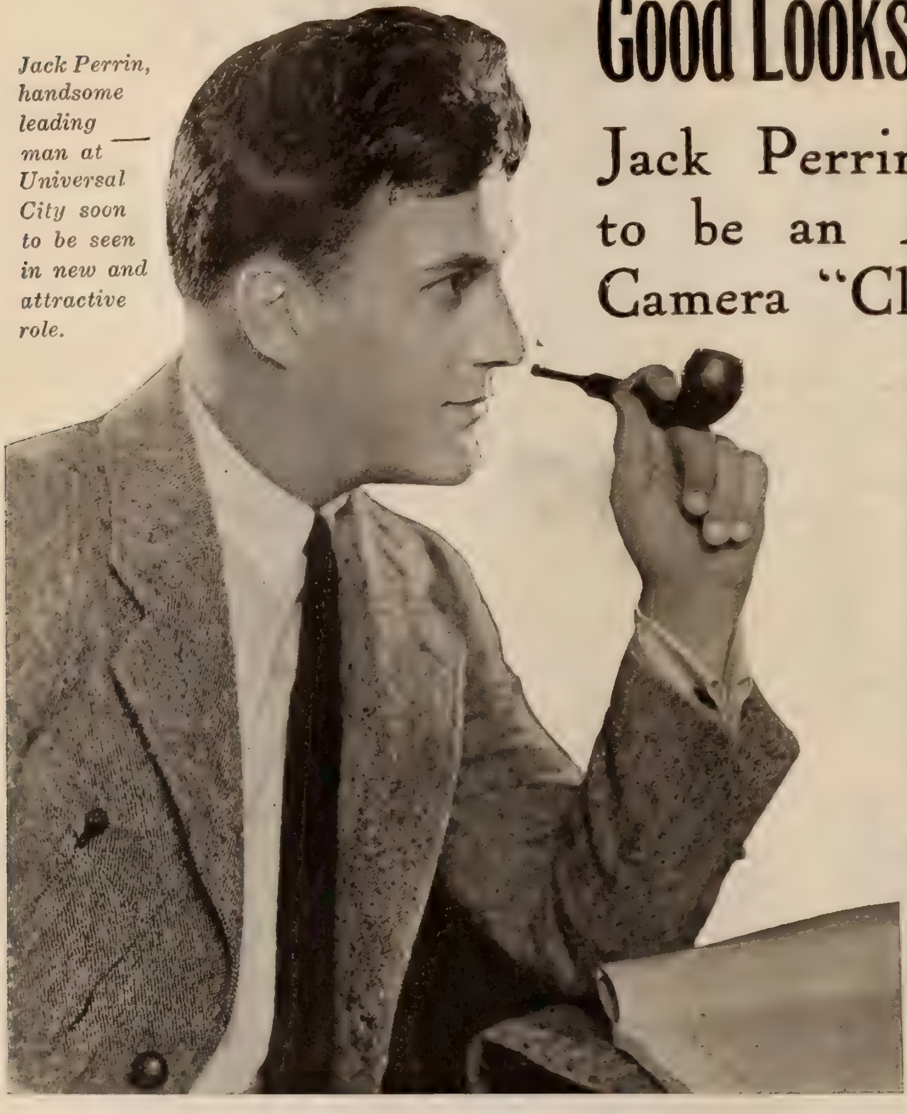
nd JACK PERRIN

from a Story by J.U. Geisy ◆

Good Looks Change Career

Jack Perrin never wanted to be an Actor, but the Camera "Claimed" Him before he had a chance to escape



Jack Perrin, handsome leading man at Universal City soon to be seen in new and attractive role.

BACK in Three Rivers, Michigan, a small boy once dreamed about being a scenario writer and turning out "thrillers" for the screen. He continued to dream about it when he was graduated from school and became a reporter on a small town newspaper, and the dream was so persistent that he finally chucked up his job and betook himself to California. He landed at Universal City safely and soundly, and he began to try to write scenarios. He didn't try very long, however, for in the years that he had been dreaming about it he had grown into a six-footer, handsome and strong, and the very first director that noticed him pounced on him as a fine type for the movies. So Jack, much against his will, became an actor, and an actor he remains and probably will remain for some time to come, for he has proven that he has a goodly share of ability as well as good looks.

Like a good many others, Jack started in in two-reelers of the Western kind, but when a fellow is handsome and well built and athletic and can act well in addition, some serial is bound to grab him sooner or later, and before Jack Perrin could realize it, he was co-starring with Kathleen O'Connor in that daring serial, "The Lion Man." Then the rough and tumble stuff was discarded, and Jack became a real leading man.

Jack Perrin has proven a splendid foil to two very pretty little stars recently. Towering several heads above her, he made charming love to piquant Edith Roberts in "The Adorable Savage," her last starring vehicle, in which Jack was featured with her. And more recently he played the gentle but virile minister who loved but lost the little circus girl of "Pink Tights," a role so spiritedly played by petite Gladys Walton, a charming and vivacious newcomer in the ranks of Universal's stars. And now comes the news that Jack is again to be associated with beauty, for he will play opposite Eva Novak in "Out of the Sunset." This time he will play the role of an aviator, and as Jack learned flying while in the army and still keeps in practice at one of the Los Angeles aviation fields, he will fit quite naturally into the role.

Many a man envies Jack Perrin, for after spending his working hours in association with such pretty girls as Kathleen O'Connor, Edith Roberts, Gladys Walton and Eva Novak, Jack goes home to an equally pretty little wife. For Mrs. Perrin is no other than Josephine Hill, who used to be a Universal leading ladyette and graduated into five-reelers when she supported Frank Mayo in "Burnt Wings." Their marriage was a recent event and was a culmination of a pretty romance which originated in Universal City.

"Handsome Jack Perrin" ought not to regret that fate twisted his plans and made him an actor, for success has been his and will continue to be his, judging from the way in which his art is growing.

Ethel Ritchie adds a New Type to Her Delightful Impersonations.

Charming Actress Now "Vamps" Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

Four views of Ethel Ritchie, erstwhile cowgirls, now "vamping" merrily at Universal City.

NOT so long ago Ethel Ritchie, arrayed in beads, spangles and Oriental silks, "hoolo-hoolad" for her lord and master, the sheik, in the big Jewel feature, "The Virgin of Stamboul," starring Priscilla Dean. For Ethel was the sheik's favorite wife, and as such it behooved her to entertain him and keep alive his preference for her. Ethel played the role so well and looked so charming that favorable notices poured in on her from all sides.

It was a long jump from a sheik's wife to the corduroy breeches and khaki shirt of a frontier maid, but Ethel took the jump neatly and deftly when she was engaged to play the feminine lead in two Western dramas of the rapid-action variety, directed by Jack Ford.

And now Ethel "has gone and done it," like so many others, and is busily using her alluring graces to "vamp" Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in their latest comedy, "Once a Plumber——." She turns the boys' heads to such a degree that they entirely forget the village belles to whom they have plighted their troth and are quite ready to fall into the trap set for them by the predatory millionaire. All of which proves what a versatile and accomplished young lady Ethel really is.

But what makes Ethel Ritchie a jewel among vampires is the fact that she is so unlike the part she plays on the screen. She is a Los Angeles girl who looks upon acting simply as a profession. She has no illusions and little temperament and uses her income to support herself and her mother in a comfortable Hollywood bungalow and to educate a younger sister. Off the screen Ethel regards a cigarette as a purely masculine adornment and a cocktail as a thing forbidden.

Ethel has brown eyes and hair, is a trifle over medium height and just old enough to vote at the next election. If she ever decides to run for an office herself it is certain that she will receive the vote of the masculine portion of her district.

THE STORY

MAZIE DARNTON, otherwise known as Mademoiselle Gabrielle Saint Simon, "Queen of the Air," hits Pleasantown, Pa., with a circus. Her act is a thrilling ascent in a balloon, from which she jumps through the clouds in a parachute. Jerry McKeen attempts to get her to marry him and give up her dangerous work, but she is not quite ready. However, Jerry gets a marriage license. Bullato, the strong man, makes love to Mazie, but she repulses him. Jerry beats up the strong man, but Mazie tells him that the man she marries must trust her.

Jonathan Meek is the pastor of Pleasantown's most orthodox church. He has just come out of divinity school and needs his job, but he knows little about life and less about women. His congregation agree that the circus is the invention of the devil and ask him to preach against it that Sunday. He sets about preparing a sermon, while the morals committee go forth to protest against Mazie appearing in tights. The committee is made up of the town undertaker, Smiley Sodd; his sister, Mrs. Shamfeller, and Mrs. Ezra Bump, whose small son Johnnie, is continually getting into trouble.

Mazie makes her flight in the balloon, and in making her descent lands on roof of Pastor Meek's house on the outskirts of the town, near Iverson's Pond. The balloon lands in the pond. Pastor Meek takes Mazie, including her tights, into the house, afraid that the neighbors might misunderstand if they saw him talking to her. And while Mazie is getting acquainted with the minister, the ladies' auxiliary is getting ready to descend upon Pastor Meek for an old-fashioned surprise party. The pastor rushes Mazie into his bedroom and gives her the key, explaining that if she is caught there he will be in disgrace and will lose his job. The surprise party gets into full swing, while Jerry McKeen drags the pond for Mazie's body.

Johnnie Bump discovers Mazie's presence in Pastor Meek's bedroom by looking through the keyhole. He tries to tell folks while the minister is making a speech, but no one will listen to him. He flees from the house and tries to tell Jerry about Mazie's whereabouts. But Jerry is beside himself with anxiety and will not listen. Finally Johnnie gets Bullato to listen to his story. Bullato sees Mazie through the window and determines to get his revenge. He tells Jerry his girl is in the minister's bedroom and puts the worst interpretation upon it. Jerry enters the house just as the minister is trying to smuggle Mazie out the front door. While the merrymakers are in the dining-room, Jerry faces Mazie, and for a moment it looks as though there would be a scene. But Mazie's better nature wins out. Though she is tempted to tell the small-town people what she thinks of them, she keeps her peace and simply says to Jerry: "Have you got the marriage license?"

Jerry gets the point. She is asking him to trust her—no matter what the evidence is against her. He does, and the minister agrees to mary them both then and there. The strong man, Bullato, is crestfallen. Mazie changes from her tights into a becoming dress, and she and Jerry are married. The surprise party turns into a wedding feast, and Mazie makes a big hit with the churchgoers. After she and Jerry have left several of them ask Pastor Meek to be easy on the circus people. They have found out that they are like real human beings and apt to be quite as good as other people. Pastor Meek changes his sermon from the harsh tirade he had planned to a preachment of the doctrine of brotherly love.

ADVANCE NOTES

The largest crowd ever assembled for "atmosphere" in a motion picture scene will be shown in "Pink Tights," the story of the big tops featuring Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin and announced for next —— at the —— Theatre. Some 8,000 people and more than a thousand automobiles are to be seen in the huge lot surrounding the circus and side show tent especially erected for this feature.

Little Reeves Eason, pronounced by many directors to be the cleverest four-year-old in the films, has the role of Johnnie Bump, who causes much of the trouble in the circus drama, "Pink Tights," which is to be shown at the —— Theatre on ——. The youngster has appeared in a number of prominent juvenile roles of late, but he is said to have virtually stepped out of a Briggs newspaper cartoon in his present part.

lton and Jack Perrin in “Pink Tights”

ADVANCE STORY

THE glitter and glamour of the circus, which appeal to children of all ages from six to sixty, are one reason for the more than ordinary interest displayed in the coming of “Pink Tights” to the —— Theatre on ——. For “Pink Tights” is a romance of the tented world, the tanbark ring and the “big top.” Its heroine is little Mazie Darnton, known on the billboards as Mlle. Gabrielle St. Simone, whose specialty is to ascend to the clouds in a balloon and then drop to the earth at the end of a parachute.

Mazie is sick of the life she is leading—the ceaseless travel, the dirt and the grime—and she longs to remain in one of the small towns through which they pass, dreaming of every village as clean, sweet and white.

When the circus reaches Pleasanton a few nrarow-minded women of the church rise in their wrath against the silken-tighted Mlle. Gabrielle as pictured on the bills and appeal to the young minister to forbid the exhibition. In the meanwhile Mazie, making her afternoon ascension, is carried far from the lot by a high wind, and in dropping from the balloon lands on the roof of the minister’s house. The parson stands the shock quite well, but, afraid of its effect on the militant women of his congregation, hides Mazie in his bedroom pending the departure of the committee.

The featured players in this story are Gladys Walton as Mazie and Jack Perrin as the minister, with other excellent roles in the hands of Dave Dyas, Stanton Heck, Dorothea Wolbert, Rosa Gore, Dan Crimmins, Breezy Eason, Jr., Martin Neilan and others. Reeves Eason directed the production.

ADVANCE NOTES

A balloon ascension and a parachute drop are features of “Pink Tights,” the circus story by J. U. Giesy, which is to be seen at the —— Theatre on ——. Gladys Walton, former comedy star, who appears as the fascinating little serial performer in this tale of the sawdust ring, is one of the most daring young athletes of the screen.

Stanton Heck, the physical marvel who has won as much praise and admiration for his striking physique as for his splendid acting on the stage and screen, has the role of Bullato, the strong man in the side show, in “Pink Tights,” the circus story booked for next —— at the —— Theatre . Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin have the featured roles in his photodrama.

FATHER AND SON BOTH HELP PUT OVER “PINK TIGHTS”

THERE is a unique combination of father and son in the production of “Pink Tights,” the romance of the tented shows in which Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin are featured and which is winning considerable favor at the —— Theatre.

Reeves Eason, well-known author, director and producer, under whose supervision “Pink Tights” was filmed, is the senior member of this combination, while his four-year-old son, Reeves, Jr., declared by many directors to be the cleverest youngster in the films, completes this union of cinematic geniuses.

Reeves Eason is essentially an “action director.” He has a knack of putting a terrific wallop in what would appear to be a tame situation and of quickening the pace of the ordinary slow movement. He has made a success of such punchy productions as “A Siren of the Slums,” “In Sheep’s Clothing, “Poets of the Peaks,” “Nine-Tenths of the Law,” “The Man Hunter,” “The Fighting Line,” “Jack of Hearts” and other virile dramas. He also directed two of Harry Carey’s recent features, “Human Stuff” and “Blue Streak McCoy.”

Under his father’s tutelage young Eason has developed a natural dramatic ability, backed by remarkable intelligence for one so young. In “Pink Tights” he has the role of small town youngster who might have stepped out of a “Days of Real Sport” cartoon drawn by Briggs.

THERE ARE LAUGHS AS WELL AS THRILLS IN “PINK TIGHTS”

WHILE “Pink Tights” the romance of the big show, in which Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin are co-featured in the respective roles of the circus performer and the minister, is essentially a drama of thrills and action, the author has provided an abundance of comedy relief, and the casting director at Universal City has seen to it that the principal roles are in able hands.

“Pink Tights” is to be shown at the —— Theatre next ——, and patrons of that playhouse may expect to laugh heartily as well as to enjoy some exciting drama.

The chief comedy roles are those of Mrs. Shamfeller the leader of the Ladies’ Aid Society, who heads the movement to keep the circus out of town; Mrs. Bump, another scandal monger of puritanical cast, and Smiley Dodd, the village undertaker, who can see virtue in nothing that does not send business in his direction.

To portray these roles, the director is fortunate enough to have the services of Rosa Gore, Dorothea Wolbert and Dan Crimmins, a trio of character funmakers which can always be depended upon for hilarious results. Each of these three comedy experts has had years of experience on the legitimate stage as well as on the screen, although this is the first time all three of them have had an opportunity to combine their skill at producing laughter.

Mazie’s legs—they upset a village, unsettled a minister and wrecked a circus.

Up in the pastor’s room was a girl in tights! It was a “Surprise Party” all right.

Out of the sky dropped a spangled seraphim of the circus—and the minister wrote no more that day.

Do ladies have legs? “No!” said they of Pleasanton. But Mazie made them change their minds.

“That brazen hussy should be run out of town!” But they gave her their prayers, their tears, and their love.

Beautiful daredevil, she envied—Oh so much!—The folks who lived in the white, cool, little villages the circus passed through.

Tights . . . ! They typified the abominations of Babylon and Burlique, but the pastor saw her crystal soul, not her body’s flimsy sheath.

He had never seen a lady’s legs before. Yet the minister felt no thrill when this lithe-limbed vision faced him, apparently out of the sky

Here's the Good Old Sob Stuff

NOWADAYS when a moving picture exhibitor is offered something for nothing he isn't interested at all, unless he's insulted. There ain't no such animule in our industry any more. And you, Mr. Exhibitor, are going to be asked to pay just as much for Universal's "Pink Tights" as the parson paid in this very beautiful story when he discovered a distressed pair of pink tights, symmetrically filled out, astride the ridgepole of his bachelor cottage. You may imagine that the devil was to pay because the cottage was in a staid New England village (which cost the Universal just $19,000 to build), and the pink tights belonged to a beautiful but unconventional girl of the circus, whose precarious salary depended upon the sensation she created by alighting via parachute from a balloon, and more especially on the softness of the spot on which she alighted. She certainly never picked out that puritan roof.

No, "Pink Tights" is far from "something for nothing." But the Universal is not going to charge one cent extra because of the expense of "Pink Tights" or of the wonderful humanness of the picture. A very inexpensive picture may be just as satisfactory to an audience as one that cost half a million, and a whole lot of exhibitors know that. Universal promised for this year eight pictures each from six stars and four specials. "Pink Tights" is one of those specials. But the Universal promised to put them in at the same figure as the best series pictures. So you will get a bargain and a very big one when you book this picture, and you are sure of one of the best pictures of the year. All the trade paper reviews declare it to be an exceptional picture in every way. Every exhibitor who has seen it has booked it without hesitation. It has that rare emotional quality that only half a dozen pictures a year contain, and you know from practical experience that when you find a picture with the good old sob stuff you shelve everything else and play it. There is no Priscilla Dean or Dorothy Phillips in it, but you just keep your eye on little Gladys Walton, who is the shapely lady who graces the pink tights. With another play like this, she will be made as a star. She first attracted attention in "La La Lucille," and Universal took a chance and put her in "Pink Tights." She filled the bill, as you will see. Jack Perrin and little Breezy Eason are chief supporters, and "Pop" Eason turned in a corking job of direction. If you don't play "Pink Tights" you're a sucker, that's all, and you don't know a good thing when you see it.t

Hoot Gibson Appears in Americanism Film

SOME months ago ex-Secretary Franklin K. Lane summoned the motion picture industry to a service which was gladly accepted. The summons came in the remarkable form of a joint request from the Senate and the House of Representatives, an honor which has seldom if ever been accorded this industry or any other.

Universal is now ready with its first picture in response to this summons for the work of Americanism. The picture is entitled "One Law for All," but don't get the idea that this picture is a propaganda picture or that it is going to be sold on the basis of Americanism alone.

It was specified that these pictures should be good westerns first of all, of the sort in which Hoot Gibson is starring, and that the Americanism message should be the subordinate theme in the story. On that basis Universal takes pleasure in introducing to exhibitors its first Americanism picture, "One Law for All," with Hoot Gibson, and guarantees it to be fully up to the standard of its other Hoot Gibson pictures.

It is an excellent Americanism picture and also a "crackerjack" western.

Universal has been particularly happy in discovering future Stars from the ranks of the Unknown

by

Adele D. Topper

THERE is no industry in the world in which progressiveness is so much an absolute necessity as the film industry. Universal grasped this fundamental principle in its early beginnings, and as a result it has always been on the lookout for the new—new devices of photography and lighting, new scenic effects, new stories, new writers and new actors. In fact, so far as the latter is concerned, there have been few organizations which can compete with Universal in the developing of screen personalities. This country is full of well-known motion picture actors who were at one time working and learning under the Universal banner, and Universal is still at it, finding and placing new artists.

Two charming pictures posed by Miss Armstrong, who will play the feminine lead in Von Stroheim's forthcoming stupendous production, "Foolish Wives."

There have been a number of very happy "finds" lately at Universal City. Take, for example, Marguerite Armstrong. A comparative newcomer to the screen, Erich Von Stroheim nevertheless recognized that there was more to Miss Armstrong than a pretty face and a wealth of golden hair, and assigned to her the role of leading lady in his next production, "Foolish Wives." This will be a picture on the scale of "The Devil's Passkey," dealing also with the gay life around Paris and Monte Carlo, and the sets that are being constructed are said to rival in gorgeousness and exquisiteness anything that Von Stroheim has done before. Which is saying a lot indeed. Von Stroheim will have all the familiar favorites with him again in this picture—Sam de Grasse, Rudolph Christians, Maude George and Mae Busch, and himself besides, but it is Miss Armstrong on whom all eyes are expectantly turned, for much is looked for from her.

But Von Stroheim isn't the only man in Universal City who has been making discoveries. Harry Carey says he has "gone and done it" too in the person of "Mignonne," the charming little girl who will be his leading lady in "Sundown Slim," his next release, and whose picture heads this article. "Mignonne" isn't her right name at all, but Harry is not going to let the secret out just yet. Although she is new to the screen, she has been a well-known figure on the speaking stage since early childhood. "Mignonne" is a lucky girl indeed, for she couldn't, according to critics, get a better picture in which to make her start than "Sundown Slim." It was written by H. H. Knibbs of "Overland Red" fame; its scenario was prepared by Carey himself; it was directed by the competent Val Paul; it was realistically filmed on the big Mojave desert, and its cast includes such excellent artists as Frances Conrad, Otto Meyers, Charles Le Moyne, Joseph Harris, Duke Lee and others. Carey himself is "bugs" about the picture, which is one of the "free air and open road" kind, and it has another one of those "human" roles for Carey in which he can make himself so endearing. Mignonne's screen start is an auspicious one; there is no doubt of that.

You Might Think ← This Was Douglas Fairbanks Unless You Looked At This →

"From a Bathing Girl to a Leading Lady"—no this is not the title of a new novel, but a brief summary of the career of Louise Lorraine, the spunky little lady who supported Elmo Lincoln in "Elmo the Fearless." Louise didn't have a "swelled head," but started right at the very bottom, appearing as a diving nymph in a number of water comedies. But when one has youth and ability and looks, and when one has plenty of "pep" and real "nerve," getting ahead seems to be self-evident, and Louise is now a full-fledged leading lady in serials and an excellent little foil for the mighty and masterful Elmo. Lincoln, by the way, is working like a Trojan on his next serial, "The Flaming Disk," and Louise is abetting him at every turn. "The Flaming Disk" will be a real thriller; it abounds in any number of feats of skill and daring, and it has in addition a corking good mystery story. This serial is being made under the skilful direction of Robert Hill, and in it Lincoln will prove his versatility by acting a dual role, and Louise will have any number of chances to show how really game a little girl, a girlish sort of a girl at that, can be.

But all the recent "finds" in Universal City have not been restricted to the feminine sex. Every once in a while some one remembers about casting an eagle eye out for a mere man, and that's probably how Dave Dyas whose pictures appear above got noticed. Dave could easily double for Douglas Fairbanks, and he is nimble like him too, for he used to be a star athlete back in the old University of California days, but on that fact Dave's sudden rise does not rest. For Dave can act, and he proved it in "Pink Tights," the unusual little story of circus life and a minister which will be released on October 4th. This picture stars Gladys Walton, also a recent "find," and handsome Jack Perrin, once a "find" himself, and although Dave isn't the star, he marries the leading lady in the end, so what more could he ask. "Pink Tights" is one of the prettiest stories told on the screen in many a day, and Reeves Eason, who directed it, has done his "darndest" to make the circus scenes as realistic as he possibly could. Little "Breezy" Eason, the four-year-old wonder child of the screen, has a prominent part in the picture which his father is directing.

There are also Eva Novak, whom Universal has just signed up to star in coming "special attractions," and Virginia Faire and Gertrude Olmstead, both winners of beauty contests. And there is Pansy Porter, who will support the dauntless Eddie Polo in his next serial, "The King of the Circus." And there will be many others, for Universal believes that the best way to get new stars is to find them, and after you've found them to keep them and to give them every opportunity for their talents.

See if you can pick out Miss Lorraine among the Century Bathing Beauties.

Star of "Pink Tights" Keeps in the Pink of Condition

Gladys Walton and Jack Perrin in an alluring scene in "Pink Tights."

DOESN'T the little lady on the camel's back look as if she were having the time of her young life?

Gladys Walton, who occupies the exalted position, admits that her role in "Pink Tights," the picture from which this scene is taken, provided her with loads of sport. For Gladys is an athletic little lady, who likes to run and hike and row and dive and do all sorts of stunts, and the atmosphere of a circus tent, which forms the background of the story, was very much to her liking indeed. Gladys considers health her best ally and believes that the fact that she has always kept in the "pink" of condition is largely responsible for her success in life.

Gladys has indeed met with success, although her life is only seventeen years young. She practically stepped right into leading roles, supporting Lyons and Moran in "La La Lucille," and Rudolph Christians and Lee Kohlmar in "The Secret Gift," and now she is the star in "Pink Tights," a picture well suited to her youthful vivacity and buoyancy.

Featured with Gladys Walton in this picture is Jack Perrin; and as Jack Perrin is a tall, handsome and immensely athletic gentleman, his wonderful personality is an excellent foil for that of the little star, who is so serious and earnest about the cultivation of her health and athletic tendencies.

California Show Place is Filmed by Lyons and Moran

THE palatial home and extensive ground of Arthur Letts, multi-millionaire merchant of Los Angeles, were secured by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran for a sequence of scenes in their latest comedy feature, "Once a Plumber——."

The Letts home is one of the show places of Southern California. It is located in the foothills of the Hollywood Mountains, and the grounds are about a half mile square.

On only one former occasion has this estate been used as a background for a motion picture, and Lyons and Moran were very fortunate in being allowed to use the place for an entire week. A lawn party was staged on the grounds for one of the scenes in the Universal comedy in which 200 people were used.

In "Once a Plumber——" Eddie and Lee appear as two young steam fitters who are called to the summer home of a financier to repair a leaky pipe while a week-end party is in progress. In order to shield two young friends of the millionaire, who have violated the blue sky law, Eddie and Lee are persuaded to pose in their place. Their plumbers' instincts, however, not only spoil the plans of their hosts, but save them from false arrest and imprisonment.

"The Adorable Savage" Hits The High Water Mark

"This is the most remarkable picture I have played. If there ever was a 'special' this is it. 'Great' is the word, take it from me. Boost it high! It is some picture."

NED PEDIGO,

"I can not help but writing you about the feature 'The Adorable Savage.' It is without question one of the best that it has ever been my pleasure to show. It surely was fine and if we can take it as a criterion of what the future 48 releases for this year will be I for one am mighty glad that I have got them contracted for. You are at liberty to use this letter if you so desire."

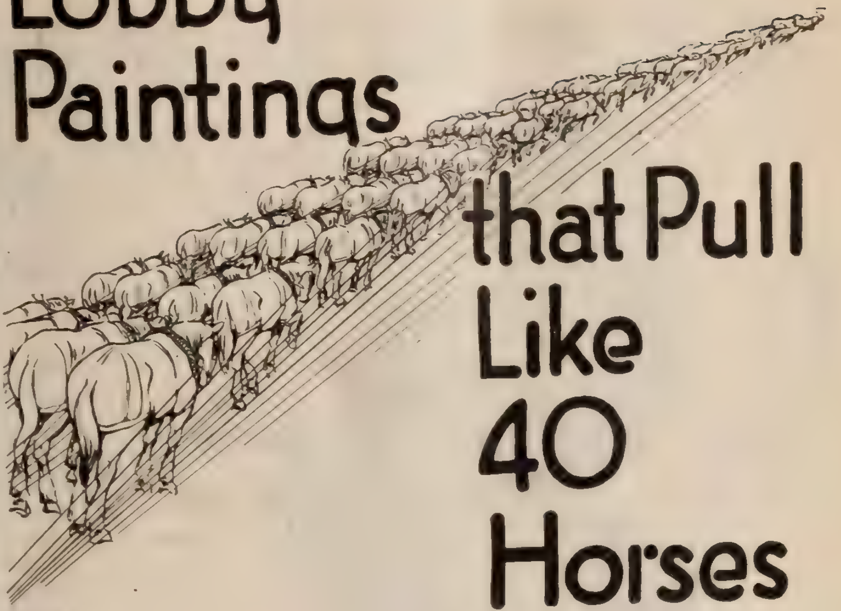
Lobby Paintings that Pull Like 40 Horses



THE thing that makes "SHIPWRECKED AMONG CANNIBALS" a sensation in the picture business—next to the picture itself—is it ability to pull in the money. We don't allude to its word-of-mouth advertising, because the picture takes care of itself in this regard—we refer to the big drag its lobby display has on the man in the street. This is because these big 20 x 68 oil paintings, and lettered panels with stills, show him a race of beings the like of which he did not know existed—and the figures are so big that he can't get away from them. They hit him in the eye!

Take our word for it—every single exhibitor who has used these paintings has absolutely cleaned up on this picture. See your exchange about them today—they are in no way offensive—and, goshallhemlock, how they do pull in the coin!

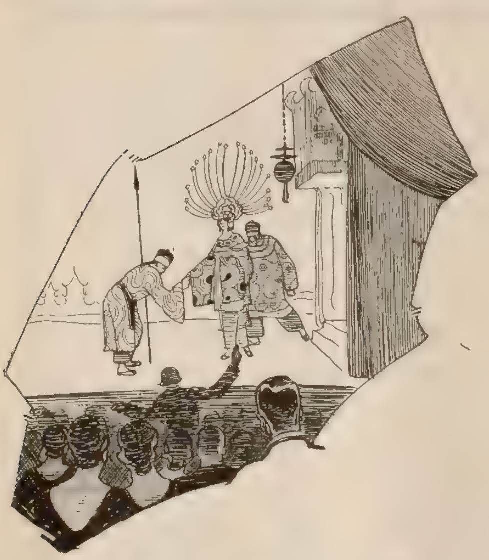
Read what the New York TIMES says

"IT is as a cinematician, a worker with moving pictures which are inherently and independently dramatic, that Mr. Von Stroheim is chiefly distinguished. He has realized that the substance of the photoplay is the dramatic motion picture, not the subtitle, nor the spectacular scene, nor the beauty of the star, nor the sentiment nor the surprises of any story, but moving pictures that have meaning, that are where they are in a photoplay because they are an integral part of it, telling in themselves some essential incident of the story, exposing suddenly some unexpected, but consistent, side of the character of one of the people in the plot. It is by his accomplishments in moving pictures, therefore, that his story is unfolded forcefully and his characters made definite and comprehensible individuals."

"ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN"



AURORA MEREDITH stood in the shabby little parlor of her small-town home, on one hand, the worldy-wise woman who promised her fame and fortune thru her golden voice, on the other, her great-hearted, unselfish mother. The moment of the great decision had come. Should she ask her family to sacrifice still farther and send her abroad to study for a career—or should she stay in the old home and see all her girlish dreams turn to ashes? Just such decisions come once to every woman. And every woman will want to know how Aurora Meredith decided.

SHE had won—but now she must pay! With the plaudits of a mighty Metropolitan audience still reaching her thru the closed door of her dressing room, came Visconti—he who had befriended her in her hour of dire need—and demanded her love. Mad with jealousy, half-suspecting he had been tricked by the gorgeous songbird, he hurled the door shut behind him and burst into a torrent of passionate words that were their own threat of a terrible revenge if she denied him that which her heart would not let her give. A scene that will hold every woman breathless—for every woman must reap what she sows.

THE scene—the mighty stage of the Metropolitan. The audience—America's wealthiest and most fashionable. The moment—the final great aria of the amazing new prima donna. As the last perfect note dies away, a man in a stage box leaps to his feet and points something at the lone figure on the stage. A shot—and then—a mad, fighting, clawing, terror-stricken mob of people,—rushing like a flood thru the passages of the Opera. One of the most tremendous scenes that the screen has ever known. A picture of a frenzy of human fright that will live in your memory for years. The dramatic high-point of "Once to Every Woman."

JAPANESE EXHIBITOR ENTERTAINS MARIE WALCAMP

MR. KANDA, proprietor of the Universal house in Muroran, Japan, known there as the Kandakan Theatre, played host to Marie Walcamp while she was touring the Orient as star of the thrilling serial, "The Dragon's Net," most of which was made in China and Japan. Mr. Kanda is a firm believer in Universal pictures, and in his flourishing theatre Marie Walcamp, erstwhile star of "The Lion's Claws," "The Red Glove," "The Spur and Saddle Series," is a great favorite. Small wonder then that she received so welcome a reception from him.

Miss Walcamp was entertained in numerous theatres throughout "The Flowery Kingdom," and she made innumerable personal appearances. At these appearances the theatres were always crowded to the doors, and the Japanese papers were full of stories concerning the beautiful daredevil.

Razu Mori, one of the most prominent actresses in Japan, expressed a desire to meet Miss Walcamp and Henry McRae, director of the expedition, arranged for an introduction. Miss Mori was so delighted with the personality of Marie Walcamp and the wonders of the serial being filmed right in Japan that she expressed a desire to take part in the serial, and Mr. McRae arranged for her appearances in some of the scenes. In addition, one of the most gifted of Japanese actors had himself photographed with Miss Walcamp and was delighted with the result.

In a letter written from Tokio to Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Miss Eleanor L. Fried, who accompanied the Walcamp expedition as business manager, admirably summarizes the furore which the presence of Miss Walcamp in Japan created. She writes as follows:

"Miss Walcamp hasn't been alone since she set foot on Japanese soil. There is never a time when Miss Walcamp is on the street or in a rikshaw or in a car that she isn't surrounded by hordes of people, craning their necks to get a glimpse of their serial star. It took her half an hour the other night, after making a personal appearance, to wedge her way through the crowd. Mr. McRae attempted to shoot a scene at Osakasa Park, one of the prominent streets of Tokio, and in spite of the police protection which we had received, it was physically impossible to shoot with a crowd of thousands packed around us like so many sardines."

HENRY MC RAE RETURNS COURTESY OF MR. WANG

IT would appear that Henry McRae, who headed the recent Universal expedition to the Orient to film the "The Dragon's Net," with Marie Walcamp, became personally acquainted with every person of note in China, Japan and the Philippines during his trip. Since his return to Universal City a few weeks ago more than a score of visitors to America from the Far East have called at the film capital to shake hands with the Universal director and to talk over the events which occurred at some time or other on the trip.

A few days ago Mr. McRae received a call from H. H. Wang, president of the Commercial Press of Shanghai, and one of the foremost business men in China. He was accompanied by David W. Yoh, a technical scientist, who is here to study the manufacture of inks and colors.

It seems that Mr. McRae had used the vast establishment of the Commercial Press in Shanghai as the scene of one of his episodes in the picture, and Mr. Wang and other officials of the company appeared in the picture. McRae selected the reel containing the scenes and flashed it on the screen for his visitors.

MYSTERY PLAYS AN IMPORTANT PART IN "THE DRAGON'S NET"

"THE Dragon's Net" abounds in thrills and action, but, what is more, it abounds in mystery of a fascinating sort, which is in keeping with the Oriental atmosphere in which most of the episodes are placed.

The picture below depicts an anxious moment when Marie falls in the clutches of Foo, leader of the band of Taoist priests, who try to block Marie's progress at every step. Foo himself is the embodiment of mystery, not alone because of the astounding manner in which he appears and disappears at crucial moments, but because of his impenetrable and immobile countenance.

Foo and the cruel band of Taoists, of which he is the head, play an important part in the serial and provide many of the thrills. They are aware that Marie Carlton is searching desperately for the golden lotus petals originally taken from their shrine, and although Marie is guiltless as far as the theft is concerned, they are relentless in their efforts to get her out of the way. All sorts of tortures are prepared for the girl whenever she falls into their hands, and they do not stop at death itself.

Miss Walcamp performed many dangerous feats while this serial was being made, diving from dizzy heights, scaling high walls, and penetrating into all sorts of dark and mysterious caves and caverns.

Marie in the clutches of the mysterious Foo.

on with "The Dragon's Net"

MARIE WALCAMP MAKES ATTRACTIVE FIGURE IN JAPANESE GARB

IN the making of "The Dragon's Net," Director McRae utilized to the fullest the many excellent opportunities for bringing actual Oriental typpes on the screen. Many an obscure Japanese woman was lifted to dizzy heights of joy by a chance to do a "bit" in the production, and likewise many a prominent Oriental woman was overjoyed at a chance to really act in the "movies." In fact, so multitudinous were the eager aspirants for movie honors that Director McRae was often impeded in the progress of his production.

During the course of the action Marie Walcamp's role often demands that she disguise herself as an Oriental, and it is then that the pretty star has an opportunity to show how attractive she can look in the strange garb of the Far East. The Oriental costumes fit her graceful and lithe figure admirably.

It was not necessary for Miss Walcamp to take with her trunks full of gowns and frocks, as movie stars usually do, for her role in "The Dragon's net" is a daredevil and hazardous one, and when she is not wearing the garb of the Orient, demands that her clothes be simple, durable and easy to move about in, and we therefore usually find Marie in sport togs of plain but "nifty" cut.

Clothes in this instance were the least concern of this serial-making band of travelers. What was more important to them was the outfit for the actual making of the film, and the company carried with it to the Orient a complete portable film laboratory with 168,000 feet of motion picture film. The expedition was equipped with drying drums, film tanks and a printing machine, and carried in all one hundred trunks. They occupied the larger part of a trans-Pacific boat leaving the City of Seattle for Yokohama.

WADSWORTH HARRIS MEETS ODD EXPERIENCE IN JAPAN

MEMBERS of the Universal company, with Marie Walcamp, who filmed "The Dragon's Net," a serial, in Japan, met with many surprises while visiting the Land of the Rising Sun, but none so great as that experienced by Wadsworth Harris, one of the Universal players, who accidentally came face to face in a hotel in Miyonoshita, Japan, with a cousin he had sought for many years.

It had been twenty years since the two cousins had seen each other. It was some time before they could convince each other of their respective identities. The register of the Fujiya Hotel, where both were stopping, finally settled the matter.

WALCAMP SERIAL COMPANY VISITS THE PHILIPPINES

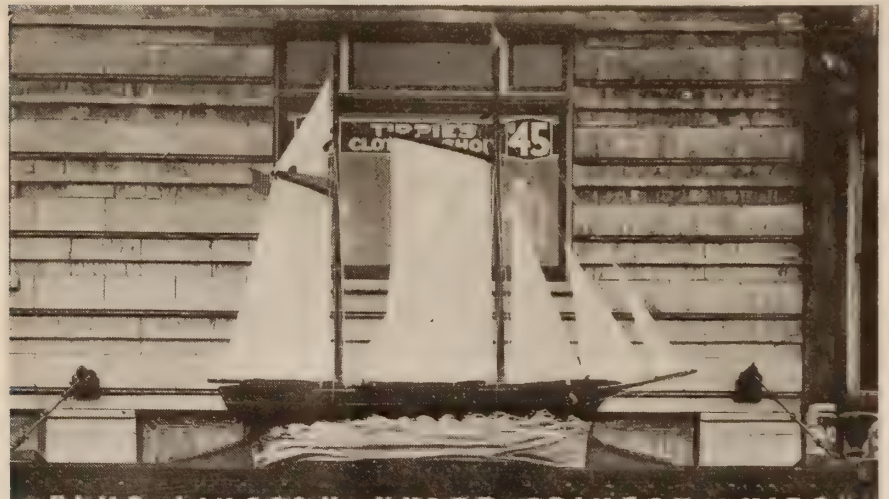
WHILE the majority of the scenes in "The Dragon's Net," starring Marie Walcamp, "The Woman Who Knows No Fear," were shot in China and Japan, the company, under the direction of Henry McRae, also visited the Philippines. When they reached those islands Governor Harrison accorded them the heartiest of welcomes and every possible honor. He put a coast-guard vessel with a crew of forty-five men at the disposal of Mr. McRae and his party, and they skirted the islands of the Sultan of Sulu, the land of the fierce Moros, and went as far south as Jolo and Cebu, taking pictures everywhere.

Miss Walcamp was delighted with the Philippine "kiddies" and made numerous friends among them, as is evinced by the picture shown above. The expedition had a very jolly time of it in the islands and was loathe to leave them. Wadsworth Harris, who plays the role of Dr. Redding in the serial, and who was formerly a Shakespearian actor, made himself immensely popular in the "Islands" by conducting some readings there for students of English. All the rest of the cast, which in addition to Miss Walcamp and Wadsworth Harris, included Harland Tucker, the leading man, and Otto Lederer, "the villain," mingled freely with the inhabitants and were cordially and enthusiastically received by them.

How The Kinema Theatre, Salt Lake City, Put Over "Under Crimson Skies"

THE accompaning photograph shows the novel lobby display used by the Kinema Theatre, Salt Lake City, in putting over the Super-Jewel Production, "UNDER CRIMSON SKIES," during the week of July 18th. This idea was originated by Mr. C. C. Chellew, local manager, and Claude Gray, Publicity Manager.

The ship on top of the marque is a schooner rigged sailing vessel, eighteen feet long and the masts are twenty-five feet high. The vessel in itself is perfect in every detail. A wireless telegraph apparatus was used in connection with same which attracted considerable attention. Twenty-four miniature sailing vessels were also used with inserts in the shape of steering wheels bearing attractive catch lines.



Unusual lobby for the Kinema Thearte, Salt Lake City, for "Under Crimson Skies."

The inside of the lobby was decorated with miniature ships and other marine articles furnished by the local United States Naval Recruiting Station. This lobby display was pronounced by Salt Lakers as being the most original that has ever been seen in Salt Lake.

Particular mention should be made of the special music furnished by Henry Pyle on the organ, also electrical storm effects during the storm scene, the realism of which practically took the audience off their feet.

The picture ran for one full week and did capacity business for seven days irrespective of temperature 105 degrees in the shade.

RUNNING STRONG!

"Alhambra finished weeks run of 'The Devil's Passkey.' Tonight very last performance and still turning hundreds away. Business of week deserves special mention and enthusiastic patrons bring feeling of great satisfaction to management which compliments Universal on Passkey production. Awaiting your future pictures with drawing power equal to this."

The Bison Theatre Plays To Crowded Houses, Running Universal Pictures Exclusively

THE MOON RIDERS

Two views of the popular Bison Theatre of Brownsville, Pa., a 100 per cent. Universal house, showing attractive arrangements of posters announcing Universal pictures.

THE Bison theatre flourishes out in Brownsville, Pa. and it is a "gem" of a theatre. It is a 100% Uinversal House, showing nothing but "Universal-made" pictures. It is owned and controlled by Mr. T. S. Wright whose faith in the Universal product is firm. It derives its name "Bison" from the two reel western features released by Universal and it has been called that since the house was opened. On the day that he uses the "Bisons" or two reel western dramas, Mr. Wright makes a special feature of them.

The two views of the Bison Theatre above would indicate that Mr. Wright is strong for serial stuff and recognizes the value of the thrilling and "actionfull" serials made by Universal. He is prominently advertising "The Moon Riders" and Elmo Lincoln in "Elmo, The Fearless," two of the most thrilling serials made recently by the Company. To the left of the display is a poster announcing a western called "Finger Prints" with Bob Reeves and on the right center a poster advertising a star comedy, "Butting In On Baby." Mr. Wright is keenly alive to the excellent qualities of Universal comedy stuff and on the extreme right of the picture there is a poster advertising one of the excellent Century dog comedies, "My Dog Pal," featuring Brownie, The Wonder Dog, and directed by the skillful Fred Fishback.

Professor Robert Wade	Lee Kohlmar
Helen Wade	Louise Lorraine

Con Dawson	Jenks Harris

PROFESSOR ROBERT WADE has toiled years and spent a fortune in perfecting "The Flaming Disk," a lens that will reduce iron and steel to ashes, of such intensity is it possessed. Professor Wade lives a secluded life with his only child, Helen.

Rodney Stanton, head of a criminal band, realizes to what criminal purposes the lens can be put and is anxious to get hold of it. Abetting Stanton are Jim Gray, whom Stanton controls by a strange hypnotic power, Stella Dean who is in the employ of Barrows, district chief of the U. S. Secret Service and thus of immense value to Stanton, Briggs, an inquisitive butler and Bat and Con.

The United States Government is also anxious to secure the lens and the gang is informed of this by Stella.

Jim Gray's brother, Elmo, in the employ of the U. S. Secret Service, is a complete antithesis to Jim—a noble manly chap, realizing the seriousness of the service to which he is devoting all his energy. He rescues Helen Wade from a runaway horse and thus makes her acquaintance. Helen is business manager for her father and goes on a mission to Barrow's office to show him the lens. Some of the gang attack her and Barrows in an effort to obtain the lens, but Elmo, entering in time, cleans them up.

Jim Gray, whom Elmo tries constantly to influence for the good but with no success, hatches a plan whereby he will go to Wade's house and impersonate Elmo. This is a simple matter, for Elmo and Jim are twins and look exactly alike. Jim calls on the Wades. The Wade house adjoins an empty house, and by switching about the house numbers Elmo is inveigled into the empty house and kept prisoner there when he, too, comes to the Wade house as a representative of the government to view the lens.

Wade shows Jim the lens, but Helen, who has been watching him closely, tells her father that he is an impostor. Jim shows his colors and demands the lens. A terrible fight ensues. In the meantime Elmo, in the adjoining house, after a fierce battle, has freed himself and made for the Wade rooms, but is rendered unconscious by the gang. During the fight the lens is broken. The gang succeed in getting one piece, but the other piece is stolen by a mysterious motorcyclist who has passed by the house, taken in the situation and appropriated the piece of lens.

The gang clears out of the place, taking with them Helen to their quarters at Redbrook. They fear her knowledge of the lens would be dangerous to them if she were free.

When Elmo comes to and realizes that Helen has been kidnapped he starts in pursuit in an automobile. He makes a mad dash across the country and recklessly rides right into the path of a fast approaching freight train.

CAST

Marie Carlton	Marie Walcamp
Harlan Keeler	Harland Tucker
Dr. Redding	Wadsworth Harris
King Carson	Otto Lederer

PEGGY ALDRICH, while shopping in Woosong, picks Marie's note from the guards coat and further aids in rescuing Marie whom she then takes to her aunt's home in Shanghai. Peggy and Marie go to the races where Marie is lucky and wins sufficient money to carry on her purpose.

Carson and Redding hatch a new plan to do away with Marie. While the girls are out in their limousine, they "knock out" their chauffeur and Carson disguises himself in his clothes. In this way he manages to kidnap Marie and to leave Peggy unconscious on the roadside. Marie is taken to the Loongwah Pagoda where she is imprisoned but by a desperate swinging jump, Marie makes her escape. She runs into Peggy who has recovered and is driving home.

Carson and Redding meet Keeler who is going to Peking. They are also bound for that direction. Marie too wants to go to Peking but is too ill and Peggy jumps at a chance to aid her, and insists on going herself. Peggy reaches the wharf too late for the Peking boat and hires a man in a small boat to row her out to the steamer. Carson, who has been prowling about the docks, recognizes her as Marie's friend and starts in pursuit.

In the meantime, the gang has gotten wind of Marie's whereabouts and one of their number, a crook, makes for the home of Peggy's aunt. Abetted by a henchman, who is in the aunt's employ, he enters Marie's room and as she is tossing restlessly about, he prepares to choke her.

At almost the same moment, Carson has reached Peggy's boat and grapples with her in an intense struggle.

Episode No. 18.
"Silver Linings"

Grant	Eddie Polo
Zan	Karl Silvera
Sonia	Ruth Royce
Beth	Thelma Percy

WHILE Grant is battling with the lion in the cave, the smugglers decide to go back and see what the wild beasts have done to him. Grant kills the lion and circles back to the island shore, seeking means to escape from the island. The smugglers after a futile search for trace of him, have about decided the beasts of the jungle have made a clean feast of him when they spy him making his way along the shore. They give chase and fire upon him. He falls, apparently wounded. But just as they are about to pounce upon his inert form on the top of the cliffs overlooking the sea, Grant, who has been shamming, leaps to the edge of the cliff and dives into the sea swimming for a tug that is moored off shore. The smugglers give chase in a dory, but Grant reaches the tug, overcomes two seamen and eludes his pursuers, putting out to sea.

Meantime, Zan and Sonia, by means of a magic mirror, learn the first mate has pawned the dagger and fled to Chile. They leave Beth under guard while they rob the pawnshop and regain the dagger. Beth escapes and goes to the police to whom she tells her story. While she is there, she learns thru a detective that Grant has returned safely and is awaiting word of her at his apartments. Over the phone, she arranges to meet Grant, who still retains the magic fluid from the dagger. On applying the fluid to Beth's forehead, Grant finds it does not work. He recalls the Numidian ritual and realizes the dagger itself is necessary to remove the murder confession from his fiancee's forehead. Zan and Sonia return to their rooms, learn of Beth's escape and also that the fluid is missing from the dagger. Zan, reaching Grant by phone, offers to remove the confession from Beth's forehead if Grant will surrender the vial and allow him and Sonia to depart unmolested. Grant agrees. Zan removes the confession. Suddenly the police, who have taken Zan's trail after the pawnshop robbery, rush in. Zan and Sonia think themselves double-crossed and about to surrender, when Grant intervenes, telling the police they are mistaken—that Zan and Sonia are his guests. The police leave. Grant turns the vial over to Zan. Grant's magnanimity overwhelms Zan and Sonia, who repent of their villainous acts. Zan tells Grant he has taught him what a real man should be. Zan and Sonia leave for Numidia with the dagger, to claim the throne.

Grant now reveals to Beth that he has lost his estate. He is a pauper. He says he will take her back to her parents in England whenever she is ready. She prepares to leave with the Warrens. But at the train, seeing he will not propose, she tells him she wants not his riches, but his love. Grant grabs her, leaps from the train and, both bareheaded, they race for a minister.

"See America First!" That is a slogan which new screen magazine 86 preaches when it shows some delightful mountain and brook scenes of the American countryside. These scenes can vie in beauty with the Alps or Pyrennes.

Uncle Sam is busily at work in the Treasbury Building in Washington, D. C., printing paper money. There are several kinds of presses, but no machine ever invented equals the human hand in the delicate operation of polishing and printing plate. The "shots" include scenes where the money is examined and checked and scenes of the silver vaults. There is a great vault in which are kept all the plates for printing paper money, and of all the 4,500 employees in the bureau, only five have ever entered this vault.

This issue of the magazine has a pleasing diversion on "How to Pick Your Husband by His Cigar" and some humorous excerpts entitled "With the Wise Birds."

"The Grinning Granger"

Two Reel Western Drama

"Grinning" Granger	Hoot Gibson
Ruth Ransom	Dorothy Wood
Ned Ransom	Kansas Moehring
"Boney" Simons	Jim Corey
Sheriff	Harry Jackson

"GRINNING" Granger, a wandering cowpuncher, incurs the enmity of "Boney" Simons by whipping him for beating a horse. He further antagonizes him by interfering when Simons attempts to force his unwelcome attention upon Ruth Ransom whose brother, Ned, owns the Lazy-A outfit.

Simons rides to town in a rage and there meets Ned whom he duns for a settlement of a gambling debt. An argument starts which ends in a fight. Granger rides into town and at a distance sees Simons attempting to draw a gun on Ransom who is unarmed. Granger runs to the latter's help but gets there too late. Simons shoots the boy, drops the gun beside him and makes a getaway.

The sheriff hears the shot and hurries to the scene where he finds Granger bending over the body with Simon's gun—still smoking—in his hand. He promptly arrests him for the crime.

Simons, elated at the thought of his enemy being in jail for his crime, goes to the window to make fun of him and tells him that there is now no one to prevent him from having his way with Ruth.

Granger realizes the need for immediate action and setting his bed afire starts to yell for help. When the sheriff enters with water, Granger by a clever trick escapes and leaves the sheriff locked inside.

He rides to the ranch, arriving in time to prevent Simons from having his way with Ruth and a fight starts. Simons gets the better of it and throws Granger across the room. As he does so, Granger has hold of his shirt and he takes with him a big pearl button clutched in his hand.

The sheriff arrives in time to keep Simons from killing Granger, and Granger, realizing possibilities in the button he has in his hand tries a ruse to make Simons admit the shooting. He pretends to draw the button from his pocket and tells the sheriff that he found it in Ransom's hand right after the shooting and ends by saying—"And I think it belongs here!"

As he ends, he suddenly jumps forward and fits the button to its place on Simon's shirt. Simons falls for the bluff and admits his guilt but he has the gang covered and starts to back away. He opens the door and backs into the arms of two deputies who are waiting outside.

As he turns to leave the sheriff tells Ruth "Yore brother is still unconscious, but the doc says he'll pull through." Ruth and Granger are happy in the thought that no misery will cloud their new-found love.

"A Son of the North"

Kirk MacLean	Leonard Clapham
Jean Codrae	Virginia Faire
Jake Williams	Chas. Brinley
Baptiste Codrae	Frank Staples
Uncle Abner	Herbert Bethew

IN the little half deserted fur trading station sat Kirk MacLean in his cabin, pondering over a message he had just received notifying him of his heirship to a title and estate left him by his brother. Kirk is also pondering over a letter which he has received from Angie, his former sweetheart, who writes that she is coming to pay him a visit with her mother. She explains that the reason she returned the engagement ring was due to her mother's persuasion, but now she has encouraged her mother to relent and they will visit him. Kirk seems somewhat despondent until the thought of his new sweetheart, Jean Codrae, brings on a smile. Kirk is brought to his feet by a sudden shot and rushes to the door where he is confronted by the scene of Jake Williams, a criminal, whom he has been looking for, running wildly. He chases him, but soon loses track of him and returns to his cabin.

Baptiste Codrae who runs the White Tavern in the town of Lebec, secures a promise from Pierre LeFevre, an influential agent of the Hudson Bay Fur Company, to open a Hudson Bay Trading Post, in return for which he promises to secure the promise of his daughter Jean to marry Pierre. She vehemently refuses and jumps through a window and runs to Kirk's cabin for protection. Baptiste and Pierre follow her and demand of Kirk that he release Jean, which he refuses. He is challenged by Pierre to a fist fight in the saloon, and accepts. As Kirk enters the saloon he is attacked by Pierre with a gun and finally overcomes Pierre and wrests the gun from him. They then start to fight while the crowd eagerly watches. Jake, who has been watching from the outside, sets fire to the cabin and the people all disperse, leaving Kirk and Pierre to fight it out alone. Kirk finally overcomes Pierre, but not before th ecabin is all aflame. He rescues Pierre from the flames and goes back to his cabin.

"ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN"

Carl Laemmle presents

ONCE to EVERY

THE most successful novels ever published in America have always had for their principal characters small town people—and the same is true of the successful stage plays, because of their universal appeal. That, too, is why "ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN" will reach deep into the hearts of your every audience—because your people will sympathize with all its characters—whom they know so well.

The girl whom fame and fortune called.

The Mother who sacrificed, even to the end.

The Lover who gave her up to further her career.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS

WOMAN"

THE balancing of the small town parts of the story with the action abroad and the great scene in the Metropolitan Opera House is one of the greatest things that Allen Holubar ever did. Here is a great drama that takes the city audience to the country and the country audience to the city and that thrills, and appeals to both. Book it today for the season's greatest heart picture.

The Songbird—while fortune lasted.

The one who would not take "no" for an answer.

The Man of Title who would do anything but marry.

THIS picture owns a title that will draw money while the house across the street stays empty—for which reason we have played it up in this 2-column advertisement in a fashion that will ensure its being read no matter what surrounds it in your paper. ONCE in every woman's life comes a certain great moment. Once in her lifetime something comes to her on which her whole future depends. It has come—or will surely come—to you, just as it came to Aurora Meredith. What do you think it is? You'll know when you see splendid Dorothy Phillips, the star of "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Right to Happiness" play this great part in a picture that every woman in the world will understand. A picture for which a whole opera was produced—in which the players sang just as they sing on the mighty stage of the Metropolitan—a dazzling production in which the social leaders of a great western city acted as the "extras"—a marvelous love story that you'll never forget. See it now. Don't miss it. Remember—"Once to Every Woman."

That Spanish Fire

Mae
Bush

EACH time a new character appears in "The Devil's Passkey" you says to yourself, unconsciously, "Here is the dominating player." Yet all soon become so admirably blended in the sweep of the drama that you are conscious only of the perfect whole. Nevertheless, you'll never forget the Spanish fire that flames in the character of Odera, the tigerish little dancer, played by Mae Bush.

With Von Stroheim, talent like this is like beautiful, irridescent clay in the hands of the master-potter. His is the mind that moulds it into a figure of perpetual fascination. And of such things by the hundreds is "The Devil's Passkey" builded. That's why it is proving the year's big attraction from a box-office view point—which is what you, the exhibitor, must think of.

EDITORIALS

PEGGY has consented to write a series of letters to Betty. Doesn't sound very exciting, but just the same the editor ventures the prediction that you, gentle reader, are wondering who in the world Betty is and who is Peggy and why does she want to take up beautiful white space in the Weekly to write to Betty every week when Mr. Burleson's boys would convey it to her much more cheaply if no more expeditely. For the present, at least, we are forced to keep the identity of both girls a strict secret. But we will let you in on this much—one is working for the Universal now and the other has left the company to enter the perpetual occupation of matrimony. This latter is Betty.

Betty is on her honeymoon, and after she sees Niagara Falls, it is her ambition to visit all of the cities in which the Universal has exchanges and there meet the managers with whom she has corresponded so often. It may be that we will want to publish some of the letters that Betty writes to Peggy, but Betty is very anxious to keep in touch with the Home Office and she has consented to have Peggy's letters to her published in the Moving Picture Weekly. The first one will be found on page 26 of this issue. Get into the habit of reading the Betty Letters. They are going to be good.

WE had something to say editorially last week about "Pink Tights." After we read it over we decided that it was all right as far as it went, but it did not go far enough. We said a lot about what a wonderful bargain this picture was for exhibitors. It is all that, because most producers would have charged you just twice as much as the Universal will charge and after you saw the film you would have paid it gladly and have made a big profit. So now all you have to do is to add what the Universal will save you to the profit that you are going to make and then thank the Universal.

human Harry Carey says

EVERY hobo knows that those who have the least give the most. (Excuse me, pardner—I didn't mean to make you feel bad.)

Watch for "Sundown Slim."

But that is not what we started to say at all. So many people who have seen "Pink Tights" have talked so enthusiastically about it, and so few have even regarded it as mediocre that we have been forced to the conclusion that it is the type of picture that is best calculated to appeal to all classes of people. It is truly Universal in its appeal. If you have an audience of "blue stockings," and you're to be pitied if you have, nothing could be better for them than to see "Pink Tights." It is the best medicine for that disease that has ever been prescribed. Give them a dose and see that they are there, even if you have to get them there under the the pretext that it is something they should criticize. It is the only way to cure them.

And if you have any other kind of audience in the world—rich, poor, thin, fat, tall, short, sweet tempered or sour, romantic or practical, optimistic or bilious, gay or sad, cultured or ignorant, eastern or western, it is all the same. You don't need to worry. Human nature is the same everywhere, and "Pink Tights" is just plumb full of human nature.

CHARLES ROSENZWEIG, general sales manager of the Big "U" Exchange, Universal's New York City branch was the guest of honor recently at a luncheon in the Yacht Room of the Hotel Astor, given by members of the Big "U" sales force. The occasion of the party was the first anniversary of Rosenzweig's elevation to sales managership.

David Brill, a Universal salesman, acted as toastmaster and presented Rosenzweig with a handsome watch-fob as a token of esteem of the Big "U" sales force.

Big Tie-up Is Arranged For "Sundown Slim"

SUNDOWN·SLIM
By the Author of "Overland·Red"
H·H·KNIBBS

Attractive cover for novel of "Sundown Slim"

UNIVERSAL has just completed arrangements for a fruitful tie-up by whch Harry Carey's latest picture, "Sundown Slim," from the novel by H. H. Knibbs, will be exploited in book-stores all over the country. The arrangement is with the Houghton Mifflin Company, publishers of the Knibbs' novel, who also published "Overland Red," Knibbs' previous novel, from which Carey's great picture of the same name was made.

In addition the publishers are syndicating to 300 of the leading newspapers through the country a series of mats containing a head of Harry Carey and choice sayings from "Sundown Slim." These will cover a period of two months, using a saying a day.

The window displays will be made available to every book-store and news-dealer in the United States. By arrangement with Universal the book-dealers will be notified in advance of "Sundown Slim" showings in their towns, in plenty of time to arrange for the Houghton Mifflin Company's window display.

Knibbs himself took active part in the direction of the photoplay. He spent weeks with the Carey company in the sun-baked Mojave desert, where he endured considerable discomfort from the heat and the terrific sand storms in order to lend his valuable co-operation to the making of "Sundown Slim." Knibbs was familiar with the desert, for he had tramped it at intervals for nine years and written most of his stories and poems around it. It was quite natural, therefore, for him to formulate a few simple but effective rules for the company. They were, not to eat much, drink much, or ever get excited, and it is in a great measure due to these instructions that the company was so generally in good physical condition during the weeks that were spent on the torrid plains of the Mojave.

Knibbs has woven a very beautiful character around Sundown Slim, and Carey has acted him with such a delicate human touch that the publishers anticipate a new run on the novel which already is immensely popular. As a result, they have ordered several hundred thousand additional copies to meet the demands of the tie-up with the Harry Carey picture.

OUT of a filthy box-car into the clean open range came Washington Hicks, or Sundown Slim, as he introduced himself into Western life. Tired of the wandering existence which had been his for years, he is looking for a job as cook. He charms all by his tramp poetry.

Near the little western settlement were two ranches—one, The Concho, a cattle ranch owned by Jack Corliss, and the other, a sheep ranch owned by David Loring. Jack is in love with Loring's daughter, Eleanor, but there is bad blood between the two ranchers—the old sheep-cattle feud.

Fadeaway, a bad cowboy employed by Corliss, insults Anita, the daughter of Fernando, the chief sheep-herder of the Loring ranch. He is surprised by Eleanor, who rescues Anita, and is herself insulted. Jack appears and fires the cowboy, who swears revenge.

In the Last Chance saloon Sundown Slim discovers an old pal of the road, Bill Corliss, brother of the ranch owner, who had come home a drunken ruin, to pry more money from his brother. Jack comes to the saloon and blaming Sundown for Billy's condition, kicks the tramp out of the place. He later repents and goes in search of Sundown, when he finds that Fadeaway had sent the tramp on a wild-goose chase to the American Hotel, a deserted shack near a desert water-hole, where the hobo expects to find a job as cook.

Jack sends Sundown to The Concho as the new cook. En route the tramp stops for dinner with Fernando and falls in love with Anita. In the meantime Fadeaway has induced Billy to help him rob the safe in the Concho office. Sundown surprises them and is felled by Fadeaway. Billy is shot by Fernando by mistake. The Spanish sheep-herder had been trailing Fadeaway to avenge his daughter.

To cover his pal Billy, Sundown takes the blame for robbing the safe and is put in jail. Meanwhile Fadeaway learns that Fernando fired the shot that hit Billy, and starts the sheriff after him. Billy recovers and clears Sundown, who is released from jail.

The feud between the cattle and sheep ranch is at its height and the cowboys are strong for bringing Fernando to an untimely end. Fadeaway urges them on.

Sundown, upon being released from jail, helps Jack by staking a claim to the American Hotel vicinity, because of its water-hole. Then he goes to see Anita, and for her sake takes food to her father, a fugitive. Fadeaway follows him and shoots the sheep-herder, whom Sundown takes to his new home, near the water-hole, after swearing vengeance.

Fadeaway leads the sheriff to the water-hole. Fernando is dying, and Sundown Slim refuses them admittance. Fadeaway tries to force the issue, and Sundown Slim kills him. The law is on the side of the hobo, who is defending his home. Fernando, however, soon dies.

Sundown Slim, well established in his new home, turns to Anita for comfort and companionship. He visits her, engagement ring in hand, but discovers that she loves his pal Billy, whom she had nursed back to health. Sundown Slim conceals his love and wishes them happiness. He resignedly settles down to the joys of a rancher's life at the American Hotel.

AUTHORS TAKE JOY IN WRITING FOR CAREY

THE skill and artistry of Harry Carey in depicting a role require no higher tribute than the fact that every author whose story he has portrayed on the screen has thanked him personally or by letter for his faithful portrait of the chaarcter he has drawn.

Peter B. Kyne, famous California novelist, whose best story, "The Three Godfathers," was played by Harry Carey in the films under the title of "Marked Men," wrote the Universal star after seeing the picture in San Francisco, acknowledging himself indebted to the actor for his fine interpreation of his story Eugene Manlove Rhodes, celebrated writer of the great West, has personally thanked Carey every time he filmed one of his stories, and came to Universal City recently with one of his newest novels, "West Is West," asking "Cheyenne Harry" to use it on the screen. H. H. Van Loan, one of the most successful of screen writers, saw a preview of the late Universal production, "Blue Streak McCoy," which he wrote and in which Carey played the leading role, and immediately wired Mr. Carey congratulating him on the manner in which he portrayed the title role.

When Harry Carey recently scored one of his biggest triumphs in "Overland Red," the author, H. H. Knibbs, came to Los Angeles to tell the star what a thrill it afforded him to see the character he created actually living and breathing on the screen. He also brought with him his newest novel, "Sundown Slim," pronounced by everyone even a better story than "Overland Red," and prevailed upon Carey to produce it on the silver sheet. This Mr. Carey has done, and "Sundown Slim" will be presented at the ——— Theater on ———.

REAL SHERIFF ACTS IN "SUNDOWN SLIM"

THE sheriff in "Sundown Slim" is no actor. He is "sure 'nough." Years ago Ed Jones was a sheriff in Arizona, and more than once he had notorious "bad" men in his custody.

This is not the first time Ed Jones has played a sheriff for Harry Carey. He knows the ways of the cattle country and the customs thereof, and in his brief movie span he has played many western parts. In fact, he is a real cattleman himself—or was. Ed Jones and his dad, a rancher from Texas, had 1,600 head on the Cow Creek ranch, a section and a half in Yavapaid Country. Two years ago they sold their property because of the sheepmen.

"The enmity between sheepmen and cattlemen is not fiction," said Ed Jones out at Universal City the other day. "'Course it ain't so bloody now—there were times when pardners would fight for years and a hundred men or more would be killed. Twenty-five years ago there weren't any sheep to speak of, only cattle. Then the sheepmen came driving their herds easily from range to range, and trouble started.

"The government allows sheep highways a mile wide and one of these touched our ranch. Sheep were supposed to move four miles a day, but they took their time and even wandered off the path, so that grazing got mighty thin for the cattle.

"I got the movie bug now I guess—been at it about four years. Last September I went up to Calgary and bought some cattle and fed them all Winter. When Spring came I sold them and here I am in the movies again."

"Sundown Slim," which shows at the ——— Theater on ———, shows Harry Carey as a hobo who mixes in a feud between cow and sheep men with thrilling, sometimes fascinating, results.

STERLING ACTORS APPEAR WITH HARRY CAREY

EVERYONE who has followed the Harry Carey productions for the past few years has become familiar with the dependable acting of Joseph Harris and Charles LeMoyne, two players who have appeared in the majority of this star's recent photodramas. They will therefore be glad to know that both Harris and LeMoyne have excellent parts in Carey's latest production, "Sundown Slim," which is announced for next ——— at the ——— Theater.

Both these actors usually appear in "heavy" roles, but occasionally they have shown their versatility by playing sympathetic parts. In "Marked Men," for instance, while Joe Harris appeared as the Mexican outlaw who escaped from prison, his exquisite acting when the trio found the infant on the desert, when the cross was planted over the grave of the mother and when he gave his life to save that of the newborn babe, easily won the hearts of every audience Harris also played the villain role in "Human Stuff" with Harry Carey, and in "Sundown Slim" plays a distinctive character role entirely different from any in which he has yet been seen on the screen.

Charles LeMoyne has played so many sheriff roles in motion pictures that several counties in Southern California have presented him with deputy badges. He played the sheriff with Harry Carey in "Marked Men," the crooked minion of the law in "Overland Red," the ranch superintendent in "Human Stuff," one of the Boone gang in "Bullet Proof," the bad man in "Blue Streak McCoy," and in "Sundown Slim" he again tries to match his wits against Harry Carey.

In real life Harry Carey, Joe Harris and Charles LeMoyne are fast friends, and they always forget their differences the moment the camera stops clicking.

ADVANCE NOTES FOR "SUNDOWN SLIM"

"Sundown Slim," the story in which Harry Carey has scored his most recent success, and which is to be shown at the ——— Theater next ———, is from the pen of H. Herbert Knibbs, the same author who wrote "Overland Red" for this popular star. Both stories met with unusual success in novel form, and as Mr. Carey made his own screen adaptation, it is natural that he overlooked no opportunity for interesting action.

Harry Carey has discovered a new leading woman in the person of the young actress who plays the role of the Mexican girl, Anita, in his latest success, "Sundown Slim," announced for next ——— at the ——— Theater. He has given the young lady the name of Mignonne, although she has appeared on the speaking stage almost since childhood under her proper appellation.

Three weeks were spent on desert location by Harry Carey and his supporting company to film a sequence of scenes in "Sundown Slim," the H. Herbert Knibbs story, which will be shown next ——— at the ——— Theater. These scenes were made in the month of July and the temperature in the arid country between Victorville and Barstow averaged about 15 degrses throughout the company's stay.

POSTERS FOR "S

ACTIVITY has never been at a greater height in the poster department of the Universal than at the present time. With so many excellent pictures to offer and with production keyed up to the greatest possible extent, the department is busy backing up to the best of its ability the numerous productions.

Special attention is now being given to Harry Carey's latest Special Attraction release entitled "Sundown Slim." Made from the famous novel of the same name by H. H. Knibbs, who was also responsible for that corking good Carey picture "Overland Red," scenariorized by Carey himself and directed by the energetic Val Paul, Carey himself felt convinced that he had made a really big picture and the Universal agrees with him. The poster department has prepared for use some very lovely five color litho posters which can be procured at all the Universal exchanges. Examples of a three sheet, a six sheet and two one sheets are illustrated on these pages. The three sheet and one sheet make particularly effective cut-outs for lobby display.

Carey's picturesque role in "Sundown Slim" is well brought out and emphasized in these posters. Carey plays "a knight of the road, kindly and carefree who, with his bed slung over his shoulder, trudges smilingly along, sympathizing and helping wherever he can, though oftimes weary, hungry and sad at heart himself. Universal has done everything in its power to provide the picture with the background suited to its main idea and most of it was filmed in "the open country," in the real ranchlands of America. There are some striking desert scenes and some striking scenes of ranch life, and much care was taken to observe the most minute details of costume and manners. In the six sheet poster below is the figure of a sheep herder. Much attention was given to the proper portrayal of this interesting type in the picture with excellent results.

HARRY CAREY PORTRAYS HOBO IN DELIGHTFUL FASHION

WHY the tramp has not been used more often in the drama and on the screen as a sympathetic character is quite a puzzle after one has seen Harry Carey portray the amiable knight of the road in a recent feature, "Overland Red," and the title role in his present production, "Sundown Slim."

The hobo character has been used for many years, but always for comedy relief, and never to be taken seriously. H. Herbert Knibbs, popular novelist, has tramped the roads and by-ways to get material for his stories; he has eaten chow with the tattered wanderers, has sat by their campfires and exchanged stories and has ridden the brake-beams on many occasions to get the proper atmosphere for his novels. And in his two best known stories, "Overland Red" and "Sundown Slim," he has pictured the better class of tramp as he found him, a, happy-go-lucky, likable chap, usually the victim of some early misfortune, or overcome with an irresistible wanderlust. His hobo is good natured, thoroughly human, susceptible to kindness, and quite capable of heroic chivalry under certain conditions.

CAREY'S ROUGH RIDERS SUPPORT HIM IN HIS LATEST RELEASE, "SUNDOWN SLIM"

ONE of the popular features of a Harry Carey picture is the star's own flying squadron of rough riders. These sons of the plains are the aristocracy of cowpunchers. Harry Carey has gathered these broncho-busters one by one until now he has over thrty of these bronzed, bow-legged daredevils on his ranch at San Francisquito Canyon, all ready and willing to ride anything that has a back.

In every story in which Harry Carey appears there is always an opportunity to use his rough-riders, and these reckless cowboys are almost as familiar to theatregoers throughout the world as Harry's favorite horse, "Dynamite," whom he uses in most of his pictures.

In "Sundown Slim," Harry Carey's latest story of Arizona, this flying squadron has an unusual opportunity to disport itself. One of the scenes in the story shows a round-up of a herd of cattle and the cowboys are able to display all their fancy stunts learned in years on western ranches, and practiced since then in scores of pictures.

SUN-BAKED DESERT USED AS BACKGROUND IN "SUNDOWN SLIM"

CAN motion pictures be made in a country where the temperature is 122 degrees on the shady side of a thick adobe wall, where the hot wind blows a sand gale all day long, and the film crackles in the camera when the crank stops turning?

Harry Carey spent eighteen dry July days on the sun-baked plane near Victorville filming scenes for "Sundown Slim" in spite of those calorific handicaps. The results, according to H. Herbert Knibbs, author of "Sundown Slim," are some of the most beautiful desert photographs ever screened.

Val Paul, the director, and Harry Fowler, the cameraman, worked under the shade of a big umbrella, and the Bell & Howell camera was also covered with a moist sawdust pack. In spite of these precautions, the film in the camera cracked if it was still longer than fifteen minutes at a time.

One particularly beautiful bit of photography to be seen in "Sundown Slim" is the rising of the sun on the desert. The gray dawn, the first rays of the orb on the eastern horizon, and the gradual break of day have all been caught and registered by the camera. Some marvellous night scenes have also been photographed, one especially in which the stars can be plainly seen in the heavens.

Write today to the Dramatic Mirror 133 West 44th Street, New York City, and get the particulars of the Subscription Contest now going on all over the country and through which three girls will receive contracts to appear in Universal Pictures. This is the biggest contest of its kind ever conducted in this country and its popularity has a firm basis in the fact that every girl who puts forth a reasonable effort will receive a prize in a strand of beautiful Nataline pearls. For this reason, there will be a tremendous number of girls in your own town who will try for the three first prizes which will start them on the road to fame and fortune and if you are a shrewd showman you will find a way to capitalize this interest and make your theatre the most popular house in town while this contest is going on---and forever after. Big House Plays Big Picture

ANNIVERSARY WEEK
CANDY

B. F. Keith's 81st St. Theatre, N. Y. C., where "The Devil's Passkey" ran to crowded houses.

UP on Broadway and 81st street in New York City is one of the most attractive of the B. F. Keith circuit houses. This theatre is called the 81st street theatre and is devoted to high-class vaudeville and high-class motion-picture features. It is one year since the house was officially opened to the public, and during that period it has deserved a prosperous existence, which it well deserves.

Some few weeks ago the management announcd a super-feature programme in order to celebrate the first anniversary of the house and to Universal was allotted the honor of providing the film for the week. "The Devil's Passkey," the Jewel feature de luxe, made under the skillful direction of Erich Von Stroheim, maker of "Blind Husbands," was the film which was run and the picture ran to capacity audiences all week. Patrons individually expressed their delight to the management over this clever cienma depiction of the gay, wicked and alluring life of that most wonderful of all cities—Paris. And so another achievement was culminated in the crowded ilfe of "The Devil's Passkey."

PRAISES FOR "THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY" CONTINUE TO POUR IN

"AFTER showing "The Devil's Passkey," I am most anxious to express to you my great enthusiasm for Eric Von Stroheim's master production. Not only do I think that this, his second picture, is better than the first, but I am frank to say I believe it to be a master picture of all past and recent pictures. It is a credit to Universal that such a one hundred per cent. production is released through its organization.

The story is handled in the picture unusually well. Every detail has been carefully noted so that not a single thought is missing to do its part in entertaining. Each member of the cast seems to have been born for his role in "The Devil's Passkey."

I am sure that no exhibitor will make a mistake in going strong on this really massive producton."

"Management very desirous of expressing satisfaction on "The Devil's Passkey." Opened Alhambra to-day. Week's exploitation stunts proved great asset. The way Milwaukeeans turned out one would think picture ran only one day. Box office cashier had to be relieved twice, so steady were the receipts. Our prediction of picture proving big success realized."

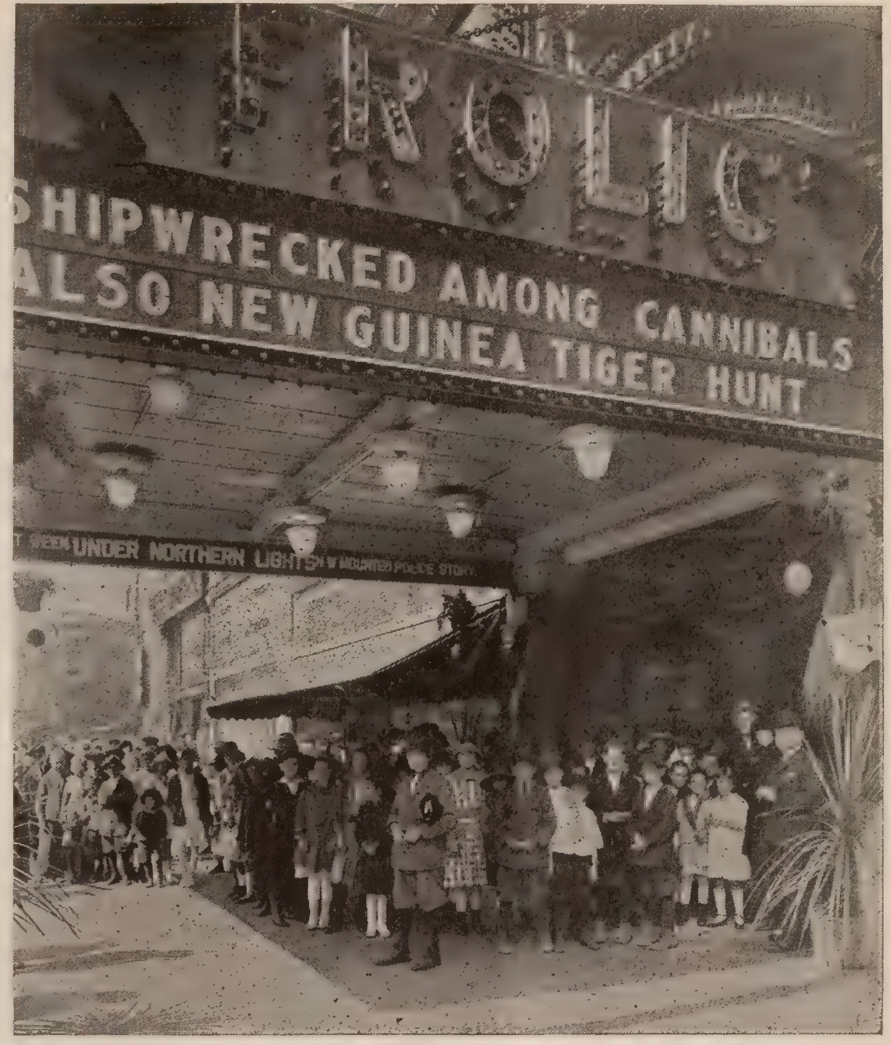
CANNIBALS WALK IN WITH A BANG!

SAN FRANCISCO has joined the ranks of boosters for "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the big Jewel feature de luxe which so vividly portrays the life of the Kia Kia savages in the darkest East. On the days that the picture was run at the pretty Frolic Theatre, there was a tremendous run on the box office. Audiences watched with tense interest the astounding adventures and the miraculous escapes from death of the two dauntless white men who ventured into the haunts of the wild men so coolly and calmly.

From all over the United States letters and telegrams of praise continue to pour in boosting to the skies this unusual feature picture and the men who made it are indeed being repaid for the tremendous risks they incurred when they undertook the expedition.

"Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" is a picture for young and old alike. The young like it particularly because of the cannibals themselves and the Robinson Crusoesque atmosphere which pervades the production. The "kiddies" in the neighborhood of the Frolic Theatre in San Francisco turned out in crowds to witness it as the picture on this page gives evidence and "went nuts" over it. The older folk like the picture for the remarkably vivid, authentic and interesting manner in which there is exposed to them a phase of life entirely strange and novel. Although pictures of savages have been taken before, this is the first time that the wildest of all wild men, the Kia Kia, have been filmed, and as the race will be extinct in the near future, "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" has in addition a certain scientific value.

The Frolic Theatre, by the way, is a 100 per cent. Universal house, devoting itself exclusively to the showing of Universal pictures, and it followed "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" up with another adventure picture, but of a vastly different sort, "Under Northern Lights."



San Francisco's pretty Frolic Theatre, where "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" went over big.

TWO OTHER JEWELS CONTINUE TO WIN FAVOR

"WITH this evening's performance we closed a very successful run of your picture, "UNDER CRIMSON SKIES," featuring ELMO LINCOLN. We will not hesitate to say that it is one of the very best pictures that has played in our house for some time. This opinion has been formed from the comments we received on the picture.

The big appeal seemed to lie in the character that Mr. Lincoln represented—that of the big, unselfish man who would give his own freedom and happiness for the woman he loved. We sincerely hope that we will have the opportunity of running more of this type of picture, and certainly would not hesitate to recommend "UNDER CRIMSON SKIES" to our fellow exhibitors."

MAJESTIC THEATRE CO., Sheboygan, Wis.
H. V. Friedrich, Manager.

"Please accept our congratulations upon producing such a wonderful picture as 'THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY,' which closed a three day run here last night. Few pictures that have played at this house in many months have proven such a valuable drawing card as STROHEIM'S latest picture. We played the feature for three days to capacity business. The remarkable drawing power of the picture may be proven by the statement that exactly twenty-five minutes after the box office opened on Wednesday night, our house, which seats about 650 people, was filled to capacity.

"As to the picture, the story was handled as only Stroheim could. The settings were very elaborate, and the gowns and costumes were exquisite. The cast was very capable and did not fail to hold the interest of everyone from start to finish. We are certain that the public will be waiting anxiously for the next Stroheim picture, and we believe that we already have a ready-made audience for his forthcoming production. Our advice to exhibitors is: BOOK 'THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY,' and clean up."

Alaskan Exhibitor Shows Keen Business Judgement

JUNEAU, Alaska may be a long ways from the populous districts of the U. S. A., but just the same there is plenty of good and expert business judgement to be had up there. The proprietor of the Coliseum Theatre up in Juneau always gets what he is after in a business way even when it comes to admission rates like forty cents. For he backs up the features he is running with clever advertising in the daily papers and he advertises more extensively than the other theatres in his vicinity. And as a result, he "packs 'em in," even though his rates are higher than those of the theatres near him.

The advertisement for the picture "For Husbands Only," a copy of which is shown on the right, is a clever one indeed. It deserved to draw big crowds and it did. Juneau liked this big Jewel production, made by the skillful Lois Weber and featuring Mildred Harris Chaplin, and it went over in great style.

The Coliseum Theatre proved again the effectiveness of excellent and extensive advertising. And when such advertising is backed up with pictures of the calibre of the Mildred Harris Chaplin "Jewels" there is small wonder that the exhibitor makes a clean-up.

BIG JEWEL FEATURE DELIGHTS MILLIONAIRE COLONY

"THE Virgin of Stamboul," the Universal-Jewel production starring Priscilla Dean and directed by Tod Browning, was the feature of a Sylvan Vaudeville, given recently by the residents of the millionaire colony of Hastings-on-Hudson, New York, for the benefit of the River View Manor Hose Co. No. 9, the local volunteer firefighters' organization.

The entertainment was directed by C. L. Doty and H. C. Cochrane, both prominent New Yorkers, and included many novel stunts participated in by members of the wealthy set. Among the entertainment numbers was an animated cartoon by Frank H. Moser, artist with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and one of the residents of Hastings, a string quartette arranged and directed by J. R. Glassford, production manager of the "Pictorial Review," and a burlesqued Russian dance by Edward T. Monroe, a prominent theatrical portrait painter, and C. C. Howard, vice-president of the Irving National Bank in New York City.

"The Virgin of Stamboul" was loaned by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the occasion. David Robbins, representing the Universal company, was the recipient of hearty thanks on the part of the guests, who also expressed their appreciation of Miss Dean's artistic portrayal of the oriental role by liberal applause.

The reception which "The Virgin of Stamboul" was accorded at this entertainment is another instance of the universal appeal which it holds, for young and old, rich and poor alike are unanimous in singing its praises.

A Week of Universal Pictures Delights New York Audiences

Effective Lobby Display for Universal Week at Time Theatre, Borough of Bronx, New York City.

THE Time Theatre in the Borough of the Bronx in New York City recently inaugurated, with the coming of September and the return of its patrons from the summer resorts, a fall festival, and celebrated this with a Universal picture every day for a week.

On Monday and Tuesday of the Fall Festival Week, the management showed "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals," the amazing travel-adventure film taken in the wilds of New Guinea, which has taken the country by storm. On Wednesday the Time Theatre patrons saw Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the Universal comedy twins in "La La Lucille," that rip-roaring farce taken from Fred Jackson's hilarious musical comedy of the same name which ran for many successful months in a New York City playhouse. Thursday and Friday the star attraction was the elaborate Oriental screen masterpiece, "The Breath Of The Gods," directed by the talented Rollin Sturgeon and featuring Tsuru Aoki, in private life the wife of Sessue Hayakawa. Saturday saw human Harry Carey in "Human Stuff" and the Sunday audience had lovely Edith Roberts in "The Adorable Savage" her latest release and numbered among her best.

A combined lobby and front display advertising the entire week's showing illustrated on this page, was used to excellent effect. The theatre was crowded to capacity all week and the management was well pleased with the result of its Fall Festival.

To arrange an exclusive Universal program for a theatre is an easy matter. Universal has such a variety of subjects and stars that a diverse and interesting program can always be devised. There are the special attractions, the wonderful Jewels, the star and Century comedies, International, The New Screen Magazine, the action westerns and lots more besides, all of which are released by Universal. All are tested kinds of productions and pull strong with exhibitors throughout the country.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS REEL IS FEATURED ON PROGRAM

IT is rarely that a news reel is made the headline attraction at a moving picture theatre, but reports are reaching the Universal home office that the first and exclusive moving pictures of Pope Benedict, released in International News No. 61 and 62, are being featured above all other attractions in certain parts of the country.

At Loew's Hippodrome Theatre in Baltimore, the pictures of the Pope were played up in electric lights over the entrance. The news reel was featured over a popular five reeler. Crowds waited two hours to get into the theatre.

George A. McDermit, manager of the theatre, arranged a special showing of the news reels at the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Baltimore, so that they might be seen by Cardinal Gibbons. It was the second time the Cardinal ever witnessed a moving picture. The only other time was a showing in which films taken of himself and Cardinal Mercier of Belgium were exhibited.

So great was the popularity of the Pope's pictures in Baltimore, several additional prints of the two news reels had to be rushed to that city. The reels were features in both the Loew and Keith houses, with other exhibitors besieging the Universal exchange for early bookings of the Vatican pictures.

The headquarters of the Knights of Columbus in New York has communicated to K. of C. organization all over the country as the first step in the arrangements of special showings and tie-ups with theatre booking the International News.

HERE'S SOME BOOST FOR THE SERIALS!

"Just a few lines to tell you that "THE MOON RIDERS" has been one of the greatest serials ever shown in The Star Theatre of Rockingham, N .C. and I would like to say that it has gone so far as to get the best money for us of any serial of the last fifteen months. We cannot take care of the crowd waiting to see the next show. This is the kind of serial we need all the time.

The Star Theatre, Rockingham, N. C.,
MR. W. G. ATKINSON, Mgr.

"If the balance of the episodes are anything like the first six of 'The Vanishing Dagger,' I must admit that it is the greatest serial ever made.

Eddie Polo is an idol and a hero in our town and "The Vanishing Dagger" will give him more fame, for he certainly is great in this picture."

GUS KERASOTES,

The First "Betty" Letter

DEAR BETTY:

Really didn't think you'd have time to think of me, for a new husband usually absorbs one completely, but I appreciate your giving me some consideration on your wedding tour, especially in view of the wonderful time you're having.

I can't answer all your questions today, as I'm due for a meeting in our projection room on the subject of "How to Fight the High Cost of Living," and the wonderful plan we have in mind will probably take a couple of hours to discuss.

Betty—the realization of OUR dream is within our grasp. I'm sorry you're not with us to share our happiness, but I'll keep you posted from week to week as to how the idea is working out, and perhaps when you set your little three and a half peddle in dear Old New York again, you'll join our Twelve O'clock party; that's just what it's gong to be dear.

You'll remember perhaps, that it was always a cinch to sell R. H. Cochrane an idea as to how to promote the contentment and happiness of the employees—well, Miss Wallach, and one of the new girls on tthe force, a titian haired Denver girl, who through her ability has been made Secretary to Mr. Goldstein—Oh, yes, I'll have to tell you all about Manny Goldstein's big jump from Sales Manager to Mr. Laemmle's Representative in my next letter—Well, the Titan haired girl, Miss Wallach and yours truly were chatting about the way the lunch rooms are robbing us poor working girls, when along came Vice-President Cochrane.

Instead of Mr. Cochrane scattering us to our department, he asked us what the row was about, and joined in conversation—the RESULT, well, he drew out his checkbook, signed the beautiful greeny green little slip of paper, and handed it to us to fill in the figures—what for? Why you dear silly stupid, to buy chairs, tables, victrola, dishes, coffee urn, a rug, rocking chairs—a cook if necessary, just so long as he could help us cut down our expenses and start accounts with the new bank that's going up on the corner.

Paul Gulick—by the way he's in charge of Publicity Department now—you'll say it's about time I know, and I agree with you—well, Paul's going to engineer the thing for us, and every man, woman and child in our Home Office, from tomorrow on, is GOING TO BRING THEIR LUNCH. We figure it's going to save each employee on an average of $12.00 per month—$144.00 per year Kid; which will be sufficient to buy our new Winter toggery, such as tailor-made suit, hat, and perhaps the gloves.

I'll tell you more next time, but in the interim, THINK OF WHAT YOU'RE MISSING.

PEGGY.

Why Not Bring Yours?

EMPLOYEES of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in New York, in an attempt to evade the high food prices charged by New York restaurants, recently organized a "Bring Your Lunch" club, and banned the restaurants in the vicinity of the Universal home office in the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway. Instead, the home-made luncheons are being eaten in a large room set aside for the purpose by R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal. A victrola has been installed in the lunch-club room and the Universal lunch hour now is a medley of sandwiches, jam and jazz.

The Universal lunch club was the first step taken in New York City in the movement to fight the high restaurant prices. Other companies quickly followed Universal's lead and business offices from the Battery to Columbus Circle now are out on lunch-strikes against food profiteering.

Following the inception of the movement at the Universal home office, the idea was inauguarated in the forty-odd branch exchanges of that film company throughout the United States. In almost every city, the Universal employees were among the leaders in the movement to oblige restauranteurs to bring down their prices.

In New York the movement was sanctioned by Mayor Hylan, the Commissioner of Markets and other officials. In response to inquiries as to Universal's success with "Bring Your Lunch" idea, Mr. Cochrane made the following statement:

"There are tangible signs of a general price drop but in some branches of business, particularly among restaurants in New York there seems to be no disposition to reduce prices. Farmers are getting less for their produce, but the restaurant men are charging the same prices."

"The remedy is refusal to buy at excessive prices. Luncheons at sixty-five and seventy-five cents are almost prohibitive for the average clerk or stenographer. Yet these same employes so far have been reluctant, because of appearance's sake, to bring their own lunches from home and eat them in the office."

"Everyone admits that profiteering was rampant during the war. Post-war-revelations, for instance, in sugar, were sufficient proof. Incidentally, one of the few industries which did not get the name of profiteering was the motion picture business. Motion picture companies in most cases are getting the same prices for their pictures to-day that they got before the war, although costs of materials, salaries and other expenses have increased. In isolated instances theatres have increased their charges, but generally the public has been able to enjoy its entertainment at pre-war prices."

"Our employees are unanimous in their adoption of the "Bring Your Lunch" movement, and feel that in a few days the movement will make itself felt and cause the restaurateurs to come to terms."

Considerable interest attended the inauguration of Universal's first "home-lunch" day. The film center on upper Broadway was surprised and curious when the Universal employees, from Mr. Cochrane down to the office boys, arrived in the morning with mysterious packages and pasteboard boxes. Word soon got out, however, that the fool strike was on.

When the Universal force, several hundred strong, assembled for lunch on the roof of the Mecca building because of the excellent weather, reporters and moving picture news camera men were on hand. They were busy throughout the lunch hour getting exciting close-ups of sleight-of-egg tricks, disappearing sandwich stunts, and so forth.

By a co-operative plan participated by the employees, hot coffee was served on the roof. After the cut-rate lunches all looked like thirty cents, the victrola was started, and the remainder of the lunch hour was devoted to dancing.

Mayor Hylan of New York City was invited to come and bring his own lunch. He could not attend, but dispatched a messenger to the Mecca building with a letter of commendation. In part he said:

"Allow me to commend the employees of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the forward step they have taken. The idea is an excellent one, and I am heartily in favor of it. Best wishes for the movement's success."

Anticipating cooler weather, Universal is fitting up half of the eighth floor of the Mecca building for the Universal "Bring Your Lunch" club. Chairs and tables have been installed, and arrangements have been made for the occasional attendance of vaudeville artists, singers and musicians, to give entertainment during the noon hour.

A committee, headed by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, is perfecting permanent facilities for the lunch club and has made arrangements to buy fruit and other foodstuff wholesale from the city market, to be sold at cost price to the employees on a co-operative plan.

Similar action is being taken at Universal's Fort Lee factory in New Jersey by a committee headed by Edward F. Murphy, superintendent of the plant. He is backed by the Universal Mutual Welfare Association, an organization of Universal factory employees.

All Universal employees are strongly behind the "Bring Your Lunch" movement. They point out that each one of them is saving at least fifty per cent. on the price of luncheons.

DAINTY STAR RETURNS FROM VISIT TO EAST

EDITH ROBERTS, Universal's diminutive star, has returned to Universal City after a lengthy vacation in New York City, her birthplace.

Immediately upon arriving at Universal's west coast studios she will begin work on a new picture, to follow her recent success in "The Adorable Savage," the South Sea picture adapted from Ralph Stock's popular novel, "Marama," which Norman Dawn directed for Universal. It has not been determined what her next picture will be. Several are being considered, among them "White Youth," a story by Forrest Halsey and Clara Beranger, noted playwrights. If her next picture is anything like "The Adorable Savage" it certainly will prove a winner. From all over the country the most glowing reports are pouring in concerning the enthusiastic reception accorded this production. Edith Roberts never looked prettier than in the picturesque semi-savage attire which she donned in this picture of the Fiji Isles and with her loveliness of face she fits the part like a glove. And her acting was never better than in "The Adorable Savage."

While in New York Miss Roberts celebrated her 18th birthday. She was feted by her former school chums of Public School 164, New York City, at a dance given in her honor in the Hotel Ansonia. The only draw-back to the occasion was the loss by Miss Roberts of a valuable pearl necklace which belonged to her mother. The New York Police instituted a search for the gems without success.

Stories to be Used in Connection

Elmo Lincoln, Star of "The Flaming Disk"

ELMO LINCOLN HAS HAD INTERESTING AND VARIED CAREER

ELMO LINCOLN, the broad-chested he-man who plays the leading role in "The Flaming Disk," is acknowledged to be the strongest man appearing in pictures. Proportioned like Hercules, and with the strength of Samson, he actually performs the feats of brute-strength shown in his pictures. He will not fake a scene. His motto is—"Any weakling can fake a stunt. I can Do them."

Lincoln's muscle training came about as the result of several years of railroading. He fired an engine for many months on the C. & E. I. Railroad. Although he was noted among his playmates in Rochester, Ind., his home, for his prodigal strength, heaving coal into the maw of a giant locomotive developed his physique to amazing proportions.

His advent into the screen world was preceded by two years on the stage, in a stock company. He left legitimate to take a part in "Brute Strength," an old Biograph production. From then on his screen success was assured.

Among the important pictures in which he played before joining the Universal forces, were "Burning Daylight," a picturization of Jack London's stirring novel, "Judith of Bethulia," "The Wonder of Woman," "The Birth of a Nation," and "Intolerance." In the last two mammoth productions he played the role of a mighty blacksmith.

It was the creation of the unique role of Tarzan, the huge ape-man, in Universal's picture, "Tarzan of the Apes," the first screen portrayal of Edgar Rice Burrough's popular character, that brought Lincoln to the ranks of Fame.

He then was starred in a Universal serial, "Elmo the Mighty," which attained unusual success. He next was featured in a second serial, "Elmo the Fearless."

Universal then starred him in a Universal-Jewel production, "Under Crimson Skies," in which the screen giant portrayed the role of a two-fisted sea captain. This picture still is being shown to crowded houses, so strong is its appeal.

In "The Flaming Disk," Lincoln plays a dual role, that of a fearless Secret Service agent, and also that of the agent's weakling twin, a creature of the criminal world. The ingenuity of photography and plot which keeps these two characters entwined and constantly together before the camera's eye makes it a picture long to be remembered for its novelty, as well as for its stirring action and breath-taking stunts.

ROY WATSON FINDS PLEASURE IN BEING WICKED ON THE SCREEN

FEW people are bad from choice, and similarly, very few actors enjoy playing villainous roles. There are a few, however, who take pride in their villainy and who enjoy being hissed as much as the average actor enjoys applause.

One of these is Roy Watson, who long has been noted for his suave bad-man characterizations. In such old stage favorites as "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "In Missouri," "Piney Ridge," and "The Usurper," he has been hissed in every theatre from Bangor, Me., to Tampa, Fla.

Then he turned his malign gaze towards the screen, and has been seen as the arch-crook in several photoplays. Recently he gained praise by his portrayal of the master criminal in "Elmo the Fearless," the Universal serial starring Elmo Lincoln, the screen giant.

Watson's work was so good in that serial, he was cast for a similar role in Elmo Lincoln's latest serial, "The Flaming Disk."

PSYCHIC INFLUENCES PLAY IMPORTANT PART IN "THE FLAMING DISK"

THE present day enlightenment on spiritistic and similar subjects has demonstrated to a startling degree the mystic workings of the subconscious mind. Mental influence and thought transmission no longer are considered fanciful, but are well established facts.

The mysterious power which is given to some individuals over the actions and thoughts of others, is remarkably illustrated in "The Flaming Disk," the Universal serial.

In it a master criminal subjects a brawny but weak-charactered youth of excellent family to his malign will. The result is a cunning, unscrupulous and powerful gangster.

The picture is a great moral lesson which should open the eyes of parents to the danger of permitting their children to come under the influence of baneful personalities, even casually.

"The Flaming Disk" is a chaptered photo-drama of the struggles between the U. S. Secret Service and a band of arch crooks. Elmo Lincoln, the Giant of the Screen, is the hero. By a clever combination of plot and expert photography, he also plays a second role, that of a young gangster, supposedly the twin brother of the hero, who is a Secret Service agent.

Adorable Louise Lorraine is the leading woman.

ELMO LINCOLN IS POSSESSED OF PERFECT DIMENSIONS

ELMO LINCOLN, the herculean star of "The Flaming Disk," the Universal serial, is reputed to be the most perfect specimen of manhood on the screen. He is without doubt the "biggest" man in pictures.

Here are his proportions:

Neck	17 inches
Biceps	16 "
Forearm	13 "
Chest (normal)	46 "
Chest (expanded)	52 "
Waist	34 "
Wrist	8 "
Thigh	24 "
Calf	16 "
Arms (spread)	72 "
Ankle	10 "

NOTED SCREEN BEAUTY SEEN IN "THE FLAMING DISK"

CREOLE beauty long has been noted in song and story. It is almost an axiom of Fate that the daughters of families of mixed French and Spanish blood should be of a bewitching, dark-haired, vivacious type of beauty such as makes the girls of the Gulf Coast of the United States noted the world over.

One of the most engaging examples of the Spanish-French heritage of beauty is to be found in "The Flaming Disk," the thrilling Universal serial. She is Louise Lorraine, one of the prettiest girls on the screen, and one whose dimples, smile and dark hair have made her popular wherever moving pictures are shown.

In "The Flaming Disk" she is the leading woman for mighty Elmo Lincoln, the Colossus of the Screen, who plays a dual role in this latest serial built around his giant strength. Miss Lorraine was chosen, says Lincoln, because she is "pretty and lively."

She began her screen career two years ago with Ruth Clifford in Lloyd Carlton's productions, "The Fighter," and "The Mason Woman." Then she went into comedy, playing the leading role in Christie's "Her Friend the Enemy." Following that she joined the Universal forces and appeared in a series of sparkling Rainbow Comedies.

When "Elmo the Fearless," a stirring chaptered melodrama of the West Coast timber-thieves was projected for Elmo Lincoln last fall, Miss Lorraine won the principal leading role. She won a couple of roles, in fact, as she was called upon to play a difficult dual role—two characters who looked alike but whose characteristics and actions had to be entirely different. She cleverly made each of the two characters a distinct personality.

So excellent was her work in that serial, that Lincoln would listen to no proposals which did not include Miss Lorraine for his leading woman in the present serial, "The Flaming Disk." The screen giant was particularly attracted by his pretty heroine because of her lack of fear, and her willingness at all times to take part in the most perilous feats and stunts.

HERALD FOR "THE FLAMING DISK" SURE TO AROUSE INTEREST

WHEN young and fearless Elmo Gray, the most trusted operative of the U. S. Secret Service, left his chief and hurried to the home of the aged inventor, Professor Robert Wade, to complete arrangements for the purchase of the scientist's great discovery, The Flaming Disk, a composite lens which focussed through steel, he little knew that Rodney Stanton, the head of a resourceful and powerful band of criminals, was plotting to entrap him and make way with the coveted invention. Gray's mind was on more pleasant thoughts—thoughts of pretty Helen Wade, the inventor's daughter, whom he had met that morning, and whose smile had stirred in him an awakening love-interest.

Only one thought arose to cloud his sunny outlook. His twin brother, Jim Gray, had fallen into the power of the Stanton gang, and under the master criminal's hypnotic influence. Jim Gray had become a veritable slave of the relentless misdoer.

Elmo dashed up the front steps of the twin houses, one of which housed Prof. Wade's laboratory, and entered. Not until he was inside and beset by Stanton's gang did he suspect he had been misled into entering the wrong house. He did not know that at the same moment his twin brother was next door, passing himself off as the Secret Service agent in an attempt to obtain The Flaming Disk.

The eyes of Love may be blind, but they are discriminating. Helen sounded the deception of the wayward brother, and even as Elmo struggled with the outlaws who sought to down him, twenty yards away, the plucky girl faced the false "Elmo" and precipitated the struggle which ended with the death of her father, the loss of part of the magic lens, and her own kidnapping by the ruthless band of arch-criminals.

How the daughty Elmo, overcoming his assailants, rushed to the defense of the girl and to regain the missing disk, and how event after event followed of thrilling consequence, in which he and the fearless young woman were thrown together time and time again in hair-raising predicaments, is shown with startling realism in the successive episodes of "The Flaming Disk," the Universal super-serial which commences at this theatre next ———, and in which the mighty Elmo Lincoln, hero of a series of wonder-serials, plays a remarkable duo of roles.

DIRECTOR HILL DISCUSSES SPECIAL SIDE OF PHOTOGRAPHY

"TRICK photography is no longer the plaything of the moving picture world," said Robert F. Hill, Universal director, in a recent interview when "The Flaming Disk," his most recent production, was under discussion.

"The photographic possibilities of double exposure, superimposing negatives and the other technical methods of the trick photographer, have outgrown the screen comedy and similar amusing usages. By the proper adaptation of trick photography we have learned to open up a phase of the motion picture which never before could be utilized and which has no counterpart on the dramatic stage."

"In the first place it enables us to stimulate occurrences which are necessary to the story of a photo-play and which could not possibly be accomplished without serious injury to the actors. The most important adaptation, however, is the obtainment of supernatural effects, as best evidenced in a recent photo-play in which the half-seen spirit of one of the characters appeared at intervals throughout the picture and was a vital part of the picture's bigness."

"Duplication of personality is of equal advantage in the utilization of trick photography. In "The Flaming Disk," the serial starring Elmo Lincoln, he was called upon to play a dual role—that of twin brothers. These two brothers frequently had to appear in the picture together and on occasion converse and even struggle with one another. This effect was possible only by double exposure and timing of the most expert type. The results were surprising. Much credit, however, is due to the expert acting of Elmo Lincoln, who made two entirely different characters of the two brothers, despite their resemblance, and thus helped considerably to make the dual characterization absolutely realistic."

TO have come East with a shipment of steers and seeing the docks in a large city meant quite a bit to "Square" Winslow, owner of a large ranch in Ariona. "Square" arrived at the docks in time to see Bjorn Klavok and his daughter, Gerda, who had just come over from the "Country of the Oppressed," exit from the immigration office. Bjorn, through a misunderstanding, gets himself into trouble with an officer of the law, and is rescued by the timely interference of "Square" Winslow. "Square" decides to make a real, true American out of the immigrant, and invites him to his ranch in Arizona.

Things are not so roseate for Bjorn and his daughter on the ranch, as the cowboys seem to take a great delight in jovial expressions at Bjorn's expense, which has a tendency to imbue him with the spirit that America is analogous in fact to the principles of his native country "Square" again comes to his rescue, and convinces him that it would be for the best to shave off his outer facial decorations, which Bjorn reluctantly consents to do.

As time elapses, "Square" is appointed sheriff for the country, and in turn appoints Bjorn foreman of his ranch. "Square" leaves the money for the payroll with Gerda, and rides out to meet Bjorn. who is somewhere on the ranch. Melchor, formerly employed on the ranch, peering through the bushes, sees what has transpired, and knowing Gerda to be alone, takes advantage of her. As he struggles with Gerda, a stranger who has lost himself, enters upon the scene and struggles with Melchor. Melchor notices the arrival of Bjorn and "Square" in the distance, and attempts to extricate himself from the predicament in which he has placed himself. Under threat of death to her father, he forces Gerda to tell them that the stranger is really the crook who attempted to forcibly take the money from her. As "Square" faces the stranger, he discovers that he is his brother. Not desiring to place his own brother under arrest, he empowers Bjorn with the authority of law, who makes the arrest. "Square," in the meantime, discovers Melchor with the gun on the outside, struggles with him and makes him prisoner, thereby forcing him to confess who the real thief is.

Bjorn is so impressed with this, that he firmly resolves to secure his second papers. He is firmly convinced that the laws of America are in no way analogous to those of his native country. As he expresses his desire that some day his daughter marry an American, "Square" takes him at his word, and pulling out an engagement ring, places it on Gerda's finger.

Dr. Redding	Wadsworth Harris
King Carson	Otto Lederer
Harlan Keeler	Harland Tucker

MARIE screams as she discovers the presence of the thug and the timely assistance of the servants rescues her from his clutches. He escapes, however.

In the meantime, Peggy is struggling madly with Carson, who has reached her boat. Peggy manages to render Carson unconscious and leaping on to a passing scow, she makes her escape, finally landing on one of the docks.

Carson comes to and starts in pursuit of Peggy. Over sampans loaded with merchandise he gives chase. She hides in one of the huts and when Carson is out of sight she finally manages to hire an automobile to take her home, where she relates her story to her aunt and Marie.

Marie, listening to her, decides that her enemies are on the way to Peking, and gets ready to follow them, although she is weak from her recent struggle. Disguised as a Chinese girl she sets out.

Carson meets Dr. Redding in Peking. Redding has an appointment there with Keeler. Both Carson and Redding think they are rid of Marie, but decide to watch out for Peggy.

Marie is met in Peking by a sister of the Chinese woman employed in the home of Peggy's aunt. Keeler is met by Redding at the Chien Mien Gate, where Marie and her friend also wander. Marie and the Chinese woman stroll across the plaza into the famous Summer Palace, wherein are stored valuable treasures. Here, where carved lotus flowers of all kinds are to be seen, Marie seeks a clue to the missing petals. She is almost recognized by Keeler.

It is left to Carson, however, who has arrived at the palace with a henchman, to discover Marie's identity. He sets the guards on the two women, telling them that they are endeavoring to rob the palace. A mad chase follows, and Marie runs breathlessly, in her desperate attempt to elude her pursuers. But she fails. The guards batter down the door at one end of the palace which she has barred against them, and they take her captive. She is guilty of a heinous crime in their eyes, in that she has profaned the sacred place.

Carson demands of her the whereabouts of the petals. Receiving no answer, he puts a rope around her neck, tightens it and prepares to hang her.

JAKE WILLIAMS, the son of a wealthy lumberman, is seated in the "Whte Fox Tavern"—a saloon located in Lebec, a small town situated in the far north of Canada. His chief diversion is gambling and drinking, always to excess. Baptiste Codras, owner of Jake's rendezvous, still holds out hope that some day Lebec will regain its former popularity and endeavors to drown his sorrows in selling drinks to Jake and a few of the main stayers. Jake's father, Williams, Sr., who still possesses the first dollar he ever made, arrives home on horseback and enters the cabin where he employs Jean Codrae, a maid-of-all-work, who is striving to earn enough money for a college education. Her only pal as comfort is a dog that roams about the house. She is seated at the table, with the dog in her lap, writing something in her diary as Williams, Sr., enters. He says to her, "Get outside with your damn scribbling." She leaves the house with the dog and seats herself on a log, where she continues writing in her diary of the days' occurrences. She writes, "Sometimes he is so mean I could kill him, but I just need a hundred dollars more and——" Williams, Jr., arrives home in an intoxicated condition and enters just as Williams, Sr., is at the safe getting money from box. The father upbraids Jake for being intoxicated and Jake grabs a hand full of bills. They both fight and Jake hits his father over the head with a bottle. Joan hears noise and runs to the house, where she is confronted by Jake. In her excitement she drops the diary. The dog picks up the diary between his teeth and starts with it under the cupboard. Jake forces Joan to leave with him and makes his get-away.

Kirk McLean, of the mounted police force, hears of the murder and goes to the "White Fox Tavern" to try and get some information about Jake, but is met with a rebuff. He finally forces Uncle Ebner, the nigger porter, to accompany him to where Williams lives. When Kirk arrives at the house and enters, he lights the lamp in tome to see the dog run from under the cupboard with the diary in his mouth. He catches the dog and secures the diary, which he reads. Kirk starts on a hunt for Jean, thinking she is the murderer, while Ebner runs back to the tavern to tell the news of Kirk's departure for Jean. The men in the tavern resent Kirk's accusation and start out to follow Kirk. Kirk discovers Jean and Jake in the woods after Jake fires a shot at a rabbit, which he wanted for food. Kirk covers them both and asks Jean for explanations. Jake denies her accusations and opens fire. The cowboys who have been trailing, mistaking his shooting for Kirk's, open fire and kill Jake. Kirk and Jean make their getaway. He jumps from his horse and hides as the cowboys ride past. Kirk waits until all have passed but the rear one, whom he covers with a gun and hops on his horse. He disarms the cowpunchers and ropes them together. Jean comes back to Kirk and explains to all and pleads for the cowpunchers. Kirk frees them for her sake and—they make plans for their honeymoon.

Harry wheeled the old guy to the beach and then promptly forgot about his charge when he heard him snoring and the chair took a little rapid stroll all by its lone and was only saved from destruction by Harry comng to his senses. But somehow the old guy was pleased with Harry, proving again that there is no accounting for crochety tastes.

Harry let the chair bump down the front steps and old man Peach got out and ran. Harry ran, too, and tried to hang himself on the cable rope attached to a street car. Imagine the surprise when the old man handed him $10,000 as a reward for helping him regain the use of his heretofore powerless legs! THE train demolishes Elmo's automobile but he jumps for a flat car on which Helen and her captors are riding. By taking up Jim's slouching air, he manages to palm himself off as his brother and accompanies the crooks to their mountain lair at Redbrook, where he apprises Helen of his real identity as she is being locked in a dungeon and chained to the wall.

Jim, who has been left behind in the fight, revives and discovers that Stanton has gone to Redbrook. He calls the Redbrook watchman on the wire, but the watchman, seeing Stanton and Elmo approaching, and believing that Elmo is Jim, refuses to believe the real Jim. He is finally convinced, however, and prepares to warn Stanton, but he is killed by a high voltage current when he answers the telephone again a moment later.

Jim then dashes to Redbrook in a taxi and is pursued by the mysterious motorcyclist, who leaps into the machine. They struggle; Jim overcomes the cyclist and throws him out of the car. He leaves his half of the precious disk in the car and Jim gets hold of it.

In the meantime, Elmo, by a ruse, has gained possession of Stanton's half of the disk and substituted a pepper cruet in its place. While he is below with Helen, the real Jim arrives and Elmo is locked in with Helen. He forces the trap door, however, and engages in a desperate struggle, finally escaping with the girl. He is pursued by part of the gang, however, and as he reaches the perilous foot bridge, high up in the air, and makes for the other side, Stanton cuts the ropes which hold the bridge in place; it swings downward, leaving Elmo clinging to a raft with his feet and swinging Helen in midair with his brawny arm. Death seems certain for the two.

YOU can be sure you have a thoroughly satisfactory picture in this absorbing romance of old days on the Mississippi, when men who smiled at the loss of a fortune at cards dueled to the death for a woman's honor.

ITS color delights—its old-fashioned atmosphere and wholesomeness appeal irresistibly. It's one of those satisfying pictures that make folks go away with the pleasant knowledge of having been perfectly entertained.

"HITCHIN' POSTS"

BIG PICTURES ARE MAD

As giant oaks from little acorns grow, so do pictures with a big heart appeal grow from simple little elementals. Ordinarily, you wouldn't attach much importance to an average American boy, a baby, a dog and a jam bottle, but surround these with events in the lives of the sort of folks you and I know—make them the pivot around which revolve emotions commonplace enough to be powerful universally, and you have the beginning of real drama. But do not stop there—go right into the hearts of your everyday folks—show them people in whose lives a broken jam bottle really means something; then contrast such a homely tragedy with the comparative tremendousness of the situation of the boy trapped in the belfry of a burning church, and you begin to grasp the bigness in appeal of "Pink Tights."

AVES EASON JR

"PINK TIGHTS"

Story by J.U.Geisy

He's Little, But Oh My!

To have made a success at the tender age of four is the unusual achievement of Reaves Eason, Jr., otherwise known as "Breezy." Critics are beginning to keep a very watchful eye on this youngster, for they realize that he is more than just cute—he can ACT.

Breezy is the son of Reaves Eason, the director, who has made some notable pictures for Universal, such as "Blue Streak McCoy," in which Harry Carey starred, and "Pink Tights," in which Gladys Walton made so auspicious a bow to the public as a star. The elder Eason is an actor of no mean ability, and took part in many prominent pictures before he devoted his abilities to directing. His wife also was a well-known cinema actress before her marriage, so that Breezy comes by his talent quite naturally.

Breezy romped through a considerable number of one and two reelers before his daddy graduated him into features. For daddy Eason is keenly interested in his young son's talent, guides and advises him at every turn, and never permits him to undertake anything that is not within the bounds of his artistic development. Breezy took a prominent part in the recent Harry Carey feature, "Blue Streak McCoy." But it was left to "Pink Tights" to give him the opportunity of his career. In this adorable comedy drama of the circus, the little lady and the minister, Breezy plays the role of a real, honest-to-goodness boy, a boy who delights in jam and doughnuts and green apples, who forgets to mind the baby, who sneaks away to the circus, and who has his finger in all the business of the village, be it personal or otherwise. The picture was lauded to the skies; the dainty star was highly commended; the director received praise by the wholesale, but it was left to Breezy to "walk off with the show." "Some kid," was the comment of everybody, and "my, but can't that youngster act." The role was just fitted to Breezy, however, for Breezy is a real, honest-to-goodness boy, in spite of the world of make-believe in which he lives and in spite of the fact that he is a successful actor. After working-hours he romps about just as other children, is keenly interested in his toys, loves to ride horseback like other boys, and delights to play around in the open. But most of all, the big camera interests him and he is never weary of examining it.

The home life of the Eason family is a charming one. Breezy and Dad Eason and Mother Eason live as "one" in the prettiest of Hollywood bungalows. Mr. and Mrs. Eason watch over their talented little youngster constantly and are careful to have him remain "a real little boy" in spite of Breezy's talents and the petting and praise which come to him from all sides.

WOMEN love strong men. Some women love men strong in body; others adore men strong in mind, or in principle, or in sentiment, or in any one of countless things. But all women admire such a man as is the leading figure in this drama of Wall Street and Walled Hearts. And because of this you can be sure of the woman vote on this picture. Sure of the woman vote, you are certain of profits. Book it.

THE STORY

It's a long call from driving cattle for a living to amassing a great fortune on Wall Street, but that is exactly what Richard Strong did within a period of five years, gaining the enmity of Daniel Brewster, crafty stock gambler, as he fights his way to the top.

Edwin Rossiter is also caught on the wrong side of the market and faces bankruptcy. Strong greatly admires Rossiter's daughter, Elinor, and tries to break down the social barrier she has erected between them. Charles Dalton, a distant relative of Elinor's, is in love with her and she is frankly fond of him, but her devotion to her father is so great she agrees to marry Strong when she learns of Rossiter's difficulties.

Dalton plunges into dissipation, attends a wild party given by Zoldene, a dancer, and caught on the rebound he marries the aetress on the same day Elinor becomes Strong's wife.

Brewster prepares to raid Strong's stocks and blacken his reputation while he is on his honeymoon, but Strong's private secretary learns of the plot and sends him a warning telegram. When Strong tells Elinor he must return to the city at once, she cannot understand his willingness to abruptly end his wedding trip for what she believes to be a question of money. A quarrel ensues during which Elinor tells Strong their marriage was a miserable mistake, but Strong tells her forcefully that she will go with him to the home he has provided for her.

Zoldene and Dalton soon separate, and Dalton becomes very attentive to Elinor. Brewster has been carrying Dalton's marginal stock transactions, and when he demands a large sum which Dalton cannot pay, he suggests that Dalton seek employment with Strong and give him inside information regarding his business. Dalton secures employment with Strong and his attentions to Elinor become more marked. The breach constantly widens between Elinor and Strong. He asks if she loves someone else, and Elinor says she will tell him the man's name when she is sure of herself. Strong agrees to set her free if the man is worthy of her. At that moment Dalton calls to take Elinor to a reception, and Strong is convinced Dalton is the man. Later that night Strong visits a cafe and is introduced to Zoldene. He offers to pay her a large sum of money to be seen with him at various places, and Zoldene agrees to the proposition. He does this to aid his wife in her evidence against him, should he decide to let her divorce him.

Later "The Town Tattler" publishes a veiled article connecting the names of Strong and Zoldene. That afternoon Strong is summoned out of town. He is determined to discover whether or not Dalton is worthy of Elinor and leaves him in full charge of the office during his absence.

Dalton goes to Brewster and the two complete their plan to ruin Strong.

Boys! I apologize!

(An open letter to Lyons & Moran)

BOYS—when you came to me last winter in New York City and told me you wanted to make regular, sure-enough, five-reel modern comedies I thought for a moment that you were trying me out as the goat in a new one-reeler—that pretty soon the bathing girls would come trooping in and we'd all fall into the pool together. So I laughed and let you talk—until—it suddenly came over me that you were in earnest. Right then all the comedy stuff stopped—I was up against something serious. Because—to be perfectly frank about it—to be as truthful as I always hope to be—I didn't think you could do it!

As one-reelers—as two-reelers—you were splendid—the best I've ever seen and my memory goes back a long, long ways. But as five-reelers—well—for your sakes, just as much as for my own, I just naturally hated to try it. The whole country knew you as the best short-comedy two in the business—and why go into something in which you might fail?

But, boys—I take off my hat to you—I apologize—you've succeeded!

I was wrong from the start—and you were right—and, as a result, you've given the exhibitor exactly and precisely what he's been hankering for for a long time without knowing just what he wanted—a modern, strictly modern, comedy-drama, bright as a diamond, clean as a whistle, dressed up like a bridegroom on his wedding morn. "EVERYTHING BUT THE TRUTH"—"LA LA LUCILLE"—"ONCE A PLUMBER"—nobody in the whole wide world could want anything brighter or cleaner or faster or better cast and staged than these three with which you've started out to make a brand new reputation for yourselves as two sparkling stars in the list of Universal Special Attractions.

Go to it, boys! Here's my apology—and my blessing!

FRANK MAYO HAS HAD A VARIETY OF ROLES

Every time Frank Mayo appears in a certain role the theatre-going public is quite sure that this is the sort of a part they always want to see him in. In the past year and a half, since he has been starring in Universal productions, he has been seen in about ten distinct characterizations—each different from the other—and each time his admirers have quite agreed that his last part was the best he had yet played.

The reason for this is that Frank Mayo is a real actor, not simply a type. He injects his personality into every new screen portrait he is called upon to present, and while giving the character the advantage of his art and skill, the part completely envelops and conceals the real Frank Mayo.

Recent Universal photoplays have presented him to the public as a rough lumberjack and a polished man of letters; as a pioneer western ranchman and a New York millionaire; as a river gambler and a peddler; as a customs officer and an artist; as a secret service man and playwright. In each part he has been seen as a distinct personality, changing not only his make-up and his costume, but his entire characterization.

Of course the public knows that Frank Mayo inherits his histrionic skill from a long line of famous American actors. He played on the stage before he was five years old, and won a reputation in London before he was old enough to vote.

In his latest feature, "The Marriage Pit," in which he is to be seen at the ——— Theatre next ———, he has the role of a self-made man of the world—a part in which he is enabled to show several phases of his many sided art.

YOUNG ACTOR MEETS WITH EARLY SUCCESS

Ray Ripley, the handsome scoundrel of a half dozen recent screen successes, is again exercising his wiles in the films, and this time his villainy is directed against Frank Mayo, who is starring in "The Marriage Pit," coming to the ——— Theatre next ———.

Ray Ripley has only been in pictures about fifteen months, but every part he has played has raised him higher in the estimation of the public. He first appeared on the screen in "The Belgian," with Walker Whiteside, and then with Theda Bara in "Under Two Flags." His first appearance at Universal City occurred just a year ago, when he played opposite Lieutenant Locklear in the first photodrama of the clouds, "The Great Air Robbery." He played the heavy in that story, taking almost as many chances in mid-air as the intrepid aviator who recently lost his life.

In this connection it might be interesting to note that Locklear and Ripley shared a house in Hollywood for some months last winter, and when Ray heard of the death of his pal he was so deeply affected that the director excused him from the set for two days.

Ray Ripley was born in New York, but the family moved west when he was quite young. He attended the schools of Portland, and graduated from the Oregon Agricultural College. He first went on the stage with a western stock company and soon found himself back in New York. He was featured in a number of stage productions, among them "The Third Degree," "Kindling" and "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath."

In "The Marriage Pit" Ray Ripley has his second role opposite Frank Mayo. He will be remembered as the supposed villain in "The Girl in 29," a recent Mayo feature.

STAGE STAR PLAYS LEAD OPPOSITE FRANK MAYO

Frank Mayo has a new leading lady in his latest Universal photodrama, "The Marriage Pit," and her name is Lillian Tucker. Miss Tucker is not very well known to the majority of screen patrons, as her reputation has been scored on the musical comedy and dramatic stage, although she did appear in motion pictures about three years ago, and scored an emphatic success.

Miss Tucker, just out of school, was given a small part in "Madame Sherry," the big musical comedy triump, when it was produced in New York, and before the piece ended its run she was playing one of the phincipal roles. When the production went on the road Miss Tucker was playing the chief feminine part—the one created in New York by Lina Abarbanell.

Later Lillian Tucker tried the dramatic stage and gradually worked her way to the top. She played leading roles in several Broadway successes, and was finally engaged by Oliver Morosco to be leading lady of his Los Angeles Stock Company, where she remained for an entire season. While in the midst of the film industry Miss Tucker naturally received many offers to appear on the screen, and she did play leading roles in several film productions; opposite two well known screen stars. At that time, however, she received a tempting offer to go to Australia and star in a number of dramatic successes in which she had appeared in New York, and she decided to make the trip. She scored a hit there and remained two years.

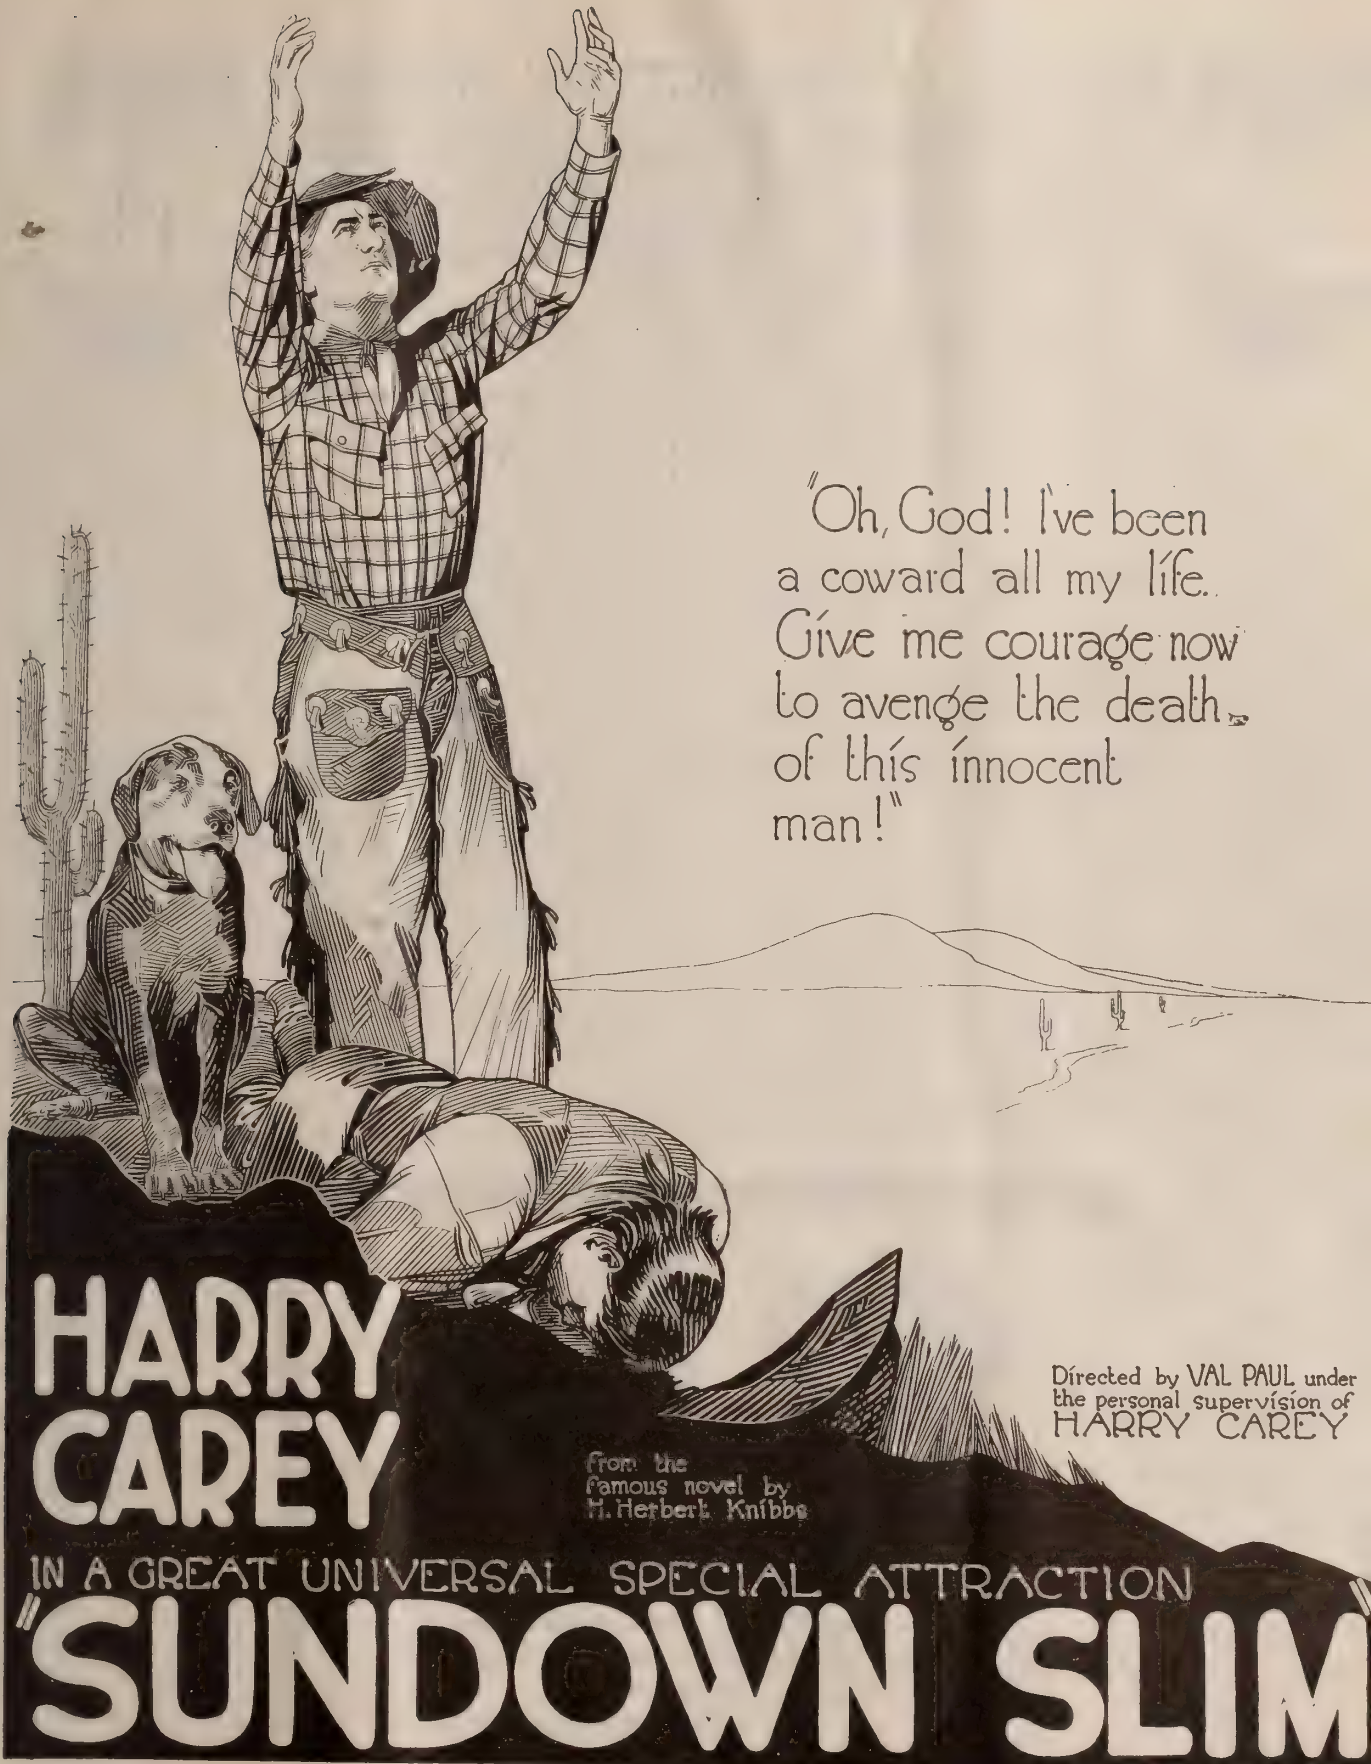
Miss Tucker had just returned from the Antipodes and was on her way to New York, when she was induced by Frank Mayo to stop over at Universal City long enough to play opposite him in "The Marriage Pit."

ADVANCE NOTES FOR "THE MARRIAGE PIT"

Belle Stoddard Johnstone, who plays the mother in "The Marriage Pit," a Universal special feature starring Frank Mayo which comes to the ——— Theatre on ———, happens to be the aunt of the star. Twenty years ago she was one of the best known leading women on the American stage. For the past few years she has been living in retirement in California. Frank Mayo induced his aunt to accept the role in "The Marriage Pit."

The rise in popularity of Frank Mayo, luminary of the films, is quite remarkable. Entirely unknown to the screen three years ago, he is now ranked with the ten leading male stars of the silent drama. His latest feature, "The Marriage Pit," from the pen of Frederick Isham, directed by Frederick Thomson and produced by Universal, is announced for next ——— at the ——— Theatre.

Lillian Tucker, who plays the leading feminine role with Frank Mayo the ——— Theatre on ———, is a recent recruit from the dramatic stage. Making her first hit in New York, she was soon called to Los Angeles to be leading woman of the Morosco Stock Company. Consequently a number of motion picture producers began to bid for her services and she became a convert to the screen.



"Oh, God! I've been a coward all my life. Give me courage now to avenge the death of this innocent man!"

CURIOSITY is one of the characteristics which is not confined to women. Men have it just as acutely developed. It is our belief, too, that exhibitors of motion pictures have just as much of it as any other class of men. Assuming that this is so, thousands of exhibitors must be consumed with curiosity to know what all the secrecy about Eric von Stroheim portends. Now it is a fact that Universal has not intended to be secretive about Von Stroheim's new picture. The company has been so busy supplying the demand for "The Devil's Passkey" that they have had no opportunity to "tell the world" about "Foolish Wives." Now that "The Devil's Passkey" is well launched as the dominant photoplay of 1920, and is making a record in every house where it has been shown, the curiosity about "Foolish Wives" will be satisfied.

Von Stroheim went back to the coast after his last trip to New York with a determination to put over the greatest production that had ever been made in America. In as much as all Mr. Von Stroheim's productions have a European setting it can readily be seen how expensive all of this director's pictures are. In this connection it is worthy of note that the British censor was absolutely speechless when told that "Blind Husbands" had not been taken in the Austrian Tyrol and most of the American newspaper reviewers "admitted" in their reviews of "The Devil's Passkey" that it manifestly had been taken in Paris.

Now "Foolish Wives" is a story of Monte Carlo and there is nothing in this country that looks at all like the Riviera. Therefore this dauntless director set to work to reconstruct at Universal City and Monterey the principal buildings that to the majority of people constitute Monte Carlo. An army of carpenters and builders is at work on these two places and the huge white structures are rapidly assuming such shape that they can be photographed and utilized in the tense dramatic story of European life that Von Stroheim himself wrote and in which he will play a role.

"Foolish Wives" is going to be a gigantic thing from every angle and every exhibitor has a right to anticipate it as a greater money maker than either "Blind Husbands" or "The Devil's Passkey."

A "KING OF THE CIRCUS" NUMBER

THE Moving Picture Weekly dated October 30 will be a special Number devoted solely to the interests of "King of the Circus," the new Universal Serial in which Eddie Polo will appear. This issue of the Weekly will contain a vast amount of material about Polo himself and the serial in general. In effect it will serve as a press book for the serial and every exhibitor who does not bind the Weeklies and save them is urged to save this book so that he will be in possession of all the material he needs on "King of the Circus" well in advance of the release date.

One of the interesting things in connection with "King of the Circus" is that it was written by Polo himself and is in reality a realistic depiction of a number of events in his own life.

W. C. Herrmann, the executive manager of the Big "U" Exchange, Universal's New York branch, has left New York on a three months tour of inspection, during which he will visit every Universal branch exchange in the United States and Canada. He is accompanied by his wife.

Herrmann has before him the job of introducing into the management of all Universal exchanges, the business system he has built up in the Big "U" Exchange, and which is considered by film men and exhibitors to be one of the best in the country.

"BILL" HAS A BIG TIME

THERE are plenty of good times to be had in this merry old world, but "Bill" who whistles away cheerily while he is writing his entertaining stories for the Los Angeles Express claims that he had the best time of them all when he visited Universal City not so long ago. "Bill" and his friend, the cartoonist, took in the whole show and then summarized their impressions in a picture story which is reproduced on the opposite page. "Bill" is not to be taken too seriously, however. He pokes fun at everybody, just because that is his way, but really and truly he was favorably impressed with what he saw at Universal City.

The shock of seeing Eileen Sedgwick gracefully draped in a leopard skin was a bit strong for "Bill" at first, but after he watched the filming of the jungle scenes in "The Diamon Queen" (formerly called "The Queen of the Diamonds") her latest serial, he forgot all about it, for the leopard skin fitted in wonderfully well with the wild and woolly jungle. "Bill" even went so far as to suggest it as a comfortable garment for climatic conditions in California. At any rate "The Diamond Queen" made a big impression which it should, for it is something new entirely in the serial line, and it contains enough thrills for three serials. And besides, there is Eileen Sedgwick, who is daring indeed, beautiful in form and easy to look upon.

From the jungles of Africa to the jungles of South America was a big jump which "Bill" took quite easily. Frank Mayo was working out some scenes for "The Throwback," which centers to a considerable extent around a rubber plantation. This story was written by Jacques Jaccard himself and is being directed by him so that "Bill" was privileged to look upon not only the handsome Mayo but the illustrious author as well. Jaccard's shirt sure did take the visitor's eye and also he could not refrain from having displayed in his paper the handsome profile of Frank Mayo. Since this was only the millionth time that Frank's perfect profile had appeared in print, Frank was naturally quite moved when he gazed on it.

"WHAT 'BILL' SAID"

"On the six hundred acres of land. Compromising the celluloid empire. Of which Isadore Bernstein is emperor. There are enough different things doing all the time. To make a three-ring circus seem as quiet and inactive. As a roof garden. During a snowstorm."

"I desire to say. To such female readers as I may have. That as an article of feminine wear. I can't recommend leopar skins too highly. No wardrobe is complete without one. They lend themselves at once. To not only the climatic demands of Southern California. But to absolutely freedom of movement! And they wear great. I don't know, though, if you'll all look as good as Eileen. In a leopard skin suit. That's your affair."

"Well, "Bill" had had enough of jungles and primitive passions for a while, so he decided to seek some utra-cultured, sophisticated society for a while. He didn't have to seek far, however, for he soon came upon Monte Carlo, reproduced with amazing exactitude by the clever Erich Von Stroheim for his next big Jewel feature, "Foolish Wives." The visitor saw Sam De Grasse, Maude George, Mae Busch, and the rest of the crowd that usually loiters about Monte Carlo with Erich, but he also met a newcomer in the person of Malveen Polo, the daring Eddie's charming young daughter, a beautiful girl who is making her screen debut in "Foolish Wives." And having heard so much about Marguerite Armstrong, the dazzling blonde who will be the wicked Erich's new leading lady, "Bill" cast his eagle eye out for her, but nowhere was she to be found. But, finally, he saw a bed, a big, beautiful bed, and almost buried under its covers was the fair Marguerite. She was ill, poor girl, and "Bill" was quite overcome that one so fair should be so afflicted, but when he learned that it was all in the cause of the story, he was quite relieved.

Being a true son of California "Bill" began to long for a bit of native air, so he visited the San Francisco which Tod Browning, the wonderful director of "The Virgin of Stamboul" had constructed for the vivacious Priscilla Dean as a part of her next big picture, "Outside the Law," a Jewel release of which great things are expected. Tod wrote the story of it too. "Bill" having a bit of the Bohemian in him, relished that set indeed, for it represented San Francisco's darkest corner—"Chinatown," the mysterious and the fascinating. Priscilla was quite excited when she saw her old friend "Bill," but not more so than "Bill" when he viewed all the celebrities who were supporting the celebrated star—handsome Wheeler Oakman, her husband, Lon Chaney, E. A. Warren, Ralph Lewis, Walton Taylor, Melbourne McDowell, Ralph Lewis and others.

"Bill" called on his friend Joe Martin and shook hands with the rest of the inhabitants of the zoo. When he got through there, he felt that he needed sometiing real human, so he looked about for Harry Carey and was told that Harry was down in Arizona on location for "West is West" his next picture, which Val Paul is directing and which is by that delightful author of so many other western stories, Eugene Manlove Rhodes. So "Bill" thought he like to have a chat with a bit of exquisite femininity, but Carmel Myers was no where to be found. She had finished work for the day on her new picture, "The Orchid," in which she is supported by Pell Trenton, and which is being directed by the newest addition to the Universal directorial forces, Marcel de Sano, who, though a youngster in years ("Bill" found out he was only twenty-six), has a talent for directing pictures that is mature indeed.

Well, "Bill" was pretty tired by that time so he decided to call it a day. But as he was going out, "Hoot" Gibson saw him, and lassoed him in again. "Bill" was a bit sore at that, but his frown changed to smiles mighty soon, for there to his right were Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, cutting some comical capers for their new comedy, "Fixed by George," and right near them, Dorothea Wolbert, the funniest lady on the screen, cooking up some good mischief for "The Cook," the short reel comedy which Vin Moore is producing and in which she is featured. So, having left Universal City with a grin, "Bill" was seized with the desire to impart the grin to the rest of Los Angeles, and he did, with the aid of his friend the cartoonist, the next morning in the Los Angeles Express. Judging from the opposite page, that grin must have been a real honest-to-goodness one.

Universal Has

UNIVERSAL'S "Carry-Your-Lunch" movement opened auspiciously indeed with such a sunshiny day that lunch baskets were carried to the roof and employees ate and laughed and danced and made merry under a clear blue sky. International Film Service, always on the alert for something peppy and new and something that is really "good stuff" was on the job fully equipped and the pictures to the left are the result of the crankings of the camera-man. Incidentally they show how many pretty girls help daily to make Universal pictures really universal. These entertaining "shots" appeared in International News Issue No. 65, and Universal feels confident that they must have somewhere in this big Universe inspired others to beat the high cost of living and go back to the good old lunch basket. When the prints were ready for showing, they were rushed over to 1600 Broadway; a huge gong was sounded; all work was stopped; everybody in Universal piled into the pretty projection room to see themselves as others saw them. The projectionist said that in all his long experience he had never shown such a popular picture to such an enthusiastic audience.

The "Carry-Your-Lunch" plan still continues to swing along merrily at Universal. Employees are keen about the plan, and say that not only do they save money, but they enjoy their food to a greater extent and they eat more. Officials of the Company have been more than generous. The eighth floor has been turned over to employees as a lunch room, a space so valuable that is renting valuation runs into three figures weekly. A victrola with the best of jazz records has been provided, and after they have eaten their fill, young and old alike fox trot and one step and waltz. A piano is promised in the near future, and an entertainment committee has been appointed so that something interesting is provided for each lunch hour. And already there are rumors in the air about a place to rest at noon for "the girls" and a place to smoke at noon for "the boys." In fact, so popular is the eighth floor at 1600 Broadway becoming that Universal is having a hard time keeping outsiders out, who are attracted by the music, the laughter, the dancing and the general merriment that prevails.

Not only International gave the Universal publicity on this economizing plan. The newspapers became interested in the idea and printed stories about what was doing at 1600 Broadway. And then to cap the climax, Briggs, one of the most famous of the country's cartoonists, whose daily cartoons are a source of huge merriment to thousands throughout the country who read "The New York Tribune," got tremendously interested in this "Carry-Your-Lunch" movement and sat down and drew a funny little picture story about it which is herewith reproduced. With mayors of big cities interested and cartoonists of big papers interested and officials of big companies interested, and seriously so, all of them, it looks like the restaurants will have to look to their menus and worry a bit about filling up the old cash box again. Universal feels that it has added its "bit" to this worthy cause, and as far as 1600 Broadway and its environs are concerned it knows that IT HAS STARTED SOMETHING THIS TIME!

The initiation of this "Carry-Your-Lunch" plan, the carrying out of all its details regardless of expense, is in line with the general policy of progressiveness adhered to by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company and in line with the policy of the Company in providing what is best for the general welfare and happiness of those who take part in furthering the promotion of its vast product.

The Factor of Safety of This Is About 1000 to 1

PRODUCTS of engineering are tested as to their safety. For instance, an automobile frame may be constructed so that its factor of safety is, say, 12 to 1. That means that the steel has been tested to twelve times the amount of strain it probably ever will be given.

However, there is no real test of the safety of a picture from a profit standpoint but public opinion. And public opinion has said that the factor of safety for the exhibitor of "The Virgin of Stamboul" is about 1,000 to 1. That means that YOU stand one chance in a thousand to lose. How much longer are you going to wait? Believe the public, you'll make money if you——

That French Finesse

THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY" differed from ninety-nine out of a hundred American-made photoplays in that it was made by a man who knows the elemental motives of men and women and compliments your intelligence by assuming that you, also, know them. Von Stroheim talks to you like a grown-up talking to grown-ups and not like a "big-a, little-a-kindergartener." In other words, "THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY" is sophisticated drama which accounts for its instant and tremendous success.

Maud George

And in this success of sophistication no one has a larger share than MAUD GEORGE, that admirable actress who has the role of "Madame Malot"—the intriguing modiste whose plots come close to ruining three lives.

This typically French character—a sharp business woman, a talented artist and a shrewd manipulator of men and events—MAUD GEORGE, plays with a marvelous French finesse which is a delight to all who see her—and a surprise to those knowing ones who have thought that such a part could be played only by a woman reared in Paris.

View this picture—marvel at its knowledge of human traits and motives—its amazingly accurate detail—but also make ready to see some of the best acting that the screen has known.

SECOND BETTY LETTER

Dear Betty:

Great minds travel in the same direction, for we had already elected Harry M. Berman, General Manager of Exchanges, as chairman of our Luncheon Club when your letter reached me from Buffalo. When I wrote you last, we didn't have a chair to offer him—in fact, when I said our dream was to be realized, I was afraid I'd have to tell you later it was a pipe dream.

However, the election of Mr. Berman settled our problem and I'm delighted to tell you thot it's an established institution, I mean our Luncheon Club, of course, backed by three check books—Mr. Laemmle's, Mr. Cochrane's and Mr. Berman's.

Glad you enjoyed your visit to the Buffalo office—did you try to introduce our new idea to the girls in the exchange? We are banking on YOU doing some good missionary work for us Betty, and if you can convert all the Exchanges to our "Bring Your Lunch" religion, we'll elect you an honorary member.

How should I know why Mr. Chase of Buffalo discarded his whiskers—Perhaps because the price of Marcel waves has gone up. At any rate, he's working like a Trojan to help swell that amount that Mr. Berman wants to surprise Mr. Laemmle with when he returns from Europe, which I believe will be the latter part of this month.

Well, getting back to our Luncheon Club—we held our first committee meeting last Thursday—Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Berman presided, and they looked like a couple of kids out on a lark. Mr. Cochrane opened the meeting with an announcement that the Universal Film Manufacturing would donate the entire eighth floor to the Luncheon Club. One of the girls at the meeting had to ask for smelling salts. This floor covers 2700 square feet and rents for $200 per week.

After Mr. Cochrane had nearly donated the entire works, Mr. Berman asked us whether we wanted a player piano or just a baby grand. Of course, we all voted for the player, and he took out his check book and handed over the cash that'll start the hand organ. Mr. Seigel then walked in and asked Mr. Berman whether or not he should accept a $3200 contract on one of the Big Features, and you'd have screamed Betty if you could have seen H. M. waive it aside. He was bound to stick to player pianos and how to get the best coffee at 7c a cup. Mrs. Berman was present and she's going to help us start a library.

Everybody is wildly enthusiastic over the proposition, from the elevator runners to the shoe black. They tell me that Saturday morning a man asked the proprietor of the cigar stand for a match, and he told him to take the elevator to the eighth floor. He was right too, for there's going to be many a match made through this get together idea.

When the clock strikes twelve, we all march to lunch to the thrill of the jazz. Mrs. Kutner has charge of the entertainment, and someone told Toddy she looked so sweetly domesticated behind the coffee cups, so she takes her place each noon at the table and serves th drinks. These widows—leave it to them.

May Schack has charge of the dancing.

Everything around the office is just about the same, except little improvements here and there for the employees, which you can bet we appreciate.

We've been releasing some peachy pictures—among them "Once to Every Woman"—a prominent New York exhibitor told me there was a fortune in the title alone, and that the picture in his opinion should make a clean sweep.

Went to the dentist with Alice K—— on Friday. You know we've always been puzzled about her age—well, when the dentist removed her bridgework, he remarked that she must have had the work done about the time they built Grant's tomb. You know she claims she's twenty-three—I hate to be cattish, but ????

Miss L in the ——— Department is sporting a brand new chapeau. Must have cost $25 if it cost a cent. Don't see how she does it on her salary, but I guess the Luncheon Club helped her to see her way clear. I saved enough last week to buy myself a new powder puff and some Lingeree. Next week I may be able to afford a box of Mascara.

In my next letter I'll tell you all about the smoking room we're going to fit up for the men—also the rest room for the girls. If you feel like making a donation Betty, don't be shy in mentioning it.

Your Pal,
PEGGY.

Clean-up Promised for Newest Century Comedy

EXHIBITORS who have attended the showings of "Loose Lions," the recent Century Comedy release, predict that this picture will be a "knockout." It is in two reels, and besides featuring so sterling a comedian as Robert Andersen, it has the additional support of pretty Dixie Lamont in the role of the leading lady, and the trained Century lions.

No expense has been spared to make this production a big comedy picture. A good deal of the action takes place in a motion picture studio which assuredly is an interesting background. There are pretty girls galore, the most expert of pie throwers and dodgers, and some really unusual stunts by the huge Century lions. And there are laughs enough to make merry the most confirmed killjoy.

Robert Andersen who is the chief human funmaker in "Loose Lions" is an actor of skilled versatility. He is one of those rare kinds of actors—a real farceur. He can get right down into the spirit of comedy and burlesque and make the most of every situation. When one considers the more serious role which he carried off so remarkably well in "Once to Every Woman" the big Jewel starring Dorothy Phillips, soon to be released, the accomplished bits of burlesque which Andersen performs in "Loose Lions" are all the more remarkable.

To produce a good comedy is one of the most severe tasks to hand over to a director, but William Watson, with the able assistance of the cast, and Chas. Gay, well-known animal trainer, has put over a real winner in "Loose Lions."

International No. 66 Should Interest Former Doughboys

EXCELLENT pictures of the recent big "doughboy reunion" in Cleveland are contained in International News No. 66, released October 1. New cameramen attending the convention of the American Legion "shot" the former warriors in a series of inspiring activities, includng the grand parade in which 20,000 veterans of the Great War marched once again shoulder to shoulder to the strains of the patriotic airs that inspired them to victory two years ago.

No. 66 also shows the first and exclusive pictures of the recent earthquake in Italy, close-ups of the notorious White Sox players indicted for "throwing" the last World's Series, and pictures taken at the funeral of the noted philanthopist, Jacob Schiff.

"Loose Lions"

Two Reel Century Comedy

Featuring

DIXIE LAMONT and ROBERT ANDERSEN

ROBERT, the gambler, had taken his last "nip" before crossing the border from Tia Juana, Mexico, to studio land. He notices a society girl on horseback being mistreated by her riding companion, whom she strikes. Her horse, however, runs off with her, and Robert, getting excited, jumps off the train onto an automobile and gives chase. He makes for the horse and manages to fall off with her. She faints and he revives her, with water from a stream which is filled with whisky due to the fact that revenue agents are pouring intoxicants into the water at the other end of the stream. She becomes intoxicated. The girl was a movie actress and the runaway was not supposed to have been in the picture. The movie director thanks Bob and invites him to visit the studio.

At the studio Bob sees a sign that men are wanted to work with lions; he also sees a man carried out on a stretcher who had done that kind of work. The director endeavors to prevail upon him to take the job.

The picture gets started and Bob sees the girl he loves posing for the film. She is going to be hurled into the lions' den as the story directs. Bob gets frightened when he sees the lions loose. He closes his eyes and when he opens them again the girl has disappeared. He accuses the studio director of having the girl devoured and lets the lions out of the cage. A mad chase follows, but in the end the girl shows up, everything is explained, and they all live happily ever afterwards.

Two Reel Western Drama

CAST

Tim Morgan	Hoot Gibson
Daisy McAlester	Dorothy Woods
Father	James Gibson
James Durbin	Jim Corey

ONE of the favorite sports of Tim Morgan was to keep everyone on edge by his daring shooting—which he did just to keep in practice. No one had the courage to tell Tim what a nuisance his practicing was to the community until Daisy McAlester and her father, in quest of a climate beneficial for his health, happened along during one of Tim's sprees and got in the way of one of his wild shots. Dorothy had the foliage on the top of her hat shot off. When Tim learnt of his latest deed, he lost no time in apologizing, much to the amusement of the recipient, who rather took a fancy to him and his frankness.

Daisy and her father register at the hotel in Prickly Heat, where a recent arrival, James Durbin, is attracted by their somewhat crude methods. He overhears Daisy and her father discuss where to put their worldly possessions for safe keeping, and determines upon a plan to get hold of the money while they are out looking for a ranch to purchase.

On their way to look at a ranch, Daisy and her father are held up by some ruffians who demand the money. Tim, who is practicing his favorite pastime nearby, hears their pleas for help and rushes to their assistance, making prisoners of the thieves. Durbin, who has accompanied Daisy and her father, covers Tim with a gun and makes it appear as if Tim is one of the crooks, inasmuch as he has in his possession the money which he took from the crooks when they were caught. Things look hazy for Tim until the sheriff compares the photo he has in a letter for the arrest of a noted criminal lurking somewhere in the West with the man before him, James Durbin. Quickly noticing the similarity, the sheriff shows Durbin the letter. Durbin confesses his guilt by attempting to gain the upper hand on the sheriff and the crowd. He is soon overpowered and taken to jail.

A few years later we see Tim and Daisy—Tim receiving a severe tongue lashing at the hands of Daisy, who is now his wife, for engaging in his favorite pastime in front of their youngsters.

Barrow's secretary takes the message, but withholds it from Barrows and manages to communicate it to Stanton who immediately sets out with the gang after Elmo and Helen.

In the meantime, Helen has mistaken Jim for Elmo and has thus gotten into his clutches. Coming in with the rest of the gang, Jim is mistaken for Elmo by them, but quickly sets them right. Jim is then attacked by the sheriff and his men who are on the lookout for the gang and is about to squeal Stanton's whereabouts, when Stanton notices from a short distance what is happening and uses his hypnotic influence and makes of Jim a fighting madman so that he cleans up his attackers. But during the struggle Helen escapes.

Helen meets with Elmo, but is doubtful of his identity until Elmo proves it by showing her the part of the disk which he has in his possession. They come upon a forest ranger who is in reality one of the gang, and Elmo entrusts Helen to his safety, telling him to see her safely back to town while he waits for help from Barrows.

Elmo climbs the watchtower overhanging the deep ravine to watch out for help. He is seen by the gang. They surround the foot of the pole with a ring of dynamite. The tower blows up. What happens to Elmo when he crashes from the dizzy height?

"ELMO THE FEARLESS"

Directed by J. P. McGOWAN

The Serial That's Breaking Records Everywhere

Eastern City Welcomes "The Devil's Passkey"

Pittsburgh, Pa., is a big cosmopolitan town, accustomed to the best in everything. Pittsburgh, Pa., does not usually mete out praise where praise is not due, and it is a city that is discriminating in its tastes. Universal was pleased, therefore, when "The Devil's Passkey" found such favor there. The big Von Stroheim feature played at the Olympic Theatre and its run there was remarkably successful. The management was not only pleased with the box office receipts, but with the favorable personal comments made by patrons of the theatre to it after they had witnessed the showing of the picture. An attractive lobby display was used during the run, which is reproduced to the right of this page.

Other big eastern cities continue to send in commendatory comments concerning the picture. Mr. Herbert C. Wales, manager of the Washington, District of Columbia Exchange, received a few days ago the following letter:

"Although I am not in the habit of writing letters or sending wires extolling any pictures, I do feel that I owe it to your company to let you know the wonderful business we have done at the Metropolitan Theatre on our week's run of "The Devil's Passkey."

"Not only has this picture broken all records for this time of the year, but it has been a wonderful success from the standpoint of pleasing our patrons. The comments have all been wonderful and everybody seems to have thoroughly enjoyed the performance."

"I wish you would extend my congratulations to Mr. Erich von Stroheim on this, his masterpiece, and be assured that I am waiting patiently for more pictures of this calibre."

NEW SERIES IS NOW BEING RELEASED BY UNIVERSAL

Universal is now releasing a series of the most engaging and picturesque tabloid photo-plays ever screened—a series of two-reel dramas of the North Western Mounted Police, written and directed by Jacques Jaccard. Jacques Jaccard is a French Canadian and lived for years in that section of Canada where the Mounted Police, with their red breeches and dark blouses, are the principal representatives of the law, so that he is well versed in all the romanticism and spirit of adventure which are associated with the fascinating subject around which these two reelers are woven. Jaccard did this same subject in a larger way in "Under Northern Lights," a five reeler.

The series is built around the character of a fearless leader of one of the most reckless units of the Mounted Police—Sergeant Kirk McLean, six feet, two inches of fighting manhood. Leonard Clapham who impersonates this role, is not a Canadian by birth, but in his native state of Kentucky, he did similar service as a Deputy Marshal, ranging the hill country in quest of moonshiners, counterfeiters and othe law-breakers. The girl who plays the lead in this series is no other than Virginia Faire, who won a Fame and Fortune Contest last year through her remarkable beauty. She was awarded a contract to appear in Universal pictures. She played in a number of short subjects and then took one of the featured leads in "Under Northern Lights." She has never appeared to better advantage than in this series, and she is certainly a delightful little foil for the huge Clapham. Also in the cast of the pictures are Charles Brinley, Frank Staples, Herbert Bethew and Ivar McFadden. Kay Harrison, who scenarized the series, also takes an occasional role.

Jacques Jaccard is no newcomer to the ranks of Universal directors. It was he who made the big Jewel feature, "The Great Air Robbery, featuring the daring Lieutenant Ormer Locklear, who was recently killed while making an ascent for another picture. And Jaccard is now directing a picture tentatively called "The Throwback," in which Frank Mayo will appear and which Jaccard also wrote himself.

These pictures are not to be considered as merely as "fillers" for a program. The stories are excellent; infinite care has been taken in the direction and the cast is a capable, tried and talented one. The background is an unusual one and the atmosphere of the big Canadian forest country has been preserved intact. They deserve to be featured on a program. Indeed Universal considers this series one of the most pleasing and virile groups of short screen dramas ever made.

The Red Rider Series is being released one a week. The first, called "A Son of the North," was released October 4th. The succeeding pictures of the series are "The Girl and the Law," "Big Stakes," "When the Devil Laughed," "The Forest Runners" and "The Timber Wolf."

ELMO LINCOLN
UNDER CRIMSON SKIES
PRINCESS THEATRE TODAY

Princess Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., during the showing of "Under Crimson Skies," featuring Elmo Lincoln.

Jewel Feature Makes Hit With Folks In Milwaukee

THE reproduction on the left will give an idea of how heartily Milwaukeeans wlcomed "Under Crimson Skies," the Jewel featuring the herculean Elmo Lincoln. The picture played at the Princess Theatre, and the lobby was constantly crowded with people waiting for the various performances to end.

Elmo Lincoln has of late appeared in serials because his gigantic frame and his athletic prowess were particularly fitted for that kind of production. However, when Universal was considering the advisability of producing "Under Crimson Skies" it was Lincoln, the serial star, who came to the minds ow everyone as a splendid selection for the hero. But just because Lincoln abandoned the serial temporarily is no reason for thinking that he abandoned his art of "thrilling" audiences, for there are thrills galore in "Under Crimson Skies."

"Under Crimson Skies" enjoyed a successful run in a Broadway theatre in New York. In every large city where it has played, it has met with great success, and there is no doubt in the minds of Universal officials that the success will be duplicated when it reaches the smaller towns.

EARLY RELEASE FOR NEWEST JEWEL ANNOUNCED

R. H. COCHRANE, vice-president of Universal, has just announced the early release of "Once To Every Woman," a Universal-Jewel production starring Dorothy Phillips, and directed by Allen Holubar. It is the last of a series of super-productions made for Universal by Miss Phillips and her husband director.

Begun last winter, many months were taken in its production. Following Miss Phillips' war success, "The Heart of Humanity," and the remarkable picture of enlightenment, "The Right To Happiness," the producers faced a difficult task in making "Once To Every Woman" the superior of the star's former success.

Every facility of the big picture making plant at Universal City was placed at the disposal of Allen Holubar. He was assured that no expense would be spared to make the picture the most remarkable one turned out by Universal. This plan was carried out so extensively that more than $100,000 was spent on sets alone. The most costly of them was the reproduction of the stage, the boxes and the lower floor of the great Metropolitan Opera House of New York.

The story is a simple one, full of homilies and gripping interest. It is the chronicle of a village girl, petted and pampered because of a wonderful voce, whose heart is frozen by ambition and who vruelly neglects her family to chase the bubble of fame. On the threshold of her operatic career she loses her voice.

Her disillusionment, the return to her home and the chastening she undergoes before waking to the meaning of true happiness, is said to afford Miss Phillips the supreme role of her career. There is not an emotion in the range of womanhood that she does not have to portray in "Once To Every Woman."

She first is seen as a care-free school-girl, vivacious and charming. Later she has to portray the part of a young woman forging ahead in her chosen art, and rising to the call of her music teachers. Then she takes the difficult part of a successful prima donna, surrounded with the bounty of success and matching her wits with countless admirers. Finally she is the broken-hearted woman, rich in experience, but with a nature at last attuned to the simple pleasures of small-town existence.

It is said that only Holubar, her husband, could have led Miss Phillips to the dramatic heights she attains in this latest Universal picture. He knows her capabilities and planned every scene to take full advantage of her screen art. She responded wholly to his direction, giving her action a completeness which marks her as one of the great screen actresses of the day.

The story is from Holubar's own pen, and was written especially for Miss Phillips. He built it with an eye to the especial screen accomplishments of his wife. He also helped in writing the scenario, co-operating with Olga Linek Scholl. The action of the story varies from a small American village to Milan, Italy, to the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, and to the picturesque country estates on Long Island.

It is not alone in directing the superb acting of his wife that Holubar is said to have gained success in "Once To Every Woman." The picture contains a series of unusual, picturesque and great scenes. The greatest of these is the depicting of a first night at the Metropolitan Opera House—with all its glory—the colorful stage, the huge orchestra pit, the "golden horseshoe" with its society leaders, the vast audience and even the standees.

In the making of these scenes Universal employed an entire orchestra from Los Angeles, the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, led by Adolph Tandler, formerly of the Metropolitan, and actually produced an entire act of a celebrated opera, with real

Attractive lobby display of Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Ore., for "The Devil's Passkey."

The West Heartily Acclaims Von Stroheim's Masterpiece

NOW comes word from the very farthest west that "The Devil's Passkey" is duplicating the success there that it has had in every eastern city where it has been run.

During the week of September 20th the big Jewel was run at the Rivoli Theatre out in Portland, Oregon, with a success which gratified the management indeed. During each day of the week, attendance was crowded and there was never a lag at all. An attractive lobby display was contrived for the showing, and the picture was always accompanied by the excellent music of the Rivoli concert orchestra.

A picture must be a good picture, indeed, that can run for a solid week at a house with crowded attendance. Numerous houses throughout the country have booked "The Devil's Passkey" for a solid week's showing and box office receipts have not caused the management to regret the step taken. The Von Stroheim masterpiece was run for a week at the Capitol Theatre in New York City, and critics of the newspapers were unanimous in their praises of it. It also ran for a solid week at a number of other large theatres in New York.

HOW "SHIPWRECKED AMONG CANNIBALS" WAS LAUNCHED IN NEW YORK CITY

UNUSUAL methods of exploitation were employed by the Universal Film Mfg. Co., in presenting the Universal-Jewel production, "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals" at the Astor Theatre previous to and during its three weeks' run which began Sunday evening, June 21. The unusual nature of this picture made it possible to employ several stunts which by their very novelty excited a maximum amount of interest.

Fortunately for Universal, the Astor Theatre had finished its regular theatrical season two weeks before the opening date of "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals." This gave Universal opportunity for placing a number of unique and interest compelling advertisements on the front doors of the theatre.

Ten days before the engagement began a series of cards were used in the glass doors in which the facts were brought out that the two men responsible for these pictures had many hazardous nd heroic experiences before they secured the pictures. The first card read as follows:

"On and continuous each day thereafter there will be offered at this theatre the most unexpected and astounding achievement ever recorded by a motion picture camera." And on card number two—"a motion picture conceived of a fearless and vital idea and matured only after months of hazardous sacrifice and unparalleled daring. It could be termed 'God's lowest ebb,' or 'Nature's Crime.' "

Card number three read as follows: "But none of these titles are powerful enough nor do they convey any idea of the greatness of the subject. A title of sufficient importance is now being fitted to the picture and will be announced in the daily papers shortly."

Number four—"The picture is in two thousand scenes, not one of which is staged. The entire enterprise was the result of a shipwreck and the rescue of the two noted cameramen and the subsequent abode in a land strange to the waves of civilization. A land where children's only toys are human skulls, where the bones of a thousand men attest a thousand feasts."

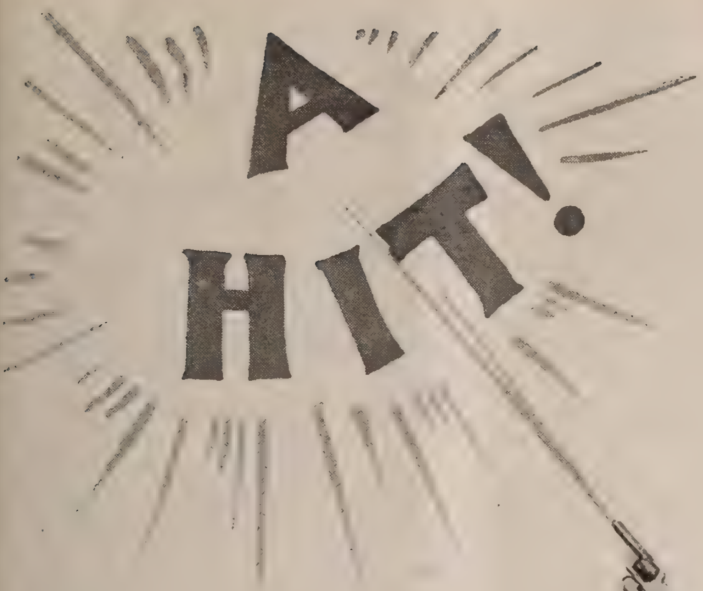
Number five—"Where human flesh is the daily menu, where women's bodies are gashed and slashed to enhance their beauty, where a baby's face looks thirty years old, and where nature offers a living demonsttration of the depths from whence we came."

It can be imagined that the unusual nature of these signs which were used in connection with still photographs caused unusual attention and resulted in thousands of passers-by to read them. After these signs had been displayed for ten days they were changed slightly and a card was placed in the center door announcing that the title which had been selected to adequately describe the pictures was "Shipwrecked Among Cannibals."

Large colored paintings were profusely used in the lobby and above the transom of the theatre. After the picture opened a diary containing about forty cards 22x28 was placed in the lobby. Each card told an incident of the hazardous experiences of the two intrepid cameramen. On one of the first pages of Laemmle-Aler's diary was the following:

"To-day we tried to make approaches to the chief of the tribe, a giant black brute, entirely naked but with a poisoned spear, which he brandished in a threatening position of warning. He did not speak, he merely grunted, and threw back his mighty arm as though to pierce us with his deadly weapon. When we thought of the shark-infested waters behind us, we decided to risk placating this savage with presents."

Similar exploitation stunts were arranged for two other big cities—Chicago and Kansas City.



THAT'S what every exhibitor who sees any episode of this cyclonic chapter-play tells us. And they add that Polo has a following that is gauged only by the capacity of their houses. But the peerless Polo's popularity is only one of the reasons for the tremendous success of this serial. The serial itself is so thoroughly satisfying to fans as to make it one of the biggest money-makers on the market for the exhibitor—meaning YOU.

singers, led by the celebrated Nicholas DeRuiz, so that the first night scenes should have verisimilitude. More than a thousand "extras" were used to fill the theatre. One of Holubar's greatest tasks was the simultaneous direction of the actors on the stage, the musicians, the characters in the boxes and the vast audience, which had to applaud and express other emotions en masse at various times.

In "Once To Every Woman" Miss Phillips is supported by a cast that in any other production could be termed all star. Opposite her is Robert Andersen, the young Danish actor whose sympathetic work in her former successes hade him beloved. Others are Mrs. Margaret Mann, who plays the role of one of the sweetest and appealing mothers the screen has ever seen, Rudolph Valentine as a young Italian nobleman, William Ellingford as the aged father of the ambitious girl, Emily Chichester and Eilinor Field as her two sisters, as well as Mary Wise, Dan Crimmins, Roca Gore, and Frank Elliot in strong roles.

Competent critics who have seen "Once To Every Woman" say that Holubar has obtained in the final scenes of this picture some of the strongest and most touching scenes ever put on the screen. They are guaranteed to bring tears to the eyes of the most unsusceptible photo-play goers.

"On the Great Wall of China"

Marie Carlton	Marie Walcamp
Harlan Keeler	Harland Tucker
Dr. Redding	Wadsworth Harris
King Carson	Otto Lederer

HARLAN, coming on the scene, attempts to drive off Marie's captors. He is finally successful when he is reinforced by aid which Marie's friend had procured. Marie tells Harlan she is on a great mission which she cannot disclose to him and asks him to trust her.

Marie sets out for the great wall of Peking as do Keeler and Redding and Carson. Marie arrives at her destination and enters the cave of the great wall where, as the McVay map had indicated, she finds the skeleton of the professor's servant, and on it the precious lotus petal. Success seems to be coming her way at last!

She emerges from the cave, but is closely pursued by Carson and his thugs. The thugs hurl her from the great wall, and she lands uninjured on the ground, and is picked up by Keeler. A fight starts between Keeler and Carson which Redding, without disclosing his connection with the plot, manages to stop.

Marie sets out for Manila, closely pursued by Keeler, Carson and Redding. She meets Keeler on the boat, and arriving in Manila, sets out with him to find the last petal. Pursued by Carson and his thugs, they engage in a furious battle with them, but make their escape in an automobile. The gang pursues them and in their haste to elude them they run their car down the bank of a river and into the water.

That Artistic Finish

Samuel De Grasse

IT is not an easy matter to place one's finger on one particular point in "The Devil's Passkey" and say, "this is what makes it the tremendous drama it is." But one thing that does impress at first sight is the artistic finish in the acting of Samuel De Grasse.

Mentally and physically, De Grasse portrays with the utmost finish the character of Goodwright, the author who is so cruelly awakened to his wife's indiscretions. With his whole being, he moves in sympathy with the tempo of the drama. Be it repression, he says more with a lifted eyebrow than could be with a hundred words—be it vigorous action, he still is the personification of good breeding.

Finish like this makes itself felt immediately. The sight of De Grasse in a few scenes makes you say that here is an actor whose artistic characterization has seldom been bettered on stage or screen. Yet this performance on the part of Samuel De Grasse is but a single one of the many things that make "The Devil's Passkey" such a towering triumph. You know what a drama it is—have you realized what an attraction it is? Think it over!

A great big picture made up of little things

IT'S the little things in life that count—just as much today as when a battle was lost for want of a horseshoe nail. In this picture, drama and humor and pathos develop from such little things as a dog's curiosity, a baby's innocent part in breaking a jam bottle and a small boy's hankering to see a circus. The human appeal that grows from such simple things has so been caught on the screen as to make this offering one of the best all-around audience pictures Universal has produced in some time. UNIVERSAL has another very human picture in "Pink Tights." Coming so soon after "In Folly's Trail," it would seem that the company is making a sincere effort to blaze a way for a new type of story in pictures. And the producers deserve all the credit in the world for their effort. It is pictures such as these two that touch the vital spot in the spectator.

Reaves Eason, director, has done uncommonly good work in the production of "Pink Tights." He has surrounded the story with a realistic atmosphere which is striking. He has brought out a rare note of comedy in the actions of his little son, Reaves Eason, Jr., who appears as the child of one of the townsfolk. This Junior is remarkably natural and he accomplishes such typically boyish expressions and tricks that he wins instant favor. Again in the serio-comic play between the circus girl and the minister the director has succeeded in sounding a distinctively human note.

The story concerns the coming to a New England town of a one-ring circus of which Mazie, the little girl who ascends in the balloon in pink tights, is the star member. There is a high wind on the day of the ascent and Mazie's parachute lands her on the roof of the house occupied by the Reverend Jonathan Meek. He rescues her and then urges her to stay until dark inasmuch as he is afraid of his reputation if she is seen going from his house.

Meek's flock calls in a body as a surprise that afternoon and the minister trembles at the thought of the girl being discovered there. Eventually she is, but due to her quick wit they are led to believe that Meek was unaware of her presence. But the straight-laced of the town and its gossips are incensed over Mazie and her pink tights and prepare for action against her. This is prevented by a fire in the church. As the building is consumed by the flames it is discovered that a little boy is aloft in the belfry and Mazie rescues him and is seriously hurt herself.

She recovers in the minister's home and wins the hearts of all the townsfolk. And then the circus owner comes back for her and promises her a real home. The minister watches the pair in silence, for Mazie had won his heart.

Gladys Walton is a delight to behold in the principal role. She is pretty and has an exceedingly attractive personality. Jack Perrin is too stilted as the minister .

No Limit to the Appeal of This

BOX OFFICE ANALYSIS FOR THE EXHIBITOR

"Pink Tights" is a picture that deserves the attention of all exhibitors. It has a fine little story, a young star who is certainly a comer, a delightful production, and winds up with a combination physical and heart thrill that puts it over in wonderful style.

No exhibitor will be able to dig up a spectator that won't warm to the actions of the little boy and the very pretty scenes between the minister and the girl from a world entirely foreign to his. The conclusion of the romance also carries a surprise.

In advertising this stress its human quality for this is its strong element. You might also find some way of introducing Gladys Walton, a new star, to your public. She shows such promise that Universal will certainly continue featuring her. Any novel way of presenting her to your public will help future pictures to come as well as this.

THE STORY

MICHAEL PRETHERSON, independently rich and of social position,has a natural aptitude for criminology and his exploits as an amateur detective arouse the wonder of his friends. He is engaged to Moya, daughter of George Flanbaugh, capitalist.

Kate Westhanger, only twenty, of beauty and brains, is the leader of a criminal organization in which her uncle, Colonel Westhanger, is one of the guiding spirits. She has the organizing genius of a Napoleon and is planning the most sensational haul ever attempted in the history of crime—that of holding up a special, burglar-proof train carrying twenty thousand pounds of gold ingots in which Geo. Flanbaugh is interested. To carry out her purpose, she acts as Flanbaugh's secretary, and her identity would have been kept secret had not Pretherson seen her there and disclosed it. To set him off guard Kate goes to his rooms later and tells him she has reformed. She is seen there by Moya and the first breach between Moya and Pretherson starts.

The big robbery is pulled off. It is a success and Kate is elated, but her elation turns to anger when her uncle tells her that he and the gang have had "enough," and that they intend beating it to South America with the gold to live the lives of the lawful. As a bit of revenge, Kate changes the message given to the truckmen and has the gold all sent back to Flanbaugh. She herself is anxious to continue the operations of the gang and her uncle's decision has infuriated her.

Pretherson, seeking to trace the robbery, is caught by the gang. When they discover Kate's treachery they prepare to kill her with him. However, the police, who have been shadowing Pretherson, come in in time, and during the course of the fight and escape most of the gang are killed.

Kate realizes now that she loves Pretherson and all desire for a criminal life has vanished. She wants to go straight. Moya releases Pretherson from the engagement, and Pretherson turns to Kate, whom he really loves, and asks her to be his wife. She accepts happily, but their happiness is almost spoiled by Tommy Carter, only member of the gang who has escaped, and who has always wanted to marry Kate. She has continually repulsed him. Now he comes upon her alone, with murder in his heart, and demands that she marry him, but Pretherson interferes in time and he and Kate are overjoyed when Carter's better nature asserts itself, and he, too, decides to reform.

EVA NOVAK IS A NEW STAR IN THE UNIVERSAL FIRMAMENT

UNIVERSAL has had its appraising eye on Eva Novak for some time. No one who labors in the field of the silent drama long escapes the scrutiny of the Universal "scouts," who are ever on the lookout for promising stellar material. For the public always desires new faces and new stars, and the one who discovers a new screen luminary is almost as fortunate as the one who strikes a vein of rich mineral in mother earth.

When Eva Novak made her first appearance before a camera four years ago, after she left school and came to California with her mother, she attracted the attention of the Universal casting director, and the big studio has been following her progress ever since. She was seen to develop from extra to small parts, then to principal roles, and finally to leading lady for William S. Hart, Tom Mix and other male stars. After she had played the leading feminine roles in "Sierra" and "O'Malley of the Mounted" with Hart, Universal felt that Miss Novak was ripe for stellar honors, and she was summoned to Universal City and offered stardom—the goal of every player in the motion picture world.

Eva Novak is a younger sister of Jane Novak, who has been on the screen several years longer; but Eva, though very fond of her sister, whose dramatic work she has always admired, is an individual personality and may be depended upon to stand and rise by her own merit.

Universal's new star is a fascinating blonde, looking no older than the average high school girl, and possessing a smile that would melt the heart of a food profiteer. In her first starring vehicle, "Wanted At Headquarters," directed by Stuart Paton, she has a role that permits her to exercise both her personality and her skill.

ACTRESS WAS A SLEUTH DURING THE RECENT WAR

IN "Wanted At Headquarters," the stirring photoplay which comes to the ——— Theatre next ———, Agnes Emerson plays the role of Moya Flanbaugh, fiancee of an expert criminologist and amateur detective of crime. In real life, however, Miss Emerson would herself take the role of the sleuth, for she has had considerable experience along similar lines.

Ever since she was a schoolgirl in San Francisco, Miss Emerson has been interested in all sorts of investigations. The fact was known to her friends in the Los Angeles studios after she started in motion pictures. When America entered the war Miss Emerson was requested to devote her talents in behalf of the government, and for over a year she was attached to the U. S. Intelligence Department in San Francisco, where her efforts resulted in the nipping of several alien plots by officials before they could be hatched.

Agnes Emerson was born in Denver, but the family came to California several years after that. An uncle, the late Burt Wesner, being stage director of the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco, it was only natural that the Emerson sisters, Kathleen and Agnes, should go on the stage. After a season in stock, Kathleen Emerson went to Los Angeles to go in pictures. Several months later she was playing under the direction of Lois Weber, at Universal City, in a picture starring Tyrone Powers, when her sister came to visit her. Miss Weber saw Agnes and asked her to play a part; and that is how she made her screen debut.

"Wanted At Headquarters," in which she is now appearing, was written by Edgar Wallace. It was directed by Stuart Paton, and Eva Novak has the stellar role.

ACTOR IS DESCENDED FROM THEATRICAL FAMILY

LEONARD C. SHUMWAY, who has the part in "Wanted At Headquarters" of the millionaire detective who can detect crime but can't prevent it, comes of an old theatrical family. His father was George Shumway and his mother, Ann Nuttall, of the old Salt Lake stock company. He made his worldly debut and his stage debut a few weeks apart in that city. His grandfather, L. J. Nuttall, was a well-known character man who was always proud of the fact that he carried Maude Adams on to the stage when she made her first appearance behind the footlights.

Leonard Shumway has been on the stage all his life—although for six years he has devoted his attention to the newer field of motion pictures. For Lubin he wrote a great many scenarios, and also directed and starred in "The Dragon's Claw." He has appeared in pictures for Universal, Fox, Lasky and Vitagraph. His most recent films are "When Dawn Came" and "A Beggar in Purple," the latter an Edgar Lewis production filmed at Universal City.

In "Wanted At Headquarters" Shumway plays opposite Universal's newest star, Eva Novak, and the two have a number of unusually powerful scenes between them—one as the scion of respectability and the enemy of the lawless—the other as a girl who leads the only life she knows and who matches her wits against the world.

For the benefit of the ladies, be it noted that Shumway is five foot eleven, has blue eyes and light brown hair, is married, likes baseball, and reads Richard Harding Davis and Jack London.

ADVANCE NOTES

"Wanted At Headquarters," the latest Universal photodrama, starring the fascinating Eva Novak and directed by Stuart Paton, is an adaptation by Wallace Clifton of the popular novel of that title by Edgar Wallace. It is the story of a band of the most amazing criminals ever created by a writer of fiction and of a daring young woman who is the brains of the organization. It is coming to the ——— Theatre on ———.

The skill and daring of the great criminals of history from Robin Hood to Jesse James fade into insignificance compared to the fantastic plot to steal an entire train from its tracks between two stations. This incident really occurs in "Wanted At Headquarters," the story by Edgar Wallace which is to be seen at the ——— Theatre next ———. Eva Novak is starring in this feature.

Eva Novak, who has won hosts of admirers in every city and village that boasts of a motion picture theatre by her splendid screen work, most recently as leading woman for William S. Hart, has been elevated to stardom, and is to be seen at the ——— Theatre next ——— in "Wanted At Headquarters," an amazing romance directed by Stuart Paton.

Stuart Paton, a director who has specialized in the spectacular, was selected by Universal to produce "Wanted at Headquarters," a story of crime, intrigue and unusual sentiment, in which Eva Novak is being starred by Universal and which is to be shown at the ——— Theatre next ———. Mr. Paton directed "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea" and just completed "The Hope Diamond Mystery."

A Man's Man In Pictures Women Love

IT is not often you find a romantic hero who has the admiration of men as well as women. But Frank Mayo, appearing only in Universal Special Attractions, is such a star. Men respect and like him for his rugged virility and clean-cut manliness, particularly as shown in "The Red Lane," a picture of romance and adventure in the Great Outdoors. Following this, Mayo made a further and even more distinctive hit with both sexes in "Hitchin' Posts," a delightful drama of old days on the Mississippi. And now he is appearing in a picture that is emphatically pleasing the women—"The Marriage Pit"—a drama of a strong man's battle with dollars and ticker-tape against pride and a cold heart. You, Mr. Exhibitor, can bank on the pulling power of this star. For the good of your box-office book any or all three of these pictures.

THE MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY

A MAGAZINE FOR MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS

Published Weekly by the MOVING PICTURE WEEKLY PUB. CO.
1600 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY

PAUL GULICK, Editor.

(Copyright, 1920, Universal Film Mfg. Co. All Rights Reserved.)

Vol. 11 OCTOBER 23, 1920. No. 10

WHAT WE INTEND TO DO

THE Moving Picture Weekly has for its slogan, "A Magazine for Motion Picture Exhibitors." That has been at the top of our masthead for the last four years. It has always been our endeavor to make the magazine just exactly what that slogan implies, but while the Editor was in Chicago last week at a meeting of exchange managers, some ideas were given to him which put an entirely new conception of what a magazine for motion picture exhibitors should be.

We have endeavored to make Moving Picture Weekly a bulletin to announce the productions in which they were interested, but the exchange men assembled in the Universal office in the Consumers Building in Chicago are anxious that the Moving Picture Weekly shall be a great deal more of a service sheet than it is at the present time, and less of a bulletin of announcements. After the argument was over and the substance of it had sunk in and been digested, we became of the same opinion and decided to put these requests into practice immediately. For that reason, The Moving Picture Weekly from now on, or just as soon as we can turn it about, is going to become a service magazine for the benefit of exhibitors mostly, and a bulletin of announcement of forthcoming films, secondly. Our conception of service will doubtless be broadened somewhat in the experience of putting our theories into practice, but we are going to start off with a number of ideas which can be used by exhibitors in the very next issue of the Weekly and the ones following will be much more on the service side than we have heretofore attempted. Our advertisements are to be written in such a way that they can be used by the exhibitor in his own house and can be lifted bodily from the paper. That means that a great many more of them will have to be line drawn in order that they can be reproduced on newspaper stock. We have had such great success with distributing mats of the line cuts which we have already run in the Weekly that we are intending to broaden out this service into a very definite and practical thing. Any line cut which you see in the Weekly from now on we will be able to supply in mat form, and that very cheaply, to any exhibitor who is running the photoplay which that advertisement advertises. Here is a little trick of the trade which some exhibitors do not know: in case you want a full-page advertisement, take the page from the Weekly which you will desire, to an engraver, and have him make a cut the full size of the newspaper. You will find that the sheet is the same proportion as the newspaper page. This can be done very readily with line cuts, where with half-tones, it cannot be done at all.

Heretofore we have run quite a few examples of how different exhibitors cashed in on various ideas in their exploitation for various films; in fact, we were among the leaders in utilizing these stunts in our magazine, and we virtually coined the expression "putting it over," which is so expressive of the exploitation idea, and which is now being used by a great many other magazines and is on the tip of every exploitation manager's tongue. We will broaden and enlarge this department of The Moving Picture Weekly and in addition to that, we are going to start it in a very short time to serialize a book which was written by an expert on moving picture theatre management, showing every exhibitor just how a theatre can make money by the use of thoroughly modern, up-to-date, practical methods of showmanship. This continued story of motion picture showmanship will be started in one of the early issues in December.

In view of the changes to take place in the Weekly, the Editor would appreciate suggestions or ideas from the thousands of readers of this magazine, looking toward the better execution of the project outlined above.

Will There Be a Star From Your Town?

SUPPOSE you could advertise the fact that a local girl was appearing in a Universal picture at your theatre. Would her relatives, friends, acquaintances and just about everybody else in town spend money to see her on the screen? You know they would.

Such an event is a very good possibility. And it's therefore up to you to write at once to the Dramtic Mirror, 133 West 44th street, New York, and get the particulars of the subscription contest now going on all over the country. Through this contest three girls (possibly all three from your town) will receive as prizes contracts to appear in Universal pictures.

Every girl who puts forth a reasoable effort will win a beautiful string of Nataline pearls. The contest to-day is redounding to the benefit of clever showmen. Thousands of girls are interested. Be a shrewd business man and capitalize on this fact—tie up your theatre with the contest and cash in now and always on the popularity it gives your house.

Another Record Made By International

THE International Film Service has been accomplishing some great feats within the past few months. Not so long ago, it astounded the movie-going public by some marvelous "shots" of the German raider "Moewe" in action, capturing vessel upon vessel of other countries. These pictures taken by Germans were obtained from the German War Records Office, and were the only ones of their kind ever released in this country. A few weeks ago International followed up these marvelous "shots" with the first exclusive moving picture ever taken of the Pope in the Vatican, at the time the delegation of the Knights of Columbus visited him. These "shots" were so remarkable that all the larger theatres throughout the country featured International News on their programs and there was a tremendous run on the issues wherein the "shots" were contained. And now comes the third tremendous achievement of the International Film Service within the past few months!

One minute after noon, on a dread Thursday, some several weeks ago, occurred one of the most fearful explosions of modern times right in the very heart of the New York City financial district, when bombs blew up the building of J. P. Morgan and Company, famous bankers, causing dozens of deaths and hundreds of injuries. One hour and fifty-nine minutes after this explosion, the pictures of the awful wreckage were fully developed and on their way to Denver, Colorado. Surely this was a splendid achievement!

But that is not all to the story. Those self-same prints, mailed at 2 o'clock on Thursday afternoon at the Grand Central Station in New York City, reached Denver, Colorado, in fifty-three hours, or nineteen hours less than the fastest time by the usual fast mail and photos of the explosion were featured in "The Denver Post" on Sunday Morning.

Now The Denver Post is not a Hearst paper, and as such it is not prone to give any Hearst organization big publicity, but this feat of taking the film so fast and shooting the pictures out in a period time so short that the wonder of it is not over yet, was such a big thing in their eyes that they made a big feature of the stunt in their Sunday paper, a reproduction of which accompanies this page.

"How did they do it?" That was the question asked by the chief of the Denver Union terminal, by the editors of "The Denver Post." Assistant Superintendent of Mails of the Denver Postoffice, Thos. J. Buckley, said that no mail train could do it and the mail chiefs knew of no airplane service that the government would have had ready for such an emergency. It was one big mystery. At last a telegram was sent to New York and The International Film Service shot back the solution.

As soon as the blast occurred, the heads of the film service made preparations. They were ready the instant the pictures were developed. The envelopes passed thru the postoffice at the Grand Central station. They were whisked into an airplane. The 'plane pilot put on all the speed his machine could stand. It winged its way westward. Far ahead sped the New York Central fast mail. The airplane raced toward it; it overtook it and transferred the precious films to the mail train.

This is the explanation for one of the greatest feats of the modern movie era. It gives evidence of the fact that International is an organization of the first order in efficiency, system, speed and PROGRESSIVENESS. It never lets the other fellow beat it to it. It is either right there with him or some minutes ahead of him. No one can put anything over on International. And no one ever will according to the staunch organization that is in back of it.

Stunts of this Kind Will Pack 'em In

WHEN the management of the Paramount Theatre, situated at Broad and Hill Streets, Newark, New Jersey, booked the latest Lyons-Moran Special Attraction, "Once a Plumber," a brilliant idea occurred to them.

They examined the classified telephone directory and got the name and address of every plumber not only in the city of Newark, but in outlying districts within a radius of twenty miles from Newark. To these individuals they sent a postal card, like the one reproduced to the left,, and as a result almost every plumber took not only himself, but his nearest and dearest with him to view "Once A Plumber." Of course the idea involved a little additional work and money, but the management of the Paramount Theatre states that they were well repaid for the additional drain on their efforts. There is no patent on this idea and every exhibitor who intends to show "Once A Plumber" is free to use it. It is ideas of this sort, simple yet direct, "peppy" and to the point, that help bring in the coin.

"Once A Plumber" is well deserving of a good exploitation and advertising campaign, for it is a bright, merry and snappy comedy-drama. It is the third of the Lyons-Moran five reel series, and, like the other two, "Everything but the Truth" and "La La, Lucille," it brings convincing testimony that Lyons-Moran are skilled comedians of the first order. It is tastefully produced, excellently acted, and is chuck full of big clean laughs. And in it there are assembled some of the prettiest girls that Universal City has to boast, girls that can act as well as look attractive on the silver sheet. The exhibitor can certainly "cash in" on this picture, especially if it is backed up with original ideas in exploitation such as were so simply and successfully worked out by the management of the Paramount Theatre in Newark.

The "Weekly" takes its First Ride in an Aeroplane

THE newly inaugurated trans-continental air-mail was put to good usage recently by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in connection with the annual convention in Universal City, Cal., of the Southern California Editorial Association, an organization of newspapermen.

One of the paramount interests of the newspapermen at Universal City was the Americanism picture recently produced by Universal for the Americanism Committee, following the movement initiated by Franklin K. Lane, ex-Secretary of the Interior, to utilize the screen in spreading the gospel of sturdy Americanism.

Universal produced a two-reel "western" starring Hoot Gibson, and built by Universal scenarists around the problems met by immigrants to this country. It is called "One Law for All." A special showing of this picture was arranged for the visiting newspapermen.

An issue of "The Moving Picture Weekly," Universal's own publication, is devoted to Hoot Gibson and his work, including the Americanism picture. It was decided to rush copies of the publication to the coast for the convention.

The presses were speeded up and the first 100 copies were rushed to the Long Island aviation field that marks the eastern terminus of the trans-continental air-mail. The weeklies caught the mail-plane which left New York early Friday morning.

Arrangements were made at San Francisco to transfer the Universal mail package at the postal aviation field, and as soon as the government plane slowed up, the package was unloaded and carried to a Universal aero, waiting a few yards away. In this plane, one of those used in Universals' original photo-drama of the transcontinental air service, "The Great Air Robbery," the first picture work of the late Lieut. Ormer Locklear, the weeklies were speeded to Universal City, Cal., just outsid of Los Angeles.

Arriving at the film city, the Universal mail plane landed at the Transcontinental Air Mail station constructed in "The Great Air Robbery" and a few minuntes later the publications were whisked to the projection rooms and distributed to the newspapermen assembled to see the Americanism picture itself.

By using the trans-continental air mail, Universal was able to save one week's time in the delivery of The Moving Picture Weekly to the west coast.

Clever Advertising Used To Exploit Newest Jewel

"ONCE To Every Woman" the big Jewel feature, starring Dorothy Phillips and directed by her talented husband, Allen Holubar, is now being run for a week at a number of the larger houses throughout the country and meeting with the highest of praises everywhere.

Out in Salt Lake City, Utah, the management of the Kinema Theatre booked the big feature for a week. It backed up the showing with some exceedingly clever and extensive advertising in the daily papers and to the right is a reproduction of the advertising as it appeared in the Salt Lake Telegram.

Not alone has the picture a title the snap of which has yet to be beaten, but it has all those excellent qualities which are necessary to make a big picture. Miss Phillips is an actress of the first order who can portray each and every emotion with ease and finesse and who is in addition a beautiful woman. The rest of the cast is flawless and includes Margaret Mann in one of the most beautiful "mother" roles ever portrayed on the screen and that gifted Danish actor, Robert Andersen. And the direction is perfect down to the most minute detail. Holubar put over the big scenes in wonderful style and when one considers that an opera in progress was actually filmed, and that the Metropolitan Opera House was reconstructed detail for detail, the achievement is more to be marveled at.

Universal has recently put over some big pictures. "Blind Husbands," "The Virgin of Stamboul," "The Devil's Passkey." And now comes "Once To Every Woman" which will take its place with these other big Jewels which have made screen history for Universal. For those who have seen it know that it will be viewed with the deepest of interest and delight wherever it is shown and are confident that it will prove one of the big money-makers of the year.

WHAT THEY ARE SAYING ABOUT "ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN"

Universal has received two very interesting letters from members of the staff of Saxe's Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., where "Once To Every Woman" was booked for the week of Sept. 26th. Here they are:

"After reviewing the production, the management of the Alhambra Theatre wishes to express its thanks to you, for the opportunity you offered of booking the Jewel "ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN," for this theatre, to be shown the week of Sept. 26th."

"Being familiar with the other Dorothy Phillips productions, and judging fairly, I believe with confidence, that 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN,' is her BEST. Possessing a plot which is ever appealing to people in all walks of life, the picture is above all, IMPRESSIVE. In this lies the assurance that 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN' will be another UNIVERSAL JEWEL SUCCESS!"

ED. J. WEISFELDT, Manager,
Saxe's Alhambra Theatre,

"My profession deeming it necessary for me to witness a great many photoplays on the screen, I have not formed a habit of commenting on any special production to the producers, disregarding my likes and dislikes entirely."

"However, I feel that I must now make exception to this, and compliment the producers on 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN,' the picture playing at the Alhambra Theatre this week. Being on the ground floor, and witnessing many a motion picture, I believe I am justified in saying that 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN' is by far the very best I have seen so far. And though strange to say, it is really the first picture that has brought tears to my eyes. The Universal has cerainly attained a high standard of production with 'ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN' and I hope to see it continued."

GEORGE MILTON LIPSCHULTZ, Musical Director,
Saxe's Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

THEY'RE STILL COMING IN STRONG!

"I am taking this means of advising you of the successful run we enjoyed with our attraction, 'THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY.' We opened with this feature on Saturday, September 25th, for a four day engagement, playing to capacity houses every day, (against very strong competition), in fact, our fourth days' business was so great that we deemed it advisable to hold it for another day, and found that our fifth days' business was practically as big as the opening.

It is only upon rare ocassion that we think it necessary to write an exchange regarding a production, but we found that 'THE DEVIL'S PASSKEY' was such an extraordinary attraction both from a box office standpoint, and in pleasing qualities, that we feel that it is no more than right that you should know about the record smashing run it enjoyed in our theatre.

Hoping that you and your office receive the success you are entitled to throughout your territory with this production, we beg to remain."

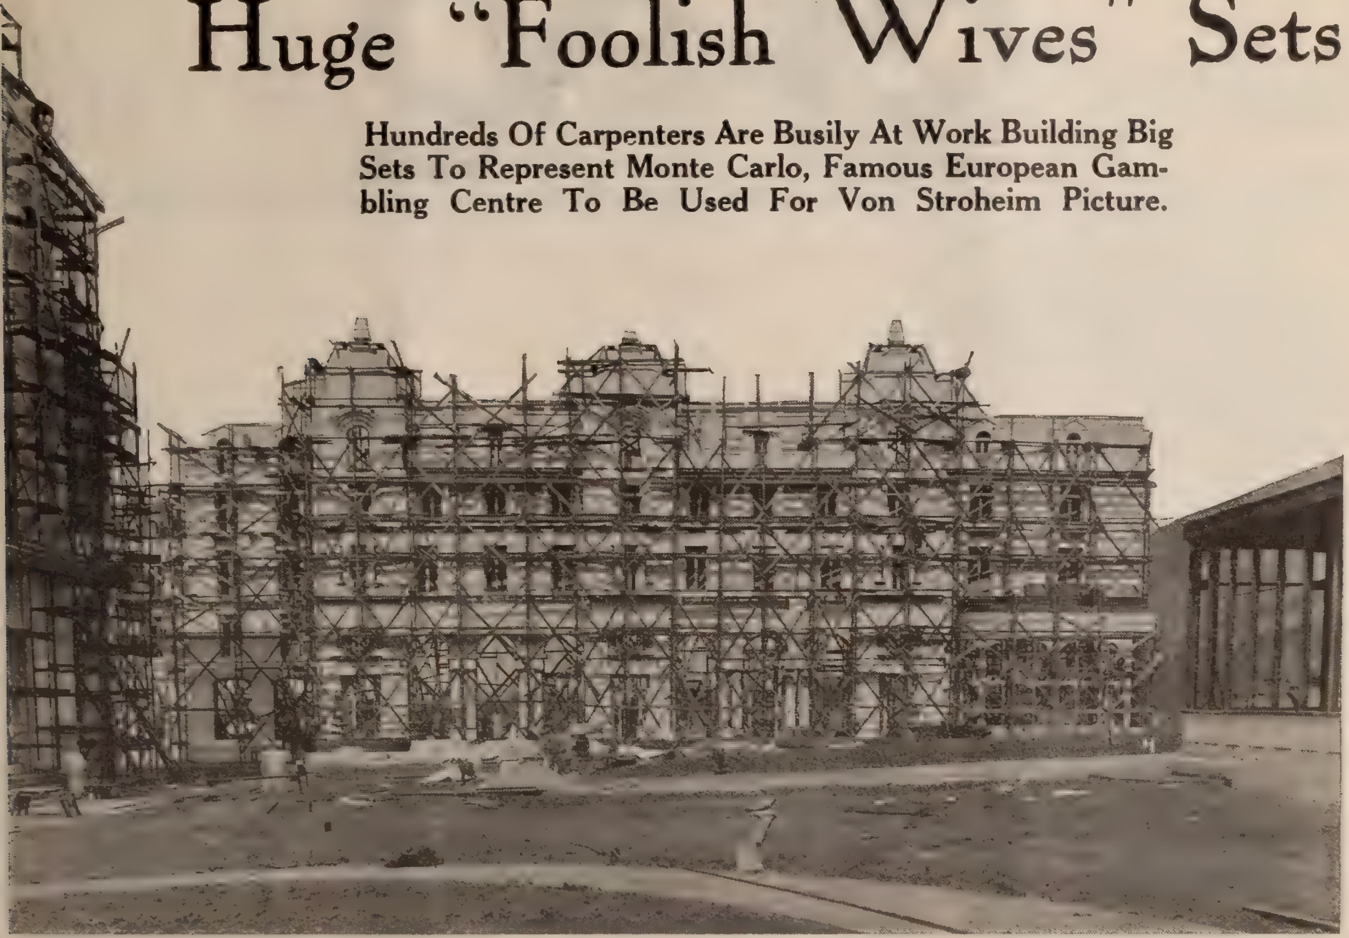
Huge "Foolish Wives" Sets

Hundreds Of Carpenters Are Busily At Work Building Big Sets To Represent Monte Carlo, Famous European Gambling Centre To Be Used For Von Stroheim Picture.



VON STROHEIM is a man of big ideas and tremendous powers of visualization and these are everywhere evident in the preparations constantly under way for the filming of "Foolish Wives," his next big production.

The story of this forthcoming Jewel centers around Monte Carlo, the scene of so much notorious revelry, where life seems often merriest, but where hearts are too often heavy, where beautiful women and wealth throng and where wine and dance and gambling are the order of the day. To reproduce this European fashion center is the most stupendous piece of work ever undertaken by Universal, and when the sets are completed, the sum expended will run well into six figures. Several hundred carpenters are at work daily, as well as plasterers, bricklayers, electricians, painters, interior decorators and gardeners, who are laying out the plazas and parks in exact copy of Monte Carlo. Reproduced above is the Hotel De Paris, 100 feet long and 60 feet high, one of the most notable of the buildings now being constructed. In fact, the whole background of the story is being worked out in so careful and realistic a fashion that it will be difficult to convince those who do not know the history of the production of "Foolish Wives" that it was actually filmed at Universal City and not in Monte Carlo itself. The same was true of "Blind Husbands"; English critics, for example, could scarcely believe that it had not been filmed in the Austrian Tyrol. And when one takes into consideration that "Foolish Wives" is a bigger undertaking than even "Blind Husbands" and "The Devil's Passkey," the genius of the spirit that is guiding it all is the more to be wondered at.

Von Stroheim has gathered about him a cast of actors finished to the very last degree of their art, actors whose past performances have been flawless. They are Rudolphe Christians, an actor of European prominence, late co-star with Lee Kohlmar in "The Secret Gift," the vivacious Mae Busch, the spirited Maude George, the artistic Cesare Gravina, and Von Stroheim himself, a master actor in every respect. He will play the leading role, that of the Count Sergius Aprazin, polished, unscrupulous, clever and gallant, a fascinator of women and a deep-dyed scoundrel. And then there is Marguerite Armstrong, Von Stroheim's "find," a dazzling blonde beauty, comparatively new to the screen, who plays the leading feminine role, and Malveen Polo, the great Eddie's charming little daughter, who makes her screen debut in this production.

"Foolish Wives" is a continental story, a story of intrigue and deception, of wits and women, of weakness and vice, and of love and forgiveness. It is such a story as only a Von Stroheim can depict and from all pre-reports, Von Stroheim is doing it in a masterly fashion. What with two such dazzling successes already to his credit, "Blind Husbands" and "The Devil's Passkey," and with all these reports already coming in of the marvel of the next production, it is small wonder that critics and exhibitors and movie-goers all over the country are awaiting with almost breathless expectation the release of "Foolish Wives."

Great directors are not to be found in great profusion. Thousands of pictures are being filmed yearly, but it is only here and there that a real spark of directorial genius shoots up. Von Stroheim is one of those who possesses the divine spark of genius. He burst upon the movie firmament suddenly, very suddenly, it is true, but he has not only come to stay, he has come to make real movie history. And "Foolish Wives" gives real promise of being something monumental.

An Officer and a Gentleman

Clyde
Fillmore

THAT pleasing poise of Clyde Fillmore, as Captain Rex Strong in "The Devil's Passkey," wins you to him from the very first—and yet Captain Strong is really the only "villain" in the drama. The character, as played by Fillmore, is just another indication of that inimitable Von Stroheim touch that makes his characters human—and therefore liked by you, be their humanness evidenced in human weakness or in strength.

Debonair, breezy, blase—taking the European sophistication as a matter of course, Fillmore is the healthy young American officer to the very life. Women, he knows, love him for his money. He can have any of them for a price.

He has every reason to believe that the wife of the American playwright is "just another woman." Dramatically, he learns otherwise. Subtly, yet powerfully and with fine shading he becomes the gentleman again, building step on step until the "villain" virtually becomes the "hero."

Things like this are rare, but the performance of Fillmore is only one of a hundred reasons why you, too, will realize the tremendous drawing power of this real-life drama. When will you present "The Devil's Passkey?"

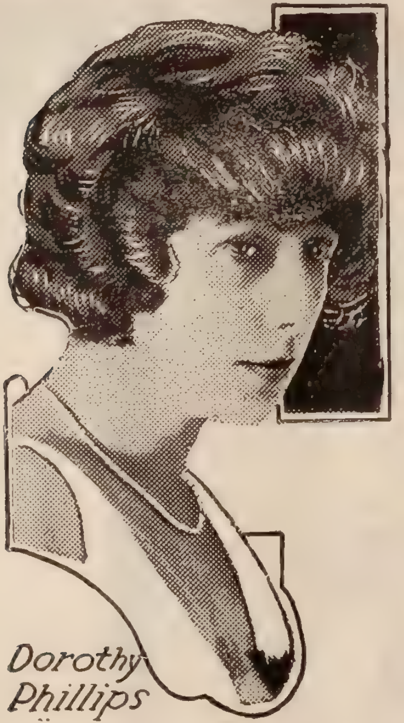
Stories To Be Used In Connection With "Once To Every Woman"



THE STORY CENTERS AROUND A WOMAN' SELFISH AMBITION

AURORA MEREDITH is the eldest daughter of a blacksmith's family, whose home is the village of Pleasanton. Because of her good looks and sweet voice, Aurara is the family pet. The other children give way to her in everything. If any other member of the family is in sore need of new shoes, it is Aurora who gets a pair of high-laced boots to match her new suit, while her sisters and her parents make their own battered footgear do for a while longer.

Phineas Scudder is a village boy for whom the sun rises and sets, according to Aurora's moods. Aurora's attitude toward him is that he is good enough to buy her soda until some one more presentable comes along.

The graduation of her high school is a triumph for Aurora. She is the unchallenged star of the occasion. She is the bright particular luminary of the church choir.

A wealthy New York woman, realizing the promise of a great future in Aurora's vocal performance, offers to send her abroad to have her voice trained. Aurora's jubilant acceptance of the offer is contrasted with the sadness of her folks at parting.

Aurora goes to Milan. Her patroness dies without having made provision for the completion of Aurora's musical education. Her family has strained its financial resources to the breaking point and can help her no further. Intending to repay him with money, Aurora accepts the financial aid of a young Italian. Her first important trial is successful. Juillantimo announces that the time has arrived for the settlement of the debt—and he doesn't desire money. Aurora flees from him and the country.

In New York her voice proves a sensation. She is taken up by society. Recollections of the home folks, including the faithful Phineas, never disturb her. A British nobleman is anxious to marry her. She postpones her consent until after her initial performance of the leading rôle of a new opera.

Juillantimo has followed her to America to collect the debt. She again offers him his money. Juillantimo secrets himself in a box, and as her performance nears its climax, shoots her. He misses, and, turning the revolver on himself, commits suicide.

The shock deprives Aurora of her voice. Soon she learns that without it she is unwelcome in the gatherings of her erstwhile friends in society. Financially and spiritually broken, she returns to her home in Pleasanton. The home folks still regard her as a most wonderful person. Aurora experiences remorse, which becomes too great to be borne when her dying mother beseeches her to quiet her last moments by singing a favorite old song. Aurora, in anguish because of her inability to gratify her mother's last wish, attempts to sing—and DOES. The long rest, the tranquil life have effected a cure.

News of her recovery reaches New York. Her former manager comes to Pleasanton, bringing with him a most advantageous contract for her to sign but Aurora, whose understanding of values has undergone a radical change, tears up the offered contract and, turning, gives her hand to Scudder.

DANISH IDOL STARS WITH DOROTHY PHILLIPS

ROBERT ANDERSEN, called "The Greatest Dane Since Hamlet," supports Dorothy Phillips in the Universal star's epochal success, "Once to Every Woman." He was born in Odense, Denmark, and began his dramatic career on the speaking stage there and in other European countries. Four and a half years ago he came to America and immediately blazed a trail across the screen that is the envy of hundreds of aspiring young photoplayers.

A sympathetic understanding of the complex nature of what is generally known as a "boob" has enabled Andersen to depict the rôle of a rural Romeo with delightful realism. His first big part of that kind was with D. W. Griffith in "Hearts of the World," in which production he depicted the laughable role of "Monsieur Cuckoo." His first work in a photodrama in which Miss Phillips starred was in "The Heart of Humanity," Allen Hoiubar's masterful Universal war-drama.

So capable was Anderson's portrayal of the role of "Paul" in that production that he was again summoned to Universal City when Allen Holubar began productions on "Once to Every Woman."

GRAND OPERA REPRODUCED "IN ONCE TO EVERY WOMAN"

THE Metropolitan Opera House, the world's most famous shrine of music, was duplicated at Universal City for one scene of "Once to Every Woman," Dorothy Phillips's masterpiece of the screen. Allen Holubar, directing Miss Phillips in her Universal productions, declined to use a lesser edifice and ordered the huge auditorium duplicated to its smallest detail.

At a stupendous cost the theatre was built at Universal City in record time, workmen by the hundred working under the supervision of a corps of architects to complete the structure on schedule. For the audience scores of Los Angeles and Santa Barbara society people asked the privilege of appearing in a photodrama with Dorothy Phillips. Instead of the usual personnel of extra photoplayers, the seats were filled by wealthy amateurs of the drama. The costumes worn by the women will arouse interest because of their originality and richness.

An entire chorus was rehearsed, the players singing the score. Nicholas de Ruiz, a noted baritone of the operatic stage, led the chorus and depicted the role of the Chinese Emperor. The Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Adolf Tandler, occupied the orchestra-pit and played the accompaniment. It is a coincidence that Tandler was at one time concert master at the Metropolitan.

In "Once to Every Woman," Dorothy Phillips is said to excel even her work in "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Right to Happiness."

ELMO leaps to the river as the lookout tower crashes to the ground and swims to safety. The gang think he is drowned and go back to town for grappling irons with which to get his body from the water. In the meantime, Helen has been kept prisoner by Gyp in Stanton's canyon house and Gyp prepares to take her to town.

The sheriff has captured Jim and holds him prisoner, believing him implicated in the theft of a farmer's wagon stolen by Stanton's gang. Elmo comes to the sheriff's office, looking for a telephone, and sees Jim there, but refuses to help him get his release, stating that he wants to break Stanton's evil influence over him. He sees Stanton's car whizzing past with Helen in it, a prisoner, and he sets out to save her. Helen is taken to Stanton's house, where Stanton demands of her the formula for her father's lens. Helen disclaims any knowledge of it.

Driven desperate by the thought of Helen's peril, Elmo plans to trick Stanton into believing that he is Jim, but Stanton discovers the ruse when Elmo fails to respond to his hypnotism. He extracts the half of the lens from Elmo and then binds him to a chair attached to a cable which draws him nearer and nearer to a furnace crackling with the deadliest of flames. Will Elmo meet his death in this terrible fashion?

Two Reel Century Comedy

CHARLIE is a tailor of Hokum Alley. So is Peggy. Both are so busy that they find plenty of time to hang around each others' stores. Charlie has a dog named Brownie. Brownie tears the pants of unsuspecting passers-by, thus getting work for Charlie.

Bud comes into Peggy's shop and helps Peggy pay the landlord. Peggy also vamps him to the extent of collecting quite a bit of cash from him and then she and Charlie get married.

One day Brownie brings a baby into the shop. Bud comes in and finds out that Peggy is married to Charlie. He accuses Charlie of being the baby's daddy and when Peggy learns of this supposed infidelity of Charlie's she runs off with Bud, the villain. In the meantime the real father of the child appears on the scene and hands Charlie a reward for saving his young one.

Charlie pursues the villain and his wife, and confronting Bud, says that Bud is the father of the child and that Bud's wife had just come into his store and paid him a reward for saving her child. Peggy gets furious at Bud and returns to Charlie, whom she now feels is the only one truthful to her.

POLO in

"KING OF THE CIRCUS"

Eddie Polo and his new leading lady, Corrine Porter, in "King of the Circus."

Here Comes Eddie, Bigger and Better Than Ever!

"KING of the Circus"—that's the name of it. It is SOME serial, and it gives Eddie Polo SOME part. He was just GREAT in "The Vanishing Dagger," but he is just MARVELOUS in "King of the Circus."

The story of the "King of the Circus" is in a great degree the true story of Eddie's youth and early days in the circus. No expense has been spared to make it as realistic as possible, and actual circus tents and performances throughout the country were filmed for the background. Naturally, then, the story fits the star like a glove; he is perfectly at home in "the big tent," and he performs enough stunts to thrill to the fullest the hearts of all his admirers.

Eddie Polo has had any number of charming girls assist him in the thrilling episodes of his serials, but never has he had one who could outclass in any way Corrine Porter, his new leading lady. Corrine is a beauty, as the picture above gives full evidence of; Corrine has a dandy figure; Corrine can act, and, last and most important of all, Corrine is SOME acrobat, so that she fits right into the serial in first-rate style. Indeed, Corrine's stunts in the picture are in many instances as thrilling and as daring as those of the dauntless Eddie himself. Born in the South, and accustomed to strenuous athletics all her life, Corrine practically stepped from the schoolroom into pictures, and, judging from her performance in "King of the Circus," she is going to stay in pictures. She can ride; she can swim; she does the dizziest of dives with the calmest ease, and she can in addition look as winsome and adorable as the prettiest of girls can look. Then there is Kittoria Beveridge, who plays the circus queen, one of the prettiest ingenues imaginable, whom movegoers will be sure to like, and Charles Fortune, who plays the part of the circus clown, and is really a circus performer himself and a member of the famous Fortune family, performers under the "big tent" for several generations. More than a dozen years ago Eddie Polo and the Fortune brothers played together with the Ringling Brothers' Circus, Eddie being the star acrobatic performer, while the Fortunes were wearing motley and amusing the crowds with their merry antics.

NEXT WEEK

Next week's issue of The Moving Picture Weekly, that of October 30th, 1920, will be a "King of the Circus" number, and will be devoted almost exclusively to Eddie Polo and his big new serial, "King of the Circus," on which he and his company are now busy at work and which gives promise of being one of the serial sensations of the year.

Not only is Polo the principal actor in the serial; he has in addition taken a prominent part in the directing of its thrilling episodes. J. P. McGowan shares the directorial honors with him, and between them they are making a serial which will be sure to cause a sensation when it is released.

Eddie Polo is known all over the face of the globe. And he is popular in the most remote regions where movies have managed to penetrate. Each new serial brings him back bigger and better. He has to his credit "The Broken Coin," "Liberty," "The Bull's Eye," "The Lure of the Circus," and his most recent success, "The Vanishing Dagger," a considerable portion of which was filmed abroad, and now he is coming with his biggest and most serious undertaking, "King of the Circus."
